Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many murders in Crosby were committed by a person well known to the victim in the last five years; and what proportion of the total number of murders in Crosby during this period this represents. [129474]

Ms Blears: The data have been obtained from the homicide index as it stood on 8 October 2002. Figures are subject to revision as cases are dealt with by the police and the courts, or as further information becomes available.

Information is held centrally in the form of homicide (i.e. murder, manslaughter and infanticide) by police force area. Therefore, figures can only be provided for Merseyside Police Force Area as a whole.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the clear-up rate for murders committed in Crosby was in each of the last five years. [129475]

Ms Blears: The data have been obtained from the homicide index as it stood on 8 October 2002. Figures are subject to revision as cases are dealt with by the police and the courts, or as further information becomes available. Revisions to the data will particularly affect the numbers detected in the most recent years as longer cases are solved.

Information is held centrally in the form of homicide (ie murder, manslaughter and infanticide) by police force area. Therefore, figures can be provided only for Merseyside Police Force Area as a whole.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many murders there were in Romford in each of the last 10 years; [128362]

(2) how many burglaries were committed in Romford in each year since 1997; [128402]

(3) if he will make a statement on crime statistics in Romford in (a) 2002 and (b) each of the preceding 10 years; [128382]

(4) how many car thefts there were in (a) Romford and (b) other London boroughs in 2002; [128363]

(5) if he will make a statement on the level of assaults in Romford in 2002; [128372]

(6) how many incidents of arson there were in Romford in (a) 2002 and (b) each of the preceding 10 years; [128377]

(7) if he will make a statement on the level of stabbings in (a) Romford and (b) other London boroughs in 2002; [128378]

(8) how many rape offences there were in (a) Romford and (b) the London borough of Havering in each of the past 10 years. [128404]

Ms Blears: Recorded crime statistics below police force area level are collected on a basic command unit (BCU) basis. Figures at BCU level for England and Wales are available for six key offences for the financial years 1999–2000, 2000–01, 2001–02 and 2002–03. The area of Romford is included within the Metropolitan police BCU of Havering.

The six key offences recorded are violence against the person (total), sexual offences (total), robbery, burglary in a dwelling, theft of a motor vehicle and theft from a vehicle. At BCU level, numbers of murders, assaults, shoplifting , arson, stabbings and rape offences are not available centrally. The available figures are given in the table.

Offence	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02	2002–03[1]

Theft of a motor vehicle	1,749	1,842	1,883	1,654
Theft from a vehicle	2,120	2,143	2,374	2,230

[1] The Metropolitan police introduced the National Crime Recording Standard on 1 April 2002. This may have caused the large increase in violence against the person offences for 2002–03.

Numbers of car thefts (theft of a motor vehicle and theft from a vehicle) for all the basic command units within the London region for 2002–03 are given in the table.

[1] The City of London has a small resident population but provides policing services to between 3–400,000 commuters and visitors each weekday. Performance measures based on crime per 1,000 resident population produce an unrealistic picture of a high level of crime, which does not reflect the likelihood of becoming a victim of crime in the City.

Note:

Crimes recorded by the Metropolitan police's special operations unit have not been included in this table.

Criminal Cases Review Commission

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what upgrades are being made to the hardware and software elements of the CCRC's IT system. [128883]

Paul Goggins: During 2003–04 there will be a variety of upgrades to the hardware to refresh items, such as PCs, which are now up to six years old. The document management system and other key software packages are also being enhanced, but the most important advance is expected to be in the area of knowledge management.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the implication of the Criminal Justice and Sentencing Bill for the work of the Criminal Cases Review Commission. [128885]

Paul Goggins: The aim of the Criminal Justice Bill is to create a fair and balanced criminal justice system that convicts the guilty, acquits the innocent and reduces offending and re-offending. The Government do not believe any of the provisions in the Criminal Justice Bill will result in an increase in miscarriages of justice and will not therefore impact on the work of the Criminal Cases Review Commission.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much funding the CCRC received during the year ending 31 March 2003 from Round 3 of the Invest to Save budget; and what this funding was used for. [128887]

Paul Goggins: The Commission received £82,545 from the Invest to Save initiative in 2002–03 to establish electronic file interchange facilities with the Court of Appeal. Considerable progress was made during 2002–03, with accreditation of the necessary secure x.GSI connection on 1 April 2003.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many days on average it took the Criminal Cases Review Commission to respond to correspondence at (a) Stage 0, (b) Stage 1, (c) Stage 2 Screen and (d) Stage 2 in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [128830]

Paul Goggins: All applications are acknowledged within three days. At all other stages during 2002–03 the Commission responded to 99.5 per cent. of correspondence within 10 working days.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many days on average it takes the Criminal Cases Review Commission to complete reviews at (a) Stage 1, (b) Stage 2 Screen and (c) Stage 2. [128831]

Paul Goggins: Reviews at Stage 1 and at Stage 2 Screen are generally completed within 30 working days of allocation. Reviews at Stage 2/3 averaged 216 days in 2002–03.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many decisions on eligibility the Criminal Cases Review Commission made at Stage 1 during the period 31 March 2002 to 31 March 2003; how many intakes there were; and what reasons underlay the difference between these figures. [128833]

Paul Goggins: The Commission made 911 eligibility decisions at Stage 1 during the period 31 March 2002 to 31 March 2003. The intake in this period was 932. The difference is due to the fact that some eligibility decisions take 30 working days to complete.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases were completed by the Criminal Cases Review Commission in 2002–03 at each stage. [128834]

Paul Goggins: The Commission completed 299 cases at Stage 1,498 at Stage 2 Screen, and 189 at Stage 2/3 in 2002–03.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Investigating Officers were appointed each year by the Criminal Cases Review Commission during the period from 31 March 1997 to 31 March; and how many cases were investigated each year. [128835]

Paul Goggins: 21 Investigating Officers were appointed during the period from 31 March 1997 to 31 March 2003 (four in 1997–98, four in 1998–99, five in 1999–2000, three in 2000–01, three in 2001–02 and two in 2002–03) to investigate 29 cases.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the (a) case intakes, (b) case completions, (c) case in trays and (d) cases under review by the Criminal Cases Review Commission in each year since 31 March 1997 to 31 March 2003. [128836]

Paul Goggins: The Commission started its work with 279 cases (248 of which had been transferred from the Home Office and the Northern Ireland Office and 31 had been received by the Commission prior to its official start). There were over a thousand applications in each of the first two years. In 1999–2000 the case intake reduced to 777 since when it has been steadily building to 932 in 2002–03. Against this, 310 cases were completed in 1997–98, 492 in 1998–99, and about a thousand in each of the four years since.

Initial staffing levels proved insufficient to cope with the demand resulting in a rising number of accumulated cases, which peaked at about 1,600 in mid-1999. The Home Office provided extra resources in 1990–2000, a further increase in 2000–01 and, following the 2000 Spending Review, for each of the three subsequent years. At March 2003 there were 282 cases awaiting review and 365 under review. The Home Office is working with the Commission to ensure that it has sufficient funding to allow the accumulated cases to be minimised whilst coping with its increased case intake. The Commission is endeavouring to balance this achievement with the need to avoid having too many or too few staff.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many referrals were made to (a) the Court of Appeal and (b) the crown court in England by the CCRC in 2002–03. [128838]

Paul Goggins: Of the total of 196 referrals in 2002–03, 179 were to the Court of Appeal, seven to the crown court in England and Wales, and 10 to the Court of Appeal in Northern Ireland.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many CCRC referrals had been determined by the courts of appeal by 31 March 2003; of those determined, what the average time was from referral to judgement; how many convictions have been quashed; how many have been upheld; and how many have been varied since 31 March 1997. [128839]

Paul Goggins: Of 196 referrals, 133 have been determined by the appropriate court of appeal. The average time from referral to judgment was 309 working days. 77 convictions have been quashed, 44 upheld. Two sentences have been upheld and 10 have been varied.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many reapplications were made to the CCRC in each year since 31 March 1997, and what proportion this represents of non-referrals. [128840]

Paul Goggins: Data are available for the last three years. There have been 52 reapplications in 2000–01, 52 in 2001–02 and 79 in 2002–03. These represent 3 per cent. of non-referrals in 2000–01, 4 per cent. in 2001–02 and 8 per cent. in 2002–03.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many reapplications were referred by the CCRC between 2000 and 2003. [128841]

Paul Goggins: During the three-year period 2000–03, eight reapplications were referred by the Criminal Cases Review Commission (CCRC).

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) complainants and (b) complaints there were to the CCRC in 2002–03; and how many cases were involved. [128842]

Paul Goggins: In 2002–03, 73 complainants made a total of 76 complaints in relation to 75 cases.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average time was for the CCRC to (a) acknowledge a complaint and (b) complete an investigation into a complaint in 2002–03. [128843]

Paul Goggins: The average time to acknowledge a complaint in 2002–03 was three working days. The average time to complete an investigation into a complaint was about 29 working days.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints to the CCRC concerned case review actions or decisions in 2002–03; and how many resulted in a change to a case decision. [128844]

Paul Goggins: During 2002–03, 56 complaints concerned case review actions or decisions. None resulted in a change to a case decision.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken to minimise the number of complaints received by the CCRC. [128845]

Paul Goggins: During 2002–03, the Commission carried out a comprehensive audit of the reasons for complaints. The aim was to define changes that could be made to the Commission's processes, communications and training programme to minimise the number of complaints received. Appropriate changes will be implemented during 2003–04.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department of the applications received by the CCRC in 2002–03, how many referred to sexual offences; and how many separate sexual offences were raised. [128846]

Paul Goggins: During 2002–03, 932 applications were received consisting of 1,248 separate offences and 2,038 counts. Of these, indecent assault, rape, and other sexual offences represented 32 per cent. of the offences and 44 per cent. of the counts.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many process improvement projects were active in the CCRC during 2002–03; and what they were concerned with. [128851]

Paul Goggins: During 2002–03, one process improvement project was active. This was concerned with the development of a more integrated training programme for the Commission.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many case review managers (a) were in post, (b) arrived and (c) left the Criminal Cases Review Commission in each year from 31 March 1997 to 31 March 2003; [128852]

(2) what the turnover rate of case review managers in the Criminal Cases Review Commission was in each year since 1997. [128827]

Paul Goggins: The turnover of case review managers (CRMs) is represented in this table:

31 March 1997	9	15	0
31 March 1998	24	8	3
31 March 1999	29	12	5
31 March 2000	36	17	6
31 March 2001	47	9	6
31 March 2002	50	1	8
31 March 2003	43	—	—

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications the Criminal Cases Review Commission received between 31 March 1997 and 31 March 2003; and what the annual intakes to Stage 1 through that period were. [128825]

Paul Goggins: The number of applications was as follows:

	Transfers	New cases to Stage 1	Cumulative
31 March 1997	279	—	279
1997–98	—	1,103	1,382
1998–99	—	1,037	2,419
1999–2000	—	777	3,196
2000–01	—	800	3,996
2002–03	—	932	5,762

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the percentage change was in the number of applications to the Criminal Cases Review Commission in 2002–03 from the previous year. [128826]

Paul Goggins: The number of applications to the Commission was 12 per cent. higher in 2002–03 than in the previous year.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases were (a) awaiting review at each stage and (b) under review at each stage at (i) 31 March, (ii) 31 March 2002, (iii) 31 March 2001 and (iv) 31 March 2000. [128828]

Paul Goggins: The requested information is as follows.

	Stage 1		Stage 2 Screen		Stage 2/3
	In tray	Under review	In tray	Under review	In tray	Under review
31 March 2000	22	25	702	216	190	217
31 March 2001	23	47	281	286	249	178
31 March 2002	17	14	124	149	199	190
31 March 2003	17	35	104	128	161	194

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many referrals were made by the Criminal Cases Review Commission in the 2002–03 year to 31 March; and how many of those referrals have been determined. [128829]

Paul Goggins: The Commission referred 35 cases to the Court of Appeal in 2002–03. Nine of these referrals of convictions have been determined and all have been quashed. One referral against sentence has been abandoned.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many referrals by the CCRC have taken advantage of (a) forensic science techniques, (b) advances in psychiatry and (c) advances in linguistics that have been developed or enhanced since the original proceedings. [128847]

Paul Goggins: It would require disproportionate resources to determine exactly how many of the 196 referrals to March 2003 made any use of some form of advance in the fields of forensic science techniques, psychiatry, or linguistics. This is particularly the case given that such use may not have formed a key element of the referral. In some referrals the Commission has taken direct advantage of these techniques, including the use of DNA and ESDA techniques. For example, in one case in which the defence had advanced a seemingly implausible argument at trial, modern DNA techniques supported it and the conviction was quashed. In another referral, ESDA tests cast doubt on prosecution documents and the conviction was quashed. Advances in forensic psychiatry and linguistics have been applied in several referrals, particularly in relation to the reliability of confessions and other evidence.

Criminal Injuries Compensation

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average turn-around for applications to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority was in the last 12 months; and what percentage were settled within a year. [128360]

Paul Goggins: The Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority advise that in the year ending 31 August 2003, the average time between the date an application was received and the date the applicant was notified of the decision on that application was, for the 72,531 cases so determined, 294 days. In 53,159 cases (73 per cent.) the decision letter was issued within 12 months of receipt of the application.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of complainants in criminal investigations claimed compensation under the Criminal Injuries Compensation scheme in the last 12 months; and what percentage pursued a civil action for damages. [128361]

Paul Goggins: Such information is not recorded centrally.

Mr. Denis Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in each of the last five years criminal courts in England ordered offenders to pay compensation to their victims. [127252]

Paul Goggins: The number of offenders ordered to pay compensation for all offences at all courts, England 1997 to 2001 is as follows:

Year	Offenders ordered to pay compensation[1]
1998	99,198
1999	99,337
2000	98,558
2001	100,910

[1] These data are on the principal offence basis

Statistics for 2002 will be published in December.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken to issue guidelines which prescribe the relationship between the police and personal injury solicitors. [128359]

Paul Goggins: The Government's publication "Complex Child Abuse Investigations: Inter-Agency Issues" refers directly to matters relevant to the disclosure of information by the police to solicitors in historical abuse cases. We feel that this provides sufficient guidance, as there should be no need for any further relationship between the two parties.

Criminal Justice Bill

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what circumstances the Court will waive the double jeopardy rule and allow retrial to take place under the Criminal Justice Bill. [128524]

Paul Goggins: Under the provisions of Part 10 of the Criminal Justice Bill, the Court of Appeal will be able to order a retrial in respect of certain serious offences for which there has previously been an acquittal, where the court is satisfied that there is new and compelling evidence which is relevant tot he guilt of the acquitted person, and that it is in the interests of justice for a retrial to proceed.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what the purpose is of altering the procedures and revising the Codes of Practice as set out in clause 7 of the Criminal Justice Bill; [127669]

(2) what the purposes are of altering the procedures and revising the Codes of Practice as set out in clause 7 of the Criminal Justice Bill. [128624]

Paul Goggins: The purpose of clause 9 (formerly clause 7) is to enable the Codes issued under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 to be updated and reviewed on a more frequent basis to maintain their relevance and accuracy. It provides for a targeted, quicker and less bureaucratic approach and allows the Secretary of State discretion in the process of updating and making changes by applying a level of scrutiny proportionate to the amendment or change. The Home Affairs Select Committee would advise the Secretary of State on the level of Parliamentary scrutiny required in every case.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what the purpose is of the proposal in clause 23 of the Criminal Justice Bill to transfer responsibility for charging from the police to the Crown Prosecution Service; [127670]

(2) what the purposes are of the proposal to transfer responsibility for charging from the Police to the Crown Prosecution Service in Clause 23 and of Schedule 2 of the Criminal Justice Bill. [128626]

Paul Goggins: The purpose of the new arrangements is to enable the police and Crown Prosecution Service to develop a common approach to case preparation, increasing the likelihood that charges will be correct from the outset and facilitating a more efficient and effective court process. When similar arrangements were piloted last year, the results showed improvements in terms of substantially lower discontinuance, more guilty pleas at first hearing and significant falls in cracked and ineffective trials.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether HM Government will adopt the Home Affairs Committee's recommendation on including a time limit in the primary legislation on imposing conditions on bail before charge in the Criminal Justice Bill. [128522]

Paul Goggins: The Government have considered the Home Affairs Committee's recommendation that there should be a limit on the duration of pre-charge police bail in cases referred to the Crown Prosecution Service for a decision as to charge. The Government accept that bail granted to suspects in these circumstances (whether subject to conditions or not) should be for a reasonable period only, but it has decided that it would be appropriate to make this clear in guidance, rather than to include a time limit on the face of the Bill. No statutory restrictions on the duration of police bail exist at present, and the final evaluation report of the charging pilot recommended against imposing such a limit in these cases.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how the Criminal Justice Bill modifies the general exclusionary rule against hearsay evidence. [128617]

Paul Goggins: The main provisions remove the old common law rule against the admission of hearsay evidence, and provide a clear statutory scheme for the admission of such evidence. Under the Bill, statements made out of court will be admissible as evidence in the following circumstances:

the witness is unavailable for a specified reason;

documentary records have been compiled by business;

it is admissible under the common law rules which have been preserved or other statutory provision;

the parties agree that it can go in; or the court gives leave to admit the statement.

In addition, witnesses' previous statements will be more widely admissible at trial as proof of the facts contained within them, including allowing certain witnesses in serious cases to use their video recorded statements in place of their main evidence. Further details are contained in the Explanatory Notes, which have been published to accompany the Bill.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Government will accept the recommendation of the Home Affairs Committee to delete Clause 5 pertaining to detention time limits in the Criminal Justice Bill. [128623]

Paul Goggins: I refer my hon. Friend to the Government Reply to the Second Report from the Home Affairs Committee (column 5787). Extending detention in the way proposed will help impact positively on dealing with serious offences such as street robbery.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Government will accept the recommendation of the Home Affairs Committee to amend Clause 7 of the Criminal Justice Bill in order to preserve the existing procedures in the circumstances of a Code being established for the first time and where revisions of substantial importance or significance are made to the Codes. [128625]

Paul Goggins: Government amendments tabled during debate in the Lords Committee provide for any entirely new PACE Code to be subject to affirmative procedure. We also accept that significant changes to existing Codes may be subject to the same process but that there should be scope to consider the most appropriate procedure to be followed in each case. That is why we have given an undertaking to consult the Home Affairs Select Committee in every case on which procedure should be followed and to be bound by the Committee's advice.

Criminal Justice Boards

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effect of the formation of the local criminal justice boards on the delivery of services. [130495]

Paul Goggins: Local Criminal Justice Boards were launched on 1 April 2003. They are subject to ongoing assessment against targets. Only the first quarter figures for performance are currently available to assess performance.

The Local Boards have been tasked with delivery of the Criminal Justice System Public Service Agreement targets. Their key priorities are to increase the number of crimes for which an offender is brought to justice and to improve the level of public confidence in the criminal justice system. Additionally they have targets to reduce the number of ineffective trials, ensure the Persistent Young Offender pledge is met and improve timeliness. Where applicable, Local Boards have targets to reduce street crime.

Each Local Board has set out in delivery plans what their precise targets are and how they intend to achieve them. Progress against these plans is monitored and appropriate feedback and support is given. Local Boards have recently completed and received feedback on their first quarter self assessment.

Additionally the National Criminal Justice Board, at its monthly meetings, monitors the overall performance of Local Boards. Members of the Board—Ministers and Senior Officials—visit Local Areas on a regular basis.

Criminal Proceedings

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has (a) to introduce a national protocol for the disclosure of third party material in criminal proceedings and (b) to implement Lord Justice Auld's recommendations on disclosure. [128355]

Paul Goggins: Work on a model national protocol between the Crown Prosecution Service (CPS), police and local authorities on the exchange of information in the investigation and prosecution of child abuse cases has been completed. I understand that the CPS Policy Directorate is hoping to issue the model protocol to local CPS areas, police and local authorities in the near future.

Sir Robin Auld's report of his Review of the Criminal Courts of England and Wales made a number of recommendations on the law on disclosure. The Government's response was published in the Annex to the White Paper, "Justice for All" (column 5563).

Sir Robin's recommendation that there should be a single disclosure test to replace the present two tests is included in the Criminal Justice Bill, currently being considered by the House of Lords. His other recommendations for improving prosecution disclosure were considered in the context of the joint CPS/Police disclosure project. Revised Joint Operational Instructions were issued to the police and CPS in December 2002 and became fully operational in June 2003. The Government is considering how best to take forward Sir Robin Auld's recommendation that consideration should be given to a new statutory scheme for third party disclosure, in the light of the work on the model protocol.

Custodial Sentences

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the deterrent effect of the length of a custodial sentence. [128547]

Paul Goggins: It is extremely difficult to measure the deterrent effect of sentencing separately from its other effects. Apart from serving as punishment, sentences can impact on crime in a number of ways, through incapacitation, reform and rehabilitation, as well as the deterrent effect. Reconviction rates, for example, are lower for those who serve longer terms of imprisonment than those who serve shorter terms, but this reflects a number of factors and the contribution of deterrence cannot be readily isolated.

In 1999, the Home Office's Research, Development and Statistics Directorate commissioned the University of Cambridge to review all the recent research looking at the impact of sentence severity on deterrence. That study[1] concluded that the limited available evidence in this area suggests that generally the connection between variations in sentence severity and deterrent effect is not direct or strong. Nevertheless the availability (and severity) of punishment does appear to have a general deterrent effect for some classes of potential offenders, whose choice of whether to offend is influenced by their perception of the risks of being apprehended and punished. This suggests that known penal threats can have a deterrent effect.

Custody Plus Scheme

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the proposed increase in magistrates' sentencing powers will be implemented before the Custody plus scheme is rolled out. [128618]

Paul Goggins: Final decisions on the timing of the reforms in the Criminal Justice Bill have not yet been made. It is likely that we will introduce elements of the sentencing reforms in phases, to ensure that they are introduced without too much disruption, and to enable the Prison Service and the National Probation Service to reach the capacity necessary to implement them successfully.

Custody plus in particular will create an additional caseload for the probation service, which will need to be well planned for.

Our decision on timing will also take into account the potential benefits of linking the increase in magistrates' sentencing powers with the new arrangements for allocation and transfer of cases between magistrates and the Crown court, in Part 6 of the Bill, which we may wish to implement in advance of custody plus.

Gangs

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures have been taken since 1997 to address problems arising from gang culture; and what proposals he has to combat gang violence. [128095]

Paul Goggins: We are taking action to deal with gang-related offending where this is a problem. Initiatives such as the Manchester Multi-Agency Gang Strategy and similar community-based programmes in other areas use a multi-agency approach to deliver interventions targeted at gangs, gang culture and associated offending, while police operations, such as Operation Trident in London, are tackling the association between gang culture and gun crime.

We are also working to prevent young people's problematic involvement in gangs in the first place, in areas where this is an issue. For example, the Youth Inclusion Programme and Safer Schools Partnerships target those young people most at risk of offending to help them avoid problematic behaviours, including gang membership. And the new Positive Activities for Young People programme provides constructive diversionary activities during the school holidays for targeted at risk young people.

Jury Intimidation

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the level of jury intimidation in the United Kingdom. [128681]

Paul Goggins: The Crown Prosecution Service and Court Service do not maintain records of the numbers of cases in which jury interference occurs. However, each year there are instances of actual or feared jury interference which necessitate both a range of jury protection measures and the termination of trials before the jury has been able to reach a verdict. In a small number of cases which present a very serious risk of intimidation, the court will order 24-hour police protection for the jury. In 2000, the cost to the Metropolitan Police of such protection was £4.3 million; in 2001, £5.1 million.

The Government have included proposals in the Criminal Justice Bill currently before Parliament for a trial on indictment in the Crown Court to be conducted without a jury where there is a danger of jury tampering, or continued without a jury where the jury has been discharged because of jury tampering. The Government believe that these measures will provide a strong and effective disincentive to jury tampering.

Police Custody

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in (1) what circumstances it will be necessary to impose conditions before charge to ensure that a person accused of a crime (a) surrenders to custody, (b) does not commit an offence while on bail and (c) does not interfere with witnesses or otherwise obstruct the course of justice, whether in relation to himself or herself or another person; [127674]

(2) what guidance he intends to issue on the situations in which it is necessary to impose conditions before charge to secure that a person accused of a crime (a) surrenders to custody, (b) does not commit an offence while on bail and (c) does not interfere with witnesses or otherwise obstruct the course of justice whether in relation to himself or another person, under the proposals in the Criminal Justice Bill. [128630]

Paul Goggins: When a custody officer releases a suspect under the new section 37(7)(a) of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 for the purpose of enabling the Crown Prosecution Service to make a decision as to charge, it will be for to him or her to determine in the usual way whether to impose bail conditions in accordance with section 3 of the Bail Act 1976. No special guidance will be required as to the circumstances in which conditions would be appropriate.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long a suspect can be detained before charge for (a) non-serious arrestable offences and (b) serious arrestable offences. [128651]

Paul Goggins: Section 41 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 provides that an arrested person shall not be kept in detention for more than 24 hours before charge. Section 42 provides that if the person is under arrest for a serious arrestable offence, he may be detained up to a maximum of 36 hours on the authorisation of a superintendent or above. Section 43 provides that further detention up to a maximum period of 96 hours must be authorised on application to a magistrate.

Probation Service

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reason the pay negotiations for the National Probation Service were not concluded by 1 April; when the negotiations will begin; whether a similar timetable will be adopted in 2004; and if he will make a statement. [128346]

Paul Goggins: The pay negotiations for the National Probation Service (NPS) were not concluded by 1 April 2003 because of the need to obtain agreement to the pay remit by my right hon. Friend, the Chief Secretary to the Treasury (Paul Boateng). The remit was not agreed until 17 July. A pay offer was then made to the Trade Unions on 22 July and this is now subject to an acceptance ballot of Trade Union members. Union leaders have recommended the offer to their members.

It is not intended that a similar timetable will be adopted for 2004. This is because the National Probation Directorate, in conjunction with the Probation Boards' Association (the employers' organisation), is currently negotiating with the Trade Unions a new pay and grading system for the National Probation Service. If agreement can be reached, it is planned that there will be a two-year pay settlement covering the years 2004–05 and 2005–06.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons the National Probation Service required a pay remit before their pay negotiations could begin this year; when the remit will be completed; why it could not be completed in time for the pay negotiations to be completed by 1 April; whether a pay remit will be an annual requirement; and if he will make a statement. [128347]

Paul Goggins: When the National Probation Service (NPS) was established in April 2001 the Probation Service moved from being part funded by the local authorities and the Home Office to being solely funded by the Home Office. This change in funding made it appropriate, as with other public services, that the NPS was required to submit its pay remit for approval by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury. This arrangement became fully operative for the first time for the 2003–04 pay settlement. Treasury rules require that employers cannot begin pay negotiations with the Trade Unions until the Treasury has approved the remit.

The Chief Secretary agreed the NPS remit on 17 July and a pay offer was made to the Trade Unions on 22 July.

The reason why the negotiations on the NPS pay settlement did not begin until July relates to the extended timetable for clearance of remits through Ministers and the Treasury. Coupled with this is a complex process of ensuring that the proposed settlement is affordable by the NPS and conforms to public sector pay policy. These factors meant that it was not possible for the NPS to meet the 1 April settlement date. It should be borne in mind that a settlement, once agreed, is backdated to the relevant settlement date.

It is not intended that a similar timetable will be adopted for 2004–05. This is because a new pay and grading system is currently planned for the NPS and a two-year remit will be sought well in advance from the Treasury to cover the years 2004–05 and 2005–06. There should therefore be no repetition of this year's delay.

Sexual Offences

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long the maximum penalty is for those convicted of gross indecency. [128635]

Paul Goggins: The maximum sentence for the offence of Indecency between Men (section 13 of the Sexual Offences Act 1956) is, on indictment, dependent on the ages of those involved. If the offence is committed by a man over the age of 21 with a man under the age of 18, it carries a maximum penalty of five years imprisonment. Otherwise it carries a maximum penalty of two years imprisonment. On summary conviction the offence carries a penalty of six months imprisonment, or a fine, or both.

Indecency between men is the official name for the offence colloquially known as Gross Indecency.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Government plans to (a) repeal gross indecency offences and (b) include provision regarding sexual activity in public toilets under the Sexual Offences Bill. [128633]

Paul Goggins: The Sexual Offences Bill provides for the repeal of section 13 of the Sexual Offences Act 1956 which is the offence of "indecency between men not in private", colloquially known as "gross indecency" (see schedule 5 of the Bill). The Bill also provides for an offence of "sexual activity in a public lavatory" (see clause 67).

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what legislation the police may use to tackle the problem of sexual activity in toilets. [128634]

Paul Goggins: Currently, sexual activity in toilets could be dealt with under section 13 of the Sexual Offences Act 1956 (indecency between men not in private), section 5 of the Public Order Act 1986 which deals with behaviour likely to cause harassment, alarm or distress and the common law offence of "outraging public decency". There is provision in the Sexual Offences Bill for the repeal of section 13 of the Sexual Offences Act 1956 but a new offence of "sexual activity in a public lavatory" is included at clause 67.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Government will adopt the proposal of the Home Affairs Committee to extend the statutory reporting restrictions, which preserve the anonymity of victims of sexual offences, to persons accused of those offences. [128620]

Paul Goggins: The Government have noted the findings of the Home Affairs Select Committee (HASC), but believe there should be no distinction drawn between those accused of sex offences and other, arguably more heinous crimes, such as murder. However, we acknowledge that some media reporting of suspects' details, prior to charge, can be severely distressing and damaging where charges are not then brought, and believe that informed and strengthened self-regulatory guidance issued by the police and the media, to prevent such reporting, is preferable to legislation. Discussions are already in hand to ensure the relevant guidance is strengthened.

Young Offenders

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on performance against the 71 day target for dealing with persistent young offenders. [128717]

Paul Goggins: The average time from arrest to sentence for persistent young offenders (PYOs) in England and Wales was 64 days for the second quarter of 2002—the eighth consecutive quarter at or below the 71 day target.

This is an excellent achievement by all the Criminal Justice Agencies. It is a vital part of the Government's reforms that people should have confidence in the Criminal Justice System, and the Government are very pleased that the target is being met so.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the funding given to the initiatives in the London Borough of Havering to discourage young offenders from re-offending. [128381]

Paul Goggins: The Havering Youth Offending Team (YOT) budget for 2003–04 which has been proposed to the Borough Council is £792,315. This covers a wide range of work with juvenile offenders including community supervision and interventions designed to prevent re-offending. The local Probation Service carries out similar work with some juveniles and with young adult offenders.

Child Abuse

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines govern the conduct of police investigations and subsequent prosecution proceedings in care home abuse cases. [128391]

Paul Goggins: The Government's publication "Complex Child Abuse Investigations: Inter-Agency Issues" and the Association of Chief Police Officers' Senior Investigating Officers Handbook both cover the conduct of police investigations into complex historical abuse cases. This is in addition to more general guidelines in the Criminal Procedure and Investigations Act 1996 and accompanying code and the Crown Prosecution Service code for Crown prosecutors.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Government will take steps to encourage early consultation on the conduct and direction of investigations between the Police and the Crown Prosecution Service in cases of abuse in children's homes. [128393]

Paul Goggins: These steps have already been taken. The Government issued inter-agency guidance on complex child abuse investigations in June 2002. The guidance stresses the need to ensure that the Crown Prosecution Service are involved at an early stage as appropriate, while noting that they should not be involved in operational decisions about the conduct of an investigation.

This approach is further supported by the guidance in the Association of Chief Police Officers' Senior Investigating Officers Handbook.

Criminal Records Bureau

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the Criminal Records Bureau's end of year deficit on the financial forecast set out in Annex A of the CRB Corporate Business Plan; how this compares to the original financial forecast; and when he expects the agency to break even. [131201]

Paul Goggins: It is currently estimated that the Criminal Records Bureau deficit for the year to 31 March 2004 will be £18.8 million. The original plan, which assumed a significantly higher volume of applications, was for the Criminal Records Bureau to make a surplus of £1.8 million in the year. The Criminal Records Bureau is currently projected to break even in the year to 31 March 2006.

Evidence Collection

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he has taken to ensure that evidence presented in UK courts has not been obtained under duress. [131287]

Paul Goggins: It is for the trial judge to decide whether a particular piece of evidence should be admitted and in making that decision he must adhere to the requirements of the law. In England and Wales, criminal courts have a range of powers to prevent the admission of improperly obtained evidence. In particular:

Section 76(2) of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 (PACE) prevents the prosecution relying on confession evidence where it may have been obtained by oppression of the person who made it or in consequence of anything said or done which, in the circumstances, was likely to render a resulting confession unreliable. Where the defence contends that this may be the case it is up to the prosecution to show beyond reasonable doubt that this is not the case. Section 76(3) also permits the court to require the prosecution to prove beyond reasonable doubt that the confession was not so obtained.

The Criminal Justice Bill provides for similar statutory protection where the confession is sought to be adduced by a co-defendant.

Judges also have discretion under section 78 of PACE to exclude evidence on which the prosecution propose to rely if it appears to the court that the admission of the evidence would have such an adverse effect on the fairness of the proceedings that the court ought not to admit it. When considering this discretion the court is to have regard for all the circumstances of the case, including the circumstances in which the evidence was obtained.

National Probation Directorate

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the outcome of the research into the completion and re-offending rates arising from the Think First pilots commissioned by the National Probation Directorate, will be published. [131166]

Paul Goggins: The findings will be made public as soon as practicable after the research has been received and approved by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary.

Parenting Orders

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effect of the use to date of parenting orders. [130503]

Paul Goggins: The Policy Research Bureau's evaluation of the parenting programme sponsored by the Youth Justice Board was published in September 2002. It found a very positive response from parents on Parenting Orders as well as voluntary participants, and improved parenting skills. In the year following counselling and guidance, offences by their children fell by 50 per cent.

Vulnerable Detainees

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how the terms (a) vulnerable and (b) difficult group are defined within his Department. [131350]

Paul Goggins: A mentally vulnerable detainee is defined for the purposes of the Codes of Practice under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 (PACE) as "any detainee who, because of their mental state or capacity may not understand the significance of what is said, of questions or of their replies". (Code C, Guidance Note 1G). The PACE Codes make specific provision for detainees who are mentally disordered or mentally vulnerable to receive the support of an appropriate adult during their time in police custody (Code C 1.7). Appropriate adults have an important role to play in the custody environment by ensuring that the detained person whom they are assisting understands what is happening to them and why.

Although the term vulnerable is not explicitly applied to juvenile detainees, they are nevertheless regarded as a vulnerable group and PACE Code C requires that they similarly receive the support of an appropriate adult (Code C 1.7).

Section 16 of the Youth Justice and Criminal Evidence Act 1999 defines a group of witnesses in criminal proceedings (other than the accused) who may be eligible for special measures assistance on grounds of age or incapacity. This group is often referred to as vulnerable witnesses.

I am not aware of a specific definition for the term difficult group.

Tagging

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the cost is of tagging an offender (a) under and (b) over the age of 18, from the time the tag and equipment is installed up to the lawful removal of the tag. [131168]

Paul Goggins: In the financial year 2002–03, a total of 37,898 persons were made subject to electronic monitoring at a total cost of £63,448,638, resulting in an average cost of £1,674 each. Total and average cost figures are not available for those aged under or over the age of 18 separately. This is because the pricing regime for electronic monitoring is based on the type of scheme rather than the age of the person subject to electronic monitoring, and the different schemes have different age boundaries.

HEALTH

Seized Food Products

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to provide environmental health officers with the power to issue destruction orders on seized food products. [128655]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Local authority authorised officers have existing general powers to seize food products and take them before a magistrate to have them destroyed. They also have specific powers to seize and destroy illegally imported food products of animal origin.

There are no plans to change these arrangements.

"Achieving the NHS Plan"

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the Audit Commission's report, "Achieving the NHS Plan". [130165]

Mr. Hutton: At the time the report was published we welcomed its positive overall assessment of progress. The National Health Service has moved forward since the report's publication with widespread good progress continuing to be made against the NHS Plan.

Alzheimer's Disease

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from patients groups regarding drug therapies for Alzheimer's disease patients. [129521]

Dr. Ladyman: The Government have received a number of representations about the availability of the three drugs which the National Institute for Clinical Excellence(NICE) has recommended for use for people with mild to moderate Alzheimer's disease. These drugs should be available on the national health service to all people who meet NICE'S criteria. Where there are any problems with accessing the drugs, this should be brought to the attention of the relevant primary care trust.

There have also been a number of representations about memantine, a drug licensed for moderate to severe Alzheimer's disease, which is being appraised by NICE in the eighth wave of its work. When considering the funding of any treatment currently being appraised by NICE, or where no appraisal has been commissioned, funding authorities are expected to use their existing prescribing arrangements and consider the evidence available to them on the clinical effectiveness of the treatment.

Asbestos

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent by his Department and its agencies on (a) asbestos surveys and (b) the management and removal of asbestos since 1 January 2001; and what budget is available to (i) commission asbestos surveys and (ii) manage and remove asbestos from buildings in (A) 2003 and (B) 2004. [130920]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Asbestos surveys and its management are generally included within normal routine maintenance and are not normally separately identifiable. However, using those charges that are identifiable, in the period from January 2001 to date, the Department, it's executive agencies and executive non-departmental public bodies have spent £119,000 on asbestos surveys and £794,000 on the management and removal of asbestos.

For the vast majority of departmental accommodation, the cost of future surveys and on-going management of asbestos is included within general building maintenance budgets and they are not separately identifiable. The information where costs are separately identifiable is:

Department of Health headquarters (London)—asbestos management budgets of £403,000 for 2003–04 and £600,000 for 2004–05 have been allocated.

National Institute for Biological Standards and Control—asbestos management budget of £110,000 for 2004–05.

Health Protection Agency—asbestos management budgets of £35,000 for 2003–04 and £70,000 for 2004–05.

Asthma

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much funding he gave to the National Asthma Campaign for research into the causes of asthma in the last two years. [131160]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Department does not allocate funds directly to charities for research. The Department funds research to support policy and the delivery of effective practice in the national health service. Research funds are provided to research contractors on the basis of individual proposals. The Department also provides support to NHS trusts to allow work funded by others such as the research councils, charities and other funders to be conducted within the NHS. The Department is funding research on air pollution and asthma and a project on the effect of a low allergen indoor environment on exacerbations of asthma.

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that results of research commissioned by the Department into asthma are cross-referenced for scientific inquiry and international studies. [131161]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Department encourages publication of scientifically robust results arising from its commissioned research relating to asthma. Publication is normally in peer reviewed journals indexed on standard bibliographic databases.

Breast Cancer

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the use of proteomics to improve the accuracy of breast cancer diagnosis. [127434]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government welcome any new technology that would improve the accuracy of breast cancer diagnosis. Before any new technology is introduced we must be sure that it is safe and effective and that quality standards can be maintained.

The use of proteomics for breast cancer diagnosis is a new technique and large-scale studies have not taken place. If these studies prove proteomics to be effective, then the technique may be referred to the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE). The use of the technique in the national health service will be based on recommendations by NICE.

Cancelled Operations

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cancelled operations there were in each NHS trust in the first quarter of 2003–04; and what percentage of all operations this represented in each trust for that quarter. [131018]

Mr. Hutton: Data on the number of operations cancelled by the hospital for non-clinical reasons at the last minute (i.e. on the day patients are due to arrive, after arrival in hospital, or on the day of their operation) and the percentage of operations cancelled "at the last minute', as a proportion of all general and acute elective activity during the first quarter of 2003–04, have been placed in the Library.

Care Homes

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with representatives of the care industry to overcome the funding problems behind the proposal of the Criminal Records Bureau to introduce full record checks for new staff of care homes prior to their employment. [131323]

Dr. Ladyman: I met with representatives from the National Care Homes Association on 24 September to discuss their concerns about difficulties care homes face when Criminal Records Bureau (CRB) checks are delayed. Further meetings with officials have also been arranged.

As the independent regulator, The National Care Standards Commission (NCSC) has the responsibility to ensure care homes meet all their statutory requirements. The NCSC has stated clearly that it will continue to exercise its powers wisely and where CRB clearances are not in place will apply its discretion on the use of its enforcement powers on a case-by-case basis.

The NCSC issued a press release on 22 September, setting out its approach to CRB checks for care home staff. A copy is available on its website at www.carestandards.org.uk.

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many new regulations have been imposed on the care home sector, and at what cost, since 1997. [131841]

Dr. Ladyman: The care home sector has long been subject to regulation. The regulations introduced under the Care Standards Act 2000 are based on the regulations under the Registered Homes Act 1984 and establish a more consistent and coherent and regulatory framework which care home providers and others had been calling for.

The regulations introduced under the Care Standards Act which affect care homes are:

The Care Homes Regulations 2001.

The Children's Homes Regulations 2001.

The National Care Standards Commission (Fees and Frequency of Inspections) Regulations 2001.

The National Care Standards Commission (Registration) Regulations 2001.

The estimated costs of implementing these regulations are set out in the relevant regulatory impact assessments (RIAs), which are available on the Department's website at www.doh.gov.uk/regulatoryimpact/index.htm.

It is difficult to give a precise figure for the cost of implementing these regulations, given the lack of reliable detailed information and the fact that not all care homes will be affected equally, but in the case of the Care Homes Regulations and the associated national minimum standards, the RIA estimated an overall cost of £150 million spread over five years. However, these costs will have been reduced for pre-existing care homes, following the decision in February 2003 to relax certain physical environment standards relating to them.

We anticipate that almost all of the cost of meeting the regulations will be passed on to the commissioners of care, in most cases the relevant local authority social services department. To ensure that local authorities have the resources they need to purchase services to meet the needs of their residents, we are providing substantial extra resources for social services.

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department has made of the effect on the care home sector of (a) the requirement within the Care Home Regulations that all new staff engaged by care homes must have been cleared by a Criminal Records Bureau check before starting work and (b) the change in practice between the operation of the regulation since its introduction on 1 April 2002 and the enforcement guidelines operative from 1 October. [131620]

Dr. Ladyman: From 1 April 2002, when the Care Homes Regulations came into force, care home providers have been required to undertake a number of pre-employment checks, including a disclosure from the Criminal Records Bureau (CRB), before they can employ a new member of staff. Meeting this requirement was made difficult because of long delays in the processing by CRB of applications for disclosures. The National Care Standards Commission (NCSC) issued interim guidance to care providers about how to address this difficulty.

Following significant improvements made at the CRB since last summer, it is now processing 90 per cent. of applications within four weeks. The NCSC rightly decided to look again at its guidance because there will now be fewer circumstances in which it will need to make allowance for delayed checks.

As the independent regulator, the NCSC has the responsibility to ensure care homes meet all their statutory requirements. It has stated clearly that it will continue to exercise its powers wisely and where CRB clearances are not in place will apply its discretion on the use of its enforcement powers on a case by case basis.

The NCSC issued a press release on 22 September 2003 setting out its approach to CRB checks for care home staff. A copy is available on the NCSC website at www.carestandards.org.uk.

Chauffeur Services

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many officials of (a) Department of Health and (b) agencies funded by the Department of Health are entitled to chauffeur-driven vehicles. [127685]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Prime Minister's guidance on travel by Ministers states that allocated cars and drivers will be provided for all Cabinet Ministers, Ministers of State and Parliamentary Under-Secretaries of State and that allocated cars and drivers will also be made available to permanent secretaries, other officials of equivalent rank and certain designated chief executives (normally at permanent secretary level).

The Department currently has one Secretary of State, two Ministers of State and three Parliamentary Under-Secretaries of State all of whom have been allocated an official car and driver. Additionally the permanent secretary and the chief medical officer also make use of an official car and driver each.

Coronary Care

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of heart attack patients received thrombolysis within one hour of calling for assistance in the last year for which figures are available. [130330]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The percentage of heart attack patients who were eligible (who had no contraindications) to receive thrombolysis within one hour of calling for help was 37 per cent. for the year 2002. The proportion is increasing in 2003, in line with the Government target. The figure for January to March 2003 was 44 per cent. and for April to June 2003 was 47 per cent.

Cross-border Health Care

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many persons normally resident in Scotland were given (a) emergency treatment in (i) English and (ii) Welsh hospitals and (b) non-emergency treatment in (A) English or (B) Welsh hospitals in each of the last five years. [130338]

Mr. Hutton: Table 1 shows Hospital Episode Statistics on the number of admissions for Scottish residents into National Health Service hospitals in England from 1997–98 to 2001–02. The admission method is broken down into emergency and non-emergency and the total numbers of admissions are also provided.

Table 1

Table 2 shows data from the Patient Episode Database for Wales on the number of admissions for Scottish residents into NHS hospitals in Wales from 1997–98 to 2001–02. The admission method is broken down into emergency and non-emergency and the total number of admissions is also provided.

Table 2

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what structures are in place to encourage cooperation between English and Scottish NHS trusts where they share (a) specialist teaching, research or treatment expertise and (b) contiguous geographical areas of responsibility. [130337]

Mr. Hutton: There are no formal structures in place centrally. Established clinical networks encourage the sharing of specialist teaching, research and treatment expertise.

Under arrangements for temporary registration, people who are normally resident in the United Kingdom and are entitled to National Health Service care free at the point of delivery may access emergency or primary care services in another area. Elective treatment across borders is a matter for local contractual arrangements.

Dental Services

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer of 1 September 2003, Official Report, column 947W, concerning dental practices, how many dental practices there are in each primary care trust. [129442]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 16 September 2003]: Information on the number of dental practices in each primary care trust in England, as reported at 9 September 2003 on the www.nhs.uk website, has been placed in the Library. These figures are on the same basis as those given in my response of 1 September, although for a later date; they may show some differences from dental practice numbers reported by the Dental Practice Board.

The information also shows revised figures for practices accepting patients exempt from dental charges for registration and also children for registration, as at 3 October 2003.

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment his Department has made of dental care services within the North Tyneside Primary Care Trust area; and what steps he is taking to improve access. [131318]

Miss Melanie Johnson: In the recent performance ratings published by the Commission for Health Improvement, North Tyneside Primary Care Trust (PCT) scored significantly above average for their plans in place for access to National Health Service dentistry.

There are a number of initiatives already in place to enable PCTs to improve access to NHS dental services. This includes the general dental services incentives schemes, as well as a NHS team which will support PCTs where access is most challenging, providing advice and guidance on best practice in increasing access and modernising dentistry locally to tackle longstanding bottlenecks where it is hard to find a NHS dentist.

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) dental practices and (b) dentists there were in each primary care trust in England in each of the past three years. [129593]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The available information for the number of practices and dentists providing general dental services (CDS) in each health authority (HA) for 2001 and 2002 and in each primary care trust (PCT) in 2003 has been placed in the Library. PCTs took over responsibility from HAs in October 2003.

These figures exclude salaried dentists working in the general dental service, dentists working in other national health service dental services, for example, community and personal dental services, hospital dental services and dentists who do no NHS work.

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general dental practitioners were contracted to the national health service in each primary care trust area in England at the last date for which information is available (a) in total and (b) as full-time equivalents. [130663]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 18 September 2003]: Information on the number of general dental practitioners providing general dental services (GDS) on 30 June 2003, for each primary care trust area in England, has been placed in the Library.

Information on full-time equivalent numbers is not available. Dentists providing GDS are not required to work for a specified number of hours each week and they are free to decide how much national health service work they do.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on the level of NHS dentists' charges for missed appointments. [128606]

Ms Rosie Winterton: As part of the arrangements for dentists' remuneration, their terms of service provide in paragraphs 34 and 19 of Schedule 1 to the NHS (General Dental Services) Regulations 1992 that dentists may claim from a patient for loss of remuneration resulting from the failure of a patient to keep an appointment for general dental services.

A claim must reflect actual financial loss and be proportional to that loss.

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures are being taken to increase the number of NHS dental practices in (a) Jarrow constituency, (b) South Tyneside, (c) Tyne and Wear, (d) the North East and (e) England. [128896]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Information on measures being taken to increase the number of national health service dental practices at local level is not held centrally. Subject to parliamentary approval, the Health and Social Care (Community Health and Standards) Bill will enable primary care trusts (PCTs) to provide assistance and support to dental practices with which they contract.

To enable PCTs to provide such assistance in advance of 2005, the General Dental Services Incentive Schemes Directions 2003 have been published, together with guidance to PCTs. These will be backed by funds of £3 million in 2003–04 and £6 million in 2004–05 which were announced in implementation plans published on 12 August. PCTs will also have access to further funds of £35 million over these two years, which were announced on 18 September for NHS dentistry access, choice and quality.

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many and what percentage of people are registered with an NHS dentist in England and in each NHS region, strategic health authority area and primary care trust area thereof. [130662]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 18 September 2003]: At 30 June 2003, 23.4 million people, or 47.9 per cent. of the population, were registered with dentists providing general dental services. Information showing the percentage of population registered with a dentist in each strategic health authority area and primary care trust area by region, at 30 June 2003, has been placed in the Library.

Registrations are recorded in the primary care trust area of the dentist.

Registrations lapse if patients do not return to their dentist within 15 months and so the registration figures exclude patients who have not been to their dentist within the past 15 months. The figures also exclude patients who receive dental treatment from other national health service dental services, including dental access centres and those patients who choose not to register and who seek treatment on an occasional basis.

Diagnostic and Treatment Centres

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assumptions were made by his Department about the costs of operations in NHS diagnostic and treatment centres relative to the costs of the same operations carried out at existing NHS hospitals in the same part of the country. [130648]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 16 September 2003]: When the new national tariff for the national health service is fully implemented, the price paid by a primary care trust for treatment at a NHS treatment centre will be the same as that paid in any other NHS trust facility, i.e. the national tariff, adjusted by the market forces factor. We expect NHS treatment centres to deliver both high quality services and high standards of productivity and efficiency and therefore we have assumed that their operating costs will be within the national tariff.

Diet

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been undertaken into the health effects on infants of pre-gelatinised starch in babyfood. [130119]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Neither the Department nor the Food Standards Agency has undertaken any such research. Pre-gelatinised starch is included in the list of permitted sources of carbohydrate under the Infant Formula and Follow-on Formula Regulations 1995.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will press the Chancellor to introduce taxation on foods which are detrimental to healthy living. [130160]

John Healey: I have been asked to reply.

Tax is a matter for the Budget. Most food is zero-rated for VAT, and we remain committed to our manifesto to pledge not to extend VAT to food. Some foods which might be considered detrimental to healthy living are already liable to VAT at the standard rate of 17.5 per cent. These include ice cream, most confectionary, chocolate biscuits, crisps, soft drinks and all hot foods sold by take-away outlets.

Drug and Alcohol Training Programmes

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which wards and programmes within Sefton have benefited from drug and alcohol training programmes administered by the Government Office of the North West. [124385]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government office for the North West (GONW) provides an advisory role with regards to drug and alcohol training programmes. As such, the Department is unable to provide details of any wards or programmes within Sefton that have benefited from drug and alcohol training programmes administered by the GONW.

I have asked that an official from the GONW write to my hon. Friend, setting out its position in more detail regarding the provision of drug and alcohol training programmes.

Food Standards

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his policy on NHS food procurement seeks to encourage the purchase of food produced in the United Kingdom; what guidance on food procurement he has issued to health authorities and trusts; and if he will make a statement. [129362]

Mr. Hutton: The Department has recently compiled an action plan in response to the recommendations included in the Public Sector Food Procurement Initiative, which is being taken forward by the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs.

Guidance has already been issued to national health service trusts on how to promote local sourcing, which, together with supporting local communities, is among the key principles of the Department's sustainable development policy.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the cost is of setting up (a) Combase and (b) Growth Predictor; and what sources of funding are being used. [130090]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Both Combase and Growth Predictor have been designed to provide those involved in food safety, such as researchers, the food industry and those involved in public health, with easily accessible information to assist with risk assessment and risk management.

Combase has been developed as a joint venture by the Food Standards Agency (FSA), the Institute of Food Research and United States Department of Agriculture. Costs have been shared and the United Kingdom Government has contributed data and software to the value of £8 million over the last 15 years.

Growth Predictor has been funded by the FSA. It cost approximately £200,000 to develop.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people are employed by the Government in investigating the fraudulent trade in unfit food. [130086]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Local authority environmental health and trading standards services, in partnership with officers from the Meat Hygiene Service and the State Veterinary Service, are responsible for investigating fraudulent trade in unfit food. The Food Standards Agency (FSA) provides help and advice to local authorities and has appointed 26 local authority enforcement officers to provide regional advice on investigating unfit food. Each advisor will contribute 10 working days per year to this work on behalf of the FSA. In addition, there is a team of five investigators based at the FSA to assist with this work and two further investigators are being recruited.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans the Food Standards Agency has to conduct audits of local councils in England and Wales. [130089]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Food Standards Agency launched its United Kingdom-wide local authority food law enforcement audit scheme in April 2001. Audits are carried out against the requirements of the framework agreement on local authority food law enforcement, which sets out minimum standards of performance. Since the launch of the scheme, 149 local authorities across the UK, including 99 in England and 10 in Wales, have been subject to an audit.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the budget of the Food Standards Agency for food sampling for each year since the Food Standards Agency was established. [130960]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Food sampling as part of the enforcement of food law is the responsibility of local authorities (LAs). LAs carried out 178,000 and 165,000 samples in 2000 and 2001 respectively. Figures are not yet available for 2002.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the Food Standards Agency's strategy is to ensure the adequacy of future arrangements for the testing of food samples. [130962]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 16 July 2003, Official Report, columns 413–14W, relating to the work that the Food Standards Agency (FSA) is taking forward in close liaison with local authorities (LAs) and the Association of Public Analysts to ensure that food standards sampling effectively contributes to consumer protection.

I am also aware that the FSA is working closely with the Health Protection Agency on the procedures for microbiological sampling of food to ensure an adequate system is in place for LAs.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of testing of food samples was carried out by (a) local authority public analysts, (b) private sector public analysts and (c) the Food Standards Agency's laboratory in York in each year since the Food Standards Agency was established. [130964]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Information on numbers of food samples tested by individual public analyst laboratories is not held centrally. It is therefore not possible to break down the information on total samples between types of laboratory in the manner requested.

According to the Association of Public Analysts' statistics, approximately 82,000 food samples were tested by public analysts in 2001, but the figures are not split between local authority and private sector public analysts.

The Food Standards Agency does not have its own laboratory. The laboratory in York referred to by the hon. Member is the central science laboratory, an executive agency of the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether there are plans to train further local authority enforcement officers in illegal meat imports. [130088]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Since April 2003, the Food Standards Agency has run 20 training courses for United Kingdom local authority enforcement officers on imported food issues, which includes the control of illegal meat imports. Further courses are planned, so that enforcement representatives from all UK local authority environmental health Departments, trading standards services and UK ports of entry will have received training by the end of March 2004.

Food Supplements Directive

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will meet representatives of Consumers for Health Choice to discuss the European Food Supplements Regulations. [128354]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I met with a representative of Consumers for Health Choice on Tuesday 7 October to discuss the Food Supplements Regulations.

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the EU Food Supplements Directive; [132229]

(2) if he will make a statement about the EU Food Supplements Directive. [132280]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Directive 2002/46/EC on Food Supplements came into force on 12 July 2002 and had to be implemented into member states' national legislation by 31 July 2003. The Food Supplements (England) Regulations 2003 were laid before Parliament on 2 June 2003 and the provisions will come into force on 1 August 2005. Parallel legislation has been made in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

G10 Medicines

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations his Department has made to the European Commission in response to the G10 Medicines (High Level Group on Innovation and the Provision of Medicines) report. [128737]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The G10 Report, presented to President Prodi in May 2002, was produced by a group of European Ministers and leading figures from the pharmaceutical industry, patients' representatives, and European social insurance institutions. The United Kingdom played a key role, being represented by my noble Friend the Lord Hunt of Kings Heath, the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health. The European Commission has now produced a Communication to the Council, the European Parliament, and other Institutions (COM 2003/383) This document is available in the Library with an Explanatory Memorandum from the Department of Health.

These matters are being discussed in both the Health and Competitiveness Councils. My noble Friend Lord Warner, is a member of the G10, working towards the achievement of our policy objectives in relation to the pharmaceutical sector.

Health Care (Buckinghamshire)

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) private and (b) NHS dental practices there were in (i) Chesham and Amersham and (ii) Buckinghamshire in each year since 1 January 1996. [130598]

Ms Rosie Winterton: No information is available on the number of wholly private dental practices. The Office of Fair Trading report, 'The private dentistry market in the UK', states that about 210 practices in the United Kingdom are totally private.

The table gives the available information for the number of general dental service (GDS) practices and dentists there were in the old Buckinghamshire Health Authority (HA) area for the years 1996 to 2002 and in the relevant primary care trusts (PCTs) in 2002 and 2003. PCTs took over responsibility from HAs in October 2003.

These figures exclude dentists working in other national health service dental services, ie., community and personal dental services, hospital dental services and also salaried general dental practitioners and dentists doing no NHS work.

Dental Practice Board

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to reduce waiting lists in (a) Chesham and Amersham and (b) Buckinghamshire. [130603]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The national health service is working to reduce waiting times so that, by the end of March 2004, the maximum waiting time for inpatient treatment will be cut to nine months and the maximum waiting time for an outpatient appointment will be cut to 17 weeks.

Buckinghamshire Hospitals NHS Trust has recently initiated a series of agreed actions to reduce waiting times, including telephone validation of waiting lists, private patient initiatives and active re-organisation of waiting lists.

Future initiatives to further reduce waiting times include schemes to:

Increase the number of patients who have their operative procedure carried out as a daycase.

Explore the role of specialist nurses and allied health professionals as alternatives to traditional consultant-led outpatients appointments.

Introduce measures to improve health and avoid complications, for example, investment in wound care management.

Health Care (Buckinghamshire)

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dentists have moved to private practice from the NHS in (a) Chesham and Amersham and (b) Buckinghamshire in each year since 1 January 1996; and if he will make a statement. [130596]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The information is not collected centrally although the number of dentists engaged solely in private practice is small. The Department's figures indicate that only around 2 per cent. of dentists do only private practice.

Health Protection Agency

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what new appropriations have been authorised to fund the Health Protection Agency. [128667]

Miss Melanie Johnson: As stated in the consultation document in summer 2002, the creation of the Health Protection Agency (HPA) was cost neutral in terms of public expenditure. Departmental funds allocated to the HPA were drawn largely from those sums previously allocated to its predecessor bodies and organisations.

Hospital Admissions

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average cost of hospital admissions was in (a) 1982, (b) 1992 and (c) 2002. [130000]

Mr. Hutton: The average cost of admissions is shown in the table.

2001–2002	1,544
1991–1992	1,278
1981–1982	[1]

Hospital Bed Costs

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the capital cost is to the NHS of a new hospital bed. [128929]

Dr. Ladyman: An indicative cost of creating a new-build hospital bed is approximately £380,000, excluding value added tax, which reflects the current business case approval level. The cost includes the capital construction cost, equipment costs and professional fees incurred, as well as a proportion of the costs of the supporting services within the new hospital, such as operating theatres, out-patient departments, accident and emergency services, catering, office accommodation, public areas, pharmacy, pathology and radiology. It does not include the running costs to make the bed operational, such as staffing, linen or cleaning.

Figures for providing a new bed in an existing hospital or under a private finance initiative scheme are not available, as there are many factors that can influence the outcome for each of these schemes.

Hospital Ward Housekeeping Services

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of hospitals have implemented a ward housekeeping service; when the target was set for

50 per cent. of all hospitals to have implemented such a service; when it is due to be met; and what the baseline was for the target. [128905]

Mr. Hutton: Housekeepers support an improved patient experience by ensuring that wards are clean, enjoyable food is available and that equipment works.

In June 2000, the NHS Plan set a target for 50 per cent. of hospitals to have a housekeeping service by 2004. At January 2003, 32 per cent. of all hospitals had begun to introduce housekeeping services, rising to 47 per cent. for hospitals with over 100 beds. These larger hospitals account for 86 per cent. of all beds.

The new style ward housekeeper role was developed with the support of 72 trusts that had already begun to develop services in this area. These trusts had a variety of models, including purely cleaning, or purely catering. The new model is a multi-skilled role, covering both areas.

Prior to the NHS Plan, housekeeping data were not collected centrally.

Infection Control

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans his Department has to monitor and improve levels of healthcare-associated infections in community healthcare settings; and if he will make a statement; [128923]

(2) what plans his Department has to commission qualitative and quantitative studies to investigate infection control practice among community healthcare personnel; [128925]

(3) what central monitoring and recording is undertaken by his Department on compliance with infection control guidelines in community healthcare settings. [128926]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Central monitoring of compliance with infection control in community settings is not undertaken.

New National Institute of Clinical Excellence guidelines, "Infection Control: Prevention of Healthcare-associated Infection in Primary and Community Care" were published this summer. These evidence-based guidelines include the standard principles for controlling infection, for example, hand hygiene and the prevention of infections associated with certain invasive devices. They also contain information on the education of healthcare workers, guidance on implementation and audit criteria to assess compliance. Implementation of these guidelines and other initiatives will encourage good practice and help prevent avoidable infections.

The National health service research and development methodology programme has recently asked for bids for research into surveillance of healthcare associated infection in the community after discharge from hospital treatment.

Involve

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the contribution in 2002–03 by the Department of Health to the budget of Involve is. [129589]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Good research governance requires that service users are involved in research design and commissioning to ensure value for money. "Involve", formerly "Consumers in NHS Research", offers support both to research commissioners seeking to fulfil their responsibilities in this respect and to members of the public wishing to contribute to the research process.

In 2002–03, "Involve's", allocation from the Department's research and development budget was £410,000.

Khat

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the effects of khat on the Somali population in the UK; and what advice his Department gives to local health authorities in developing policies to deal with the issue. [127514]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Home Office commissioned and published a report on khat use in Somalis living in London in 1998, which identified only limited concerns about its use and availability. In addition, the Home Office's drugs and alcohol research unit is shortly to start a detailed study to assess the level of harm caused by khat. The interim findings of this report will be available in spring 2004 and will be considered by the advisory council on the misuse of drugs. It is expected that a final report will be completed in autumn 2004.

There is currently no specific guidance for local health authorities on this issue, though mental health services and drug services have a range of treatment options for dealing with the effects of stimulant misuse.

Listed NHS Buildings

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the buildings belonging to the NHS which are (a) Grade I and (b) Grade II listed. [130318]

Mr. Hutton: The latest estimate available shows that at June 2002 there were 627 listings (8 Grade I; 34 Grade II* and 585 Grade II) on 468 NHS sites. Information on this matter is no longer the subject of routine collection.

Mental Health

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the level of readmissions of mental health patients within 90 days of discharge was as a proportion of total discharges in each primary care trust (a) for the quarter ending (i) April 1998, (ii) March 2001 and (b) for the most recent quarter available. [131025]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Information on readmission rates of mental health patients within 90 days of discharge in each health authority for quarters ending March 1998, March 2001 and March 2002 has been placed in the Library.

Microsoft (Licensing Fees)

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much was paid to Microsoft in licensing fees by his Department and its agencies in each of the last three years; how much has been budgeted for in (a) 2003–04 and (b) 2004–05; and how much the NHS has budgeted to pay Microsoft in licensing fees in (i) 2003–04 and (ii) 2004–05. [130687]

Mr. Hutton: The total amounts spent on Microsoft products by the Department, its executive agencies and the National Health Service between 2000–01 and 2002–03 are shown in the table.

Year	Expenditure by the Department and executive agencies[1]	Expenditure by the NHS[1]
2000–01	413,000	32,800,000
2001–02	854,000	34,300,000
2002–03	781,000	66,800,000

[1] All sums are inclusive of VAT.

For 2003–04, the Department and its executive agencies have budgeted approximately £197,000 including VAT. The NHS has budgeted approximately £59,300,000, including VAT, before the expiry of the NHS enterprise agreement in October 2004.

For 2004–05, the indicative budgets for purchase of Microsoft products for the Department and its executive agencies have not yet been established. Information on the NHS budget beyond the expiry of the NHS enterprise agreement is not available. Negotiations are being undertaken with Microsoft about the possible renewal of the agreement.

MMR

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research he has commissioned into the side effects following (a) the single vaccination for mumps, measles and rubella and (b) the MMR vaccination; and if he will make a statement. [129029]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 11 September 2003]: The Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency (MHRA), with expert advice from the independent advisory committee the Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM) is responsible for ensuring that medicines and vaccines on the United Kingdom market meet appropriate standards of safety, quality and efficacy.

MMR (combined measles, mumps and rubella) vaccine and some single component measles, mumps and rubella vaccines are licensed in the UK. Licensed vaccines are assessed for safety prior to the licence being granted. Information on side-effects known to be associated with these vaccines is included in the relevant product information. As with all vaccines and medicines, after licensing, the MHRA and CSM keep the safety of MMR vaccine and single measles, mumps and rubella vaccines under continual review. The MHRA uses a number of data sources to monitor the safety of medicines and vaccines. These include reports of suspected adverse drug reactions spontaneously provided by health professionals through the 'Yellow Card' scheme. This voluntary scheme has been in existence since 1964 and has a proven track record in identifying important new safety concerns with medicines. Other data sources include periodic reviews of safety information submitted by the licence holders, medical literature and the results of any new clinical trials or epidemiological studies.

Many studies, including one commissioned by the MHRA (then the Medicines Control Agency) in 1998, have specifically investigated the alleged association between MMR vaccines and the development of autism and have found no evidence of a causal link. The CSM has considered these studies and the general safety of MMR vaccines on several occasions in recent years and its advice remains that MMR vaccine is the safest way to protect children from three potentially serious infections. This advice is consistent with the advice of expert bodies around the world. No studies are available that have examined the effects of giving single vaccines separately on a population.

Multiple Sclerosis

Phil Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients have received treatment for multiple sclerosis through the Risk Sharing scheme; and whether the target of 9,000 patients by November will be reached. [131178]

Ms Rosie Winterton: We estimate that at the end of August, some 6,300 patients were receiving treatment with a disease modifying treatment for their multiple sclerosis. Around 300 patients each month are being initiated on treatment.

The figure of 9,000 patients mentioned in Health Service Circular 2002/004 is not a target, but represents an estimate of the total number of patients who might be eligible for treatment under the guidelines prepared by the Association of British Neurologists.

NHS Administration

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many new (a) units, (b) departments and (c) organisations have been created in the NHS by legislation and regulation since 1997. [131015]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Since 1997, the Department has established:

Two health authorities (HAs) in 1999, four in 2001, and 28 on 1 April 2002. On that date, the 95 HAs then existing, including those set up in 1999 and 2001, were abolished and 28 new HAs were established. These new HAs were renamed strategic health authorities from October 2002.

11 special health authorities.

481 primary care groups (PCGs) on 1 April 1999 as sub-committees of existing HAs. All PCGs have now moved to primary care trust (PCT) status, either individually or by the merger of one or more PCGs and previously existing national health service community health care trusts. There are now 303 PCTs, two of which are designated as care trusts (CTs). There are a further five NHS trusts designated as CTs.

129 NHS trusts.

No units or departments have been created by NHS legislation since 1997.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many administrative staff were employed by the NHS, broken down by (a) category and (b) salary scale, in each of the last five years. [128705]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 15 September 2003]: Information on the number of administrative staff employed in the national health service by salary scale is not collected centrally. Information on the number of administrative staff by area of work is shown in the table.

NHS administrative staff in England by area of work as at 30 September each specified year

[2] Staff working in clerical and administrative support of areas such as laundry, catering, domestic services and gardens.
[3] Clerical and administrative staff in support of clinical areas such as medical secretaries and medical records officers.
[4] Staff with overall responsibility for budgets, manpower or assets, or accountable for a significant area of work. This excludes nursing, ST&T and ambulance managers in posts requiring specific clinical qualifications.

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the administrative cost of the NHS was as a percentage of its total budget in each year since 1997. [127337]

Mr. Hutton: The administrative cost of the national health service as a percentage of its budget in each year since 1997 is shown in the table.

	Total health authority and primary care trust administration and NHS trust management costs (£ million)	NHS total expenditure: England (£ million)	Administration costs as percentage of NHS budget
1997–98	1,962,983	34,664	5.7

Note:
Administration expenditure includes the cost of the board, commissioning administration, community health council expenditure, primary care trust preparation costs, some public health staff costs, capital charges, etc.—ie all expenditure which is not related to the provision of patient and social care and staff training.

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the cost of (a) medical and dental staff and (b) administration and estates staff was in each year since 1997 (i) in cash terms and (ii) as a proportion of total NHS expenditure. [131037]

Mr. Hutton: Expenditure on medical and dental staff and administration and estates staff, in the Hospital and Community Health Services in England, between 1997–98 and 2001–02, is shown in table 1.

In April 2001, NHS accounting and budgeting changed to a resource based system. Figures for 2001–02 are not comparable with previous years.

Expenditure on NHS staff in Scotland and Wales is a matter for the devolved administrations. While the institutions in Northern Ireland are dissolved, responsibility rests with Ministers in the Northern Ireland Office.

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much per capita has been spent by the NHS in (a) the North East and (b) the UK in (i) 1996, (ii) 2000 and (iii) (projected for) 2003. [130739]

Mr. Hutton: Information on the average level of National Health Service spending per weighted head of population in the north east and in England is shown in the table. Information is not yet available for 2002–03.

	1996–97	2000–01
The North East	615.31	796.11
England	625.56	825.38

Notes:
1. Health authority annual accounts 1996–97
Health authority summarisation forms 2000–01
Primary care trust summarisation forms 2000–01
Weighted population figures for 1996–1997 and 2000–01
2. In many health authorities there are factors which distort the expenditure per head. These include:
The health authority acting in a lead capacity to commission healthcare or fund, training on behalf of other health bodies.
Asset revaluations in NHS Trusts being funded through health authorities.
For these reasons expenditure per head cannot be compared reliably between health authorities.
3. Allocations per weighted head of population provide a much more reliable measure to identify differences between funding of health authorities.
4. Expenditure is taken from audited health authority and primary care trust summarisation forms which are prepared on a resource basis and therefore differ from cash allocations in the year. The expenditure is the total expenditure by the health authority and by the primary care trusts within the health authority and region area. The majority of General Dental Services expenditure is not included in the health authority or primary care trust summarisation forms and is separately accounted for by the Dental Practice Board. An element of pharmaceutical services expenditure is accounted for by the Prescription Pricing Authority and not by health authorities.
5. Health authorities and primary care trusts should account for their expenditure on a gross basis. This results in an element of double counting in 2000–01 where one body acts as the main commissioner and is then reimbursed by other bodies. This element cannot be identified in 2000–01.
6. The North East has been taken to include the geographical areas covered by the following Health Authorities:
County Durham and Darlington Health Authority.
Gateshead and South Tyneside Health Authority.
Newcastle and North Tyneside Health Authority.
Northumberland Health Authority.
Sunderland Health Authority.
Tees Health Authority.

NHS Direct

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on how the NHS Direct service has developed since March 2000. [130321]

Ms Rosie Winterton: NHS Direct has developed since March 2000 to become the world's largest e-health service, supporting over a million patients every month through its telephone advice and information service and associated website. In this time, NHS Direct has symbolised the changing relationship between the national health service and patients, supporting patients to become more empowered, better informed and more able to exercise choices over their own health and health care.

NHS Direct has been available to callers throughout England since the end of October 2000. Call volumes have grown by 49 per cent. since March 2000. Independent evaluation highlights a service that is safe, popular and increases access to advice and information without increasing demands on other parts of the NHS. Caller satisfaction rates have continued at over 95 per cent. and 45 per cent. of calls to the service are completed without referral to another service. The roll-out of NHS Direct was commended in a report by the National Audit Office, published in January 2002, which estimated that the service covered 50 per cent. of its running costs by reducing demands on other services in the NHS.

In November 2001, NHS Direct Online was re-launched to include an interactive inquiry service, which is able to provide patients with detailed information about topics not covered on the website. NHS Direct Online receives half a million on-line transactions every month. NHS Direct Online has been awarded one of the first ever eEurope awards for eHealth by the European Commission. 200 applications were received from 22 countries. At a conference and award ceremony in Brussels in May this year, attended by European Commissioners and 33 Ministers from across the member states, Bob Gann, Director of NHS Direct Online, received the award for "Empowering Citizens in Management of Health and Wellbeing". The panel judged entries against criteria including economic benefit, accessibility, quality assurance, technical standards and European applicability.

NHS Direct achieved the Prime Minister's pledge that, by the end of September 2001, patients who wished to would be able to obtain advice on dental issues and details of NHS dentists simply by phoning NHS Direct.

NHS Direct introduced a dedicated textphone service in November 2001. The service connects callers to NHS Direct nurses, who have had specialist training to help them meet the needs of textphone users.

Since March 2002, access to out-of-hours care through NHS Direct has been available to 10 million patients. By December 2004, technical and operational links will be in place to allow NHS Direct to transfer calls to any out-of-hours provider in the country. Full clinical integration of services will follow as soon as possible thereafter.

The first version of the NHS Direct performance framework was launched in March 2002. The framework is based on the principle of continuous quality improvement and outlines responsibilities and tools for service delivery and the monitoring of performance and improvement at all levels of the organisation—from the individual to the national service. The framework also outlines a set of key performance targets for NHS Direct, areas for the development of clinical indicators and areas for the development of internal management measures. NHS Direct has embarked on a major programme for improving its productivity. This delivered a 15 per cent. increase in call volumes in 2002–03, without any increase in staff numbers.

NHS Direct aims to support the NHS in many areas, including contributing to a responsible and coherent response to public health. NHS Direct has worked with the Department and other stakeholders to provide a public helpline in the event of health alerts. These have ranged from local incidents, for example, chemical spills, to handling calls during a multi-regional hepatitis C look-back exercise, as well as the Alder Hey independent inquiry. Since March 2000, it has handled a total of 631 health alerts.

Since April 2002, NHS Direct has been able to directly refer patients to pharmacists, where appropriate, for advice about medication or minor ailments or injuries. This has helped many patients receive a quicker and more appropriate response to their problems. It also makes better use of the skills of pharmacists and helps relieve some pressure on general practitioners.

The strategy document for developing NHS Direct, published in April 2003, sets out the continued commitment to this popular and innovative service. The impact of new financial investment will further support plans to use technology and new ways of working to boost productivity and increase capacity. In total, NHS Direct will aim to expand its call taking capacity three fold in the next three years, while at the same time, developing the various channels through which patients can access the service.

NHS Estate (Health and Safety)

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether his Department met their target in the NHS plan of ensuring that 90 per cent. of the NHS estate was health and safety compliant by March 2002; what percentage of the estate did not comply with health and safety regulations in March 2002; and what new deadlines have been set on health and safety in the NHS estate; [123928]

(2) whether his Department met their target in the NHS Plan to eliminate the fire safety backlog in the NHS Estate by March 2003. [124004]

Mr. Hutton: Trusts that did not report full compliance will cover a wide variety of conditions, including that which is only just below standard. At 31 March 2002, 10.55 per cent, of patient-occupied floor area was below health and safety compliance and 8.57 per cent. below statutory fire safety standards.

Trusts generally manage high-risk deficiencies as a priority in order to ensure that premises are intrinsically safe and not of concern to local enforcement bodies.

Further improvements to health and safety and fire safety will result from the current priorities and planning framework targets for reducing the backlog of maintenance by 25 per cent. by 2004.

Nurses and Care Workers (Gender)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his Department's policy is on patients being (a) offered a choice and (b) consulted on the gender of the nurses and careworkers who treat them; and if he will make a statement. [126687]

Mr. Hutton: The Department is committed to increasing patient choice in the national health service to ensure that its services are more responsive to the needs of individual patients. The first step in increasing patient choice is to provide patients waiting for elective surgery with choice over the hospital in which they are treated. By the summer of 2004, all patients waiting six months for surgery will be offered the choice to move to another hospital. From December 2005, patients who may require elective surgery will be offered a choice of four or five hospitals or providers when their general practitioner refers them. We have also launched a national consultation exercise—'Choice, Responsiveness and Equity in the NHS and social care'—to get the views of patients and NHS staff on extending patient choice within the NHS beyond elective surgery. Fundamental to increasing the responsiveness of services is ensuring that patients are afforded privacy and dignity, including taking into account their views as to the gender of their nurses and care workers.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to answer outstanding ordinary written questions tabled by the hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam for answer before 7 July. 2003. [126505]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 17 July 2003]: All ordinary written questions tabled by the hon. Member before 7 July have now been answered.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the questions tabled by the hon. Member for Epsom and Ewell which have been due for answer for over five sitting days; and when he expects to answer them. [127701]

Mr. Hutton: At 17 July, there were two questions outstanding to the hon. Member. I replied to one on 8 September 2003, Official Report, column 157W, and to the other on 18 September 2003, Official Report, column 977W.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many questions directed to him remain unanswered. [130754]

Ms Rosie Winterton: At 6 October 2003, 215 parliamentary questions remained unanswered, of which, 63 were not yet due for answer.

Pneumococcal Vaccination

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to provide pneumococcal vaccination to people over 65. [130802]

Miss Melanie Johnson: A new pneumococcal immunisation programme for adults aged 65 years and over was announced on 20 August 2003 and will be introduced over the next three years.

Post-operative Care

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been carried out into the impact of greater consultant involvement in post-operative care; and if he will make a statement. [129599]

Mr. Hutton: The Department has not conducted any research on the impact of greater consultant involvement in post-operative care.

The Policy Research Programme ((PRP) has recently been asked to commission research on early warning scoring systems and outreach services for adult critical care; both of which can help improve experience and outcomes for patients with potential or actual need of critical care services. The PRP is liaising with the NHS Service Delivery and Organisation National R&D Programme, which has commissioned an evaluation of outreach services in critical care.

PAF PI E50

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many and what percentage of people in each of the last five years, broken down by client group, were assessed and (a) received and (b) did not receive a service as recorded in PAF PI E50. [130846]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The latest information available on the number and percentage of clients aged 18 and over that were assessed and received and did not receive a service is shown in tables 1 and 2 for 2000–01 and 2001–02. Data for previous years is not available.

Pre-booked Hospital Treatment

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of out-patient appointments and in-patient elective admissions are pre-booked; and what proportion were pre-booked at the start of 2000–01. [128907]

Mr. Hutton: Information on day case booking rates from March 2003 can be found at: http://www.doh.gov.uk/nhsplanbookingsystems/booking.htm

Information on out-patient and in-patient combined (day case plus ordinary in-patient admission) booking rates will be made available on the website in due course.

Spectacles

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the efficacy of providing tinted spectacle lenses to assist children with reading difficulties; and what plans he has to make them more widely available. [130284]

Dr. Ladyman [holding answer 16 September 2003]: There are indications that some children in their teens may benefit from precision-tinted lenses.

However, unless precision-tinted lenses are provided as part of a proper scheme of assessment and treatment, many children may receive them unnecessarily. There is a risk that more appropriate responses to their needs will be delayed while time is taken up investigating tinted lenses. Without proper evaluation of the therapy for each individual, which is less likely if provided outside the education network, there is no proper indication of its effectiveness.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children with a refractive error in their vision receive financial support for the cost of coloured glass spectacles. [130285]

Dr. Ladyman [holding answer 16 September 2003]: For 2002–03 in England, 8,850 pairs of spectacles with tints for 0 to 15-year-olds were reimbursed by primary care trusts.

Student Nurses (Fees)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he plans to extend the present remission for student nurses from higher education tuition fees to top-up fees incurred after 2006. [129701]

Mr. Hutton: While the proposals contained in the Department for Education and Skills' White Paper include allowing universities to increase tuition fees, there is as yet no clear indication from the higher education sector of the scope or scale of any increased charges. The Department will take measures to ensure that any increase in the cost of university courses will not have an adverse impact on the supply, retention, diversity or quality of students undertaking nurse training.

Thalidomide Trust

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what meetings he has had with the Thalidomide Trust in the last 12 months; and what advice and assistance he has offered to the Trust. [131301]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Department has not had any meetings with the Thalidomide Trust over the past 12 months. The Government paid £5 million to the Trust in 1974 and £0.8 million in 1978, following misunderstandings about the tax treatment of the fund. In 1996, we made a further payment to the Trust of £7 million in recognition of the unique and tragic circumstances which surround the thalidomide disaster. The Department would always be happy to meet with the Trust if it so wishes.

Urology/Gastrointestinal Surgery (Children)

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the current situation whereby a child discharged from hospital following urology and gastrointestinal surgery receives no community paediatric support. [129293]

Dr. Ladyman: The level of support each individual child receives upon discharge from hospital is a matter for local decision. This will be based upon the child's degree of dependency and will involve the hospital concerned working in close liaison with local primary health care staff and the community nursing team.

The forthcoming national service framework for children will set standards aimed at raising the quality of the health and social care services that children receive and will include consideration of the best means to support children post-discharge from hospital.

Waiting Times

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what the (a) mean and (b) median waiting times were for (i) initial and (ii) follow-up appointments for physiotherapy care for each primary care trust for the most recent three quarters available; [131031]

(2) what the (a) mean and (b) median waiting times were for (i) initial and (ii) follow-up appointments for (A) chiropody, (B) podiatry and (C) foot clinics for each primary care trust for the most recent three quarters available. [131036]

Mr. Hutton: This information is not collected centrally.

Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it policy that no patient referred to an NHS hospital for a hearing test should wait longer than two months. [131668]

Ms Rosie Winterton: While there are no targets for waiting times for audiology services, we are taking action to tackle the causes of longer waits as part of our programme to modernise hearing aid services in England. These are increased demand arising from public awareness of digital hearing aids and a recognised national shortage of audiologists.

The modernisation project team at the Royal National Institute for the Deaf and the action on team from the modernisation agency are working with sites to help them reduce waiting times. We are introducing a new, more streamlined patient process in modernised sites. We are looking at ways to increase the number of trained audiologists in the longer term and are encouraging partnerships between national health service trusts and high street registered hearing aid dispensers to increase capacity and make NHS hearing aids available, free of charge, from an increasing number of convenient locations.

Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients have waited more than (a) three, (b) six and (c) 12 months for an elective finished in-year admission in (i) 1997–98 and (ii) the latest year for which figures are available. [131669]

Mr. Hutton: The number of patients who waited for more than three, six and 12 months are shown in the table.

Total patients waited	1997–98	2001–02
More than 3 months	1,149,122	1,169,469
More than 6 months	608,276	609,684
More than 12 months	185,956	190,158

Notes:
1. Count of finished in-year admission episodes.
2. Elective finished in-year admissions from waiting list and booked cases by time waited, NHS hospitals, England 1997–98 and 2001–02.
3. Admissions are defined as the first period of in-patient care under one consultant within one health care provider. Please note that admissions do not represent the number of in-patients, as a person may have more than one admission within the year.
4. A finished consultant episode (FCE) is defined as a period of admitted patient care under one consultant within one health care provider. Please note that the figures do not represent the number of patients, as a person may have more than one episode of care within the year.
5. Grossing—figures have not (yet) been adjusted for shortfalls in data (i.e. the data are ungrossed).

Walk-in Centres

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what safeguards are in place to prevent patients using walk-in centres to gain access to prescription drugs without visiting or informing their GP. [128912]

Mr. Hutton: All prescribing or supply of medicines at national health service walk-in centres is undertaken by qualified independent prescribers, or within clinical protocols set by patient group directions. In addition, clinical information is normally shared with the patient's general practitioner.

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what reviews he has commissioned into NHS walk-in centres and their impact on demand on other health services; and if he will place copies of the reviews in the Library. [128914]

Mr. Hutton: An independent evaluation of national health service walk-in centres was published by Bristol University in July 2002. Copies of the report have been placed in the Library.

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses have been employed in walk-in centres in (a) England, (b) each region and (c) each strategic health authority in each year since walk-in centres were first established. [128915]

Mr. Hutton: National health service walk-in centres are managed locally by their host primary care trust or NHS trust. Information on staff numbers is not held centrally.

Xenotransplantation

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what factors underlay the decision of UK Xenotransplantation Interim Regulatory Authority not to publish the legal and ethics review of xenotransplantation produced by Professor McLean and Dr. Williamson; [129269]

(2) if he will publish the useful discussion points identified by the UK Xenotransplantation Interim Regulatory Authority in their consideration of the ethics review of xenotransplantation produced by Professor McLean and Dr. Williamson; [129271]

(3) what advice his Department gave to the UK Xenotransplantation Interim Regulatory Authority regarding the legal review by Professor McLean and Dr. Williamson, with particular reference to the question of its publication. [129272]

Ms Rosie Winterton: While there are no plans to publish Professor McLean's legal and ethics review as a United Kingdom Xenotransplantation Interim Regulatory Authority (UKXIRA) document, UKXIRA and the Department have no objections to the review being published by the author. The Department encourages researchers to publish their findings in peer review journals and Professor McLean is contractually free to make the review and the discussions within it available to the public. As is customary, the summary of the review will be placed on the Department's research findings register (which is available on the Department's website) and the summary of the research papers will be placed on the UKXIRA website. Due to the interest shown in the review, a copy will be placed in the Library for information shortly.

Abortion

Jim Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to seek an amendment to the law on abortion to allow women undergoing medical abortion to self administer the prostaglandin at home; [131849]

(2) how many abortions have been performed in the United Kingdom on the grounds of foetal handicap under the provisions of the Abortion Act 1967 (as amended); and what percentage of the total number of abortions performed under the Abortion Act 1967 (as amended) this constitutes; [131850]

(3) how many abortions have been performed in the United Kingdom in order to save the life of the mother under the provisions of the Abortion Act 1967 (as amended); and what percentage of the total number of abortions performed under the Abortion Act 1967 (as amended) this constitutes; [131851]

(4) when the Government last commissioned research on the safety of the abortion pill mifepristone. [131852]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government have no plans to seek an amendment to the law on abortion. All abortions in England are currently carried out under Section 1(3) of the Abortion Act which states that any treatment for the termination of pregnancy must be carried out in an NHS hospital or an approved independent sector place. There is provision under Section 1(3a) for medical abortion to be carried out in an approved class of place but we have not yet determined what a "class of place" should be. No "class of place" will be approved unless we are content that a woman's safety is not at risk.

The safety of mifepristone was fully evaluated on behalf of the Government at the time of granting a marketing authorisation in 1991 by the Medicines Control Agency (MCA). The use of mifepristone is continually monitored by the Medicines and Healthcare Products Regulatory Agency (formerly the MCA) using spontaneous adverse drug reaction reports, periodic safety reviews and all other available safety data to ensure its continued safe use. Also, there have been a number of studies and reviews of the safety of mifepristone published in the scientific literatures since 1991.

In the years 1968 to 2001 inclusive, there were 4.56 million reported abortions performed on residents of England and Wales. Of these, 63,897, or 1.4 per cent., were performed under section 1*(1)(d)* of the Abortion Act 1967 as amended. These are cases where there was a substantial risk that if the child were born it would suffer from such physical or mental abnormalities as to be seriously handicapped. 39,464, or 0.9 per cent., of the total were performed under section 1(1)(c) of the Abortion Act 1967 as amended. These are cases where the continuance of the pregnancy would involve risk to the life of the pregnant woman; greater than if the pregnancy were terminated.

The Abortion Act 1967 applies to England, Wales and Scotland only. Abortions performed in Scotland are a matter for the Scottish Executive.

Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many abortions there have been, and what the annual percentage change has been, since 1996. [131666]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The total numbers of abortions performed on residents of England and Wales under the Abortion Act 1967 (as amended) for each year since 1996 and the annual percentage change are shown in the table.

	Total number of abortions	Year on year percentage change
1996	167,916	—
1997	170,145	+1.3
1998	177,871	+4.5
1999	173,701	−2.3
2000	175,542	+1.1
2001	176,364	+0.5

Information on abortions in Scotland are a matter for the Scottish Executive. The Abortion Act 1967 does not apply to Northern Ireland.

Ashford (Middlesex) Hospital

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many treatments are planned to be provided at the new treatment centre at Ashford (Middlesex) hospital during the five year contract; and what proportion of these will be in addition to the number that would be provided during the same period in the facilities that will be used by Mercury Health Ltd. [130936]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 18 September 2003]: The treatment centre at Ashford plans to provide treatment for 1,711 patients annually, a total of 8,555 patients over the five years of the contract.

The treatment centre is a refurbishment of a facility that is currently out of commission. The development allows this capacity to be made available for national health service care.

Cancer Nursing

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent meetings Ministers (a) have had and (b) are planning with (i) nursing, (ii) clinical, (iii) voluntary sector and (iv) service user organisations about the development of cancer nursing to meet (A) current and (B) projected demand for cancer nursing within the NHS. [123249]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I will be meeting my hon. Friend on 29 October 2003, to discuss cancer nursing.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress towards meeting targets on cancer care. [129486]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Thanks to major additional investment and the hard work of those working in the national health service we are making real progress in implementing the NHS Cancer Plan. Patients are benefiting from improvements across all aspects of cancer care.

For example there are an extra 1,000 cancer consultants compared with 1997; nearly 99 per cent. of people with suspected cancer are now seen by a specialist within two weeks of being referred by their general practitioner; we have improved the quality of breast screening by the introduction of two view mammography and have extended the breast screening service to include women aged 65 to 70 resulting in nearly 200,000 extra women being invited since April 2001. The introduction of the National Institute for Clinical Excellence has meant that over 31,000 extra patients can benefit from new cancer drugs. We have increased the NHS funding of specialist palliative care by £50 million a year, an increase of nearly 40 per cent. and latest figures show a reduction of 9 per cent. in the death rate from cancer.

Community Health Councils

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has had from community health councils in England about the operational difficulties they face from extending their activities beyond September 2003. [127683]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Since the announcement of 4 June 2003 to postpone the abolition of community health councils (CHSs) until 1 December 2003, representations have been made by a number of CHCs highlighting potential difficulties. The exact number of cases could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Discussions have taken place with various stakeholder groups, including the relevant trades unions and the Association of Community Health Councils for England and Wales, to gain a better understanding of the operational issues involved. Guidance and advice has been made available to local managers.

Consultant Numbers

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many extra consultants between 1999 and 2004 were already planned for when the target of 7,500 extra consultants was published in July 2000; and whether these consultants were included in the figure of 7,500. [128916]

Mr. Hutton: The Department was already planning for a substantial expansion in consultant numbers. The NHS Plan target of 7,500 consultants was based on identified need for additional growth to meet the service targets.

Delayed Discharges

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the targets that his Department has set (a) Suffolk county council and (b) primary care trusts for delayed discharges in Suffolk. [131846]

Dr. Ladyman: The Department does not set individual councils or primary care trusts targets for reductions in delayed discharges. The Community Care (Delayed Discharges etc.) Act 2003 has established a system of reimbursement, fully operational from January 2004, that provides an incentive for councils and health bodies to work closer together to reduce delays. Continued reductions in the levels of delayed discharges are therefore expected.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the national delayed discharges figures for each quarter in 2002–03. [129845]

Dr. Ladyman [holding answer 15 September 2003]: Delayed discharge figures for each quarter of 2002–03 have been published and are available in the Library.

E.coli

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance he has issued to the public on the risk of contracting E.coli while camping. [128927]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Chief Medical Officer, Professor Sir Liam Donaldson in his Annual Report for 2001 alerted the public to the risks of contracting Escherichia coli 0157 infection and provided advice as to how to avoid infection.

The Department of Health works in close collaboration with other Government Departments, particularly the Health and Safety Executive (HSE), the Food Standards Agency (FSA), the Department for the Environment, Food and Rural Affairs and with the Scottish Executive in providing to the public, to farmers and others responsible for farmland that might be used for recreational purposes, information on the risks of E.coli 0157 and how to avoid infection.

Following the recommendations of the joint FSA/Scottish Executive Task Force on E.coli 0157 relating to access to and use of rural land, advice was issued nationally in 2001 by the Scottish Executive to relevant organisations, including the National Farmers Union, the National Scout Association and the Guide Association on how to avoid ill health during recreation on farmland. This advice was re-issued in 2003.

The key points of this advice are that where possible, fields used for grazing or stockholding of animals should not be used for camping, picnicking, or play areas.

If fields that have been used for grazing or stockholding animals are to be used for recreational purposes, the following precautions should be taken:

keep farm animals off the fields for the three weeks prior to and during the event/use; remove any visible dung/faeces—preferably at the beginning of the three week period; mow the grass—keep it short and remove the clippings before fields are used for recreation; inform leaders of recreational/leisure groups (for example scouts, guides etc.) of the need for good hygiene practice (such as hand washing) and to treat drinking or personal washing water taken from streams.

The HSE produced specific guidance to farmers on how to avoid the risks from E.coli 0157 infection associated with recreational use of farmland and issued press notices to remind farmers and others responsible for farmland of this guidance in 2001. This guidance supplemented existing guidance, revised in 2001, for farmers contained in the HSE's Agricultural Information Sheet 23 "Avoiding ill health at open farms". The HSE has also produced a video which highlights the risk of contamination from farm animals, buildings and equipment and advises on the need for good hygiene and the importance of hand washing before eating and drinking in preventing infection with E.coli 0157. The advice and the video are available on the HSE's website.

The Department of Health disseminated this advice through the website www. wiredforhealth.gov.uk.

Advice for the public on the importance of handwashing prior to eating or drinking in preventing E.coli 0157 infection is reinforced through the FSA's five year Food Hygiene Campaign which reiterates seasonal food safety messages at regular intervals.

Ehlers-Danlos Syndrome

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what (a) research effort and (b) clinical specialism is provided by the NHS to help sufferers from Ehlers-Danlos Syndrome; and if he will make a statement. [131441]

Dr. Ladyman: The Department keeps its priorities for research under review. Priorities for departmental research and development support for the development of policy are determined through discussion with policy colleagues and Ministers. In the national health service, priorities are identified through widespread consultation with those using, delivering and managing services. They take account of the burden of disease, potential benefits and departmental objectives, as well as the responsibilities and work of other funders—including the charities.

The Medical Research Council (MRC) is not currently funding any research into Ehlers-Danlos syndrome, though it does fund a number of research projects into connective tissue and also into collagen physiology. The MRC always welcomes high quality applications for support into any aspect of human health and these are judged in open competition with other demands on funding. Awards are made according to their scientific quality and importance to human health.

The provision of treatment for Ehlers-Danlos syndrome patients is part of the responsibility of health authorities. They must make arrangements for the health of their populations, as they are closest to the people they serve and so best placed to respond sensitively to their needs. People with Ehlers-Danlos syndrome have access to a range of specialists depending on the individual diagnosis. These include orthopaedic surgeons, rheumatologists, cardiologists, vascular surgeons, neurosurgeons, dermatologists and clinical geneticists.

Epsom and St. Helier Hospitals

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff, broken down by grade, work in the accident and emergency departments at (a) Epsom and (b) St Helier hospitals. [131633]

Mr. Hutton: Data are only collected at national health service trust level. The following table shows hospital medical staff within the accident and emergency speciality by grade in Epsom and St Helier NHS Trust.

Hospital medical staff within the accident and emergency specialty by grade in Epsom and St Helier NHS Trust

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assumptions were made in reaching the figure of £340 million capital spend in Option 4 of the Strategic Outline Case for the Epsom and St Helier Clinical Services Strategy. [131634]

Mr. Hutton: This is a matter for south west London strategic health authority (SHA) and Surrey and Sussex SHA. I understand the latest position is that a strategic outline case for an Epsom and St Helier clinical services strategy is still to be finalised.

All the assumptions will be tested carefully before a decision is taken on how best to take the scheme forward.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the number of patients treated in the accident and emergency departments of Epsom and St Helier hospitals in each of the past 24 months. [131635]

Mr. Hutton: Information on the number of patients treated in the accident and emergency (A&E) department of Epsom and St Helier Hospitals is not collected centrally.

Attendances at A&E departments, minor injury units and walk in centres, Epsom and St Helier national health service Trust for the period second quarter, 2001–02, to first quarter, 2003–04, is shown in the table as the closest available data. This information is collected on a quarterly rather than monthly basis.

Eye Tests

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to encourage more regular and thorough eye tests for children to check for cancers, with particular reference to retinoblastoma. [131224]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Doctors and opticians who test sight have a duty to undertake an examination of the eye and perform whatever tests they feel are necessary at the time. The examination undertaken has the purpose of detecting signs of injury, disease or abnormality in the eye and the doctors or opticians carrying them out will be aware of retinoblastoma and the signs to look for on the retina.

Free sight tests are available under the National Health Service to large parts of the population, including all children and those aged 16–18 in full-time education. Sight tests are the ideal opportunity to review all aspects of eye health, including investigations for signs of disease. In 2001–02, 9.8 million NHS sight tests were paid for by health authorities. 2.4 million of those were for children.

We have promoted a system of child health and development checks. The programme of home visiting and community development makes an important contribution to many areas of health education and fosters the early detection of problems, including those associated with eye sight in young pre-school children. The programme also provides the opportunity to develop closer relationships between the family and the primary care team. Work on developing the children's national service framework continues and the healthy child module will take into account the views expressed by the National Screening Committee (Children's Sub-Group) on the need for child eye screening.

Fluoride

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the cost of (a) providing fluoride to children through milk and (b) disbursing fluoride via the water supply. [131472]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The cost of implementing the seven trial milk fluoridation schemes under way in the United Kingdom has been relatively modest, due to the fact that existing school milk programmes have been utilised. The actual cost of fluoridating milk is minimal and in most schemes has been absorbed by the dairy. About one half day a week of an oral health promotion officer's time is required to administer each scheme. Information is not yet available to make any reliable estimates of the costs and cost effectiveness of any national scheme using fluoridated milk to tackle oral health inequalities.

The cost of fluoridating water varies depending on the scale of schemes. Experience from current schemes indicates running costs, which are borne by health authorities, of about 40 pence per head of population per year.

Food Poisoning

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what work his Department is undertaking to develop a vaccine against campylobacter. [130082]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Department of Health is not commissioning studies at present on vaccines against campylobacter. However, we know that the Biotechnology and Biological Sciences Research Council (BBSRC) is funding some research on campylobacter to understand more about this organism.

Free Fruit Scheme

Joyce Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement about the operation of the free fruit scheme in schools; [131876]

(2) what plans he has to extend the free fruit scheme for schools in the North East of England. [131880]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Following successful small-scale pilots in 2000 and 2001, the national school fruit scheme has been introduced over the last 18 months in four whole regions in England: the West Midlands, London, the North West and the East Midlands. The next region due to join will be the North East, starting in spring 2004. These region-wide pilots, which have been supported by £42 million from the lottery-funded New Opportunities Fund, will be evaluated to establish the impact on children's diets and the practicalities of the scheme, before rolling out nationally later in 2004.

General Social Care Council

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much central Government funding is given to the General Social Care Council; and how many staff it employs. [131543]

Dr. Ladyman: The General Social Care Council (GSCC) will receive £15,195,000 in operating grant for the financial year 2003–04. The GSCC currently employs 119 members of staff: 113 full-time and six part-time.

The total grant is £55,482,000, which also includes training support of £10,697,000 and student bursaries of £27,826,000. The last two amounts are Department monies, which are administered by the GSCC, ring-fenced for their specified use and do not form any part of their operational costs.

GP Referrals

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of GP referrals which were lost in the NHS system in the last year for which figures are available. [131508]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Grants

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the grants made to outside bodies under the Section 64 general grants scheme; and the value of each grant. [129594]

Dr. Ladyman: The information about the grants approved for award in April 2003 for the year 2003–04 under the Section 64 General Scheme has been placed in the Library.

The total amount was £21,451,211.

Core grants are awarded as a contribution to an organisation's central administrative costs. "New" core grants are awards to organisations that have not had core funding previously, or after a break of not less than one year. "Renewal" core grants are awards to those organisations that have previously received core funding.

Voluntary and community sector organisations have a range of expertise and knowledge of issues in their particular fields, which enables them to make a unique contribution to the development and delivery of services to NHS patients and their carers.

Group B Streptococcus

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what research his Department has conducted into group B streptococcus testing during pregnancy; [131562]

(2) what advice his Department has given to health care professionals on Group B streptococcus testing during pregnancy; [131563]

(3) if he will make it his policy to provide Group B streptococcus testing on the NHS near the end of pregnancy; and if he will make a statement. [131564]

Dr. Ladyman: The UK National Screening Committee (NSC) makes recommendations to Ministers on all aspects of screening programmes. There is insufficient evidence to demonstrate that routine screening of all pregnant women in the United Kingdom and the treating of those carrying group B streptococcus with intravenous antibiotics during labour would be beneficial. The NSC has commissioned a further assessment of the existing evidence on screening against the criteria used to assess potential screening programmes. At the adjournment debate on this issue on 9 July 2003, Ministers asked the NSC to review the position thoroughly as quickly as possible and to consider recommendations at its meeting in December 2003.

The health technology assessment (HTA) programme considers research into screening for group B streptococcus to be a high priority for further research, add it will consider commissioning further research in more detail at its December meeting. The HTA programme is also currently considering detailed proposals for research into the effectiveness of a rapid test for group B streptococcus carriage that could be used during labour.

The Royal College of Obstetricians (RCOG) is producing clinical guidelines on prevention and treatment of early onset neonatal group B streptococcal disease. The Department has commissioned the National Institute for Clinical Excellence to produce guidelines, due in October 2003, on routine ante-natal care. These will both make an important contribution to ensuring that healthcare professionals are better informed about this condition.

Harefield Hospital

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the last survey was conducted on staff attitudes at Harefield Hospital to the proposed move to Paddington Heath Campus; and if he will publish the results. [131864]

Mr. Hutton: Staff retention and recruitment is a major priority in the planning process for the Paddington Health Campus. The most recent Harefield staff survey was conducted by the Royal Brompton and Harefield National Health Service Trust in February 2003. This is a trust document and a copy is available from them on request.

Hospital Financing

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his Answer of 10 June 2003, Official Report, column 835W, on hospital financing, what additional powers foundation trusts will have to enter into joint venture arrangements compared to (a) other NHS organisations and (b) local authorities' social services departments; and if he will make a statement on the reasons for differences. [120150]

Mr. Hutton: Subject to legislation, a national health service foundation trust will be able to enter into joint arrangements with local authorities social services departments where such arrangements are consistent with its primary purpose and terms of authorisation. This will allow for the organisation concerned to determine locally what the arrangements should be and is consistent with the Government's policy of decentralisation.

Under current arrangements, NHS trusts can only enter into joint arrangements with private bodies in circumstances specified in directions given by the Secretary of State, and with his consent. While NHS foundation trusts are not subject to directions given by the Secretary of State, and do not require his consent before entering into joint ventures (including the setting up of companies), they have no greater powers to do so than current NHS trusts.

Inpatients (Length of Stay)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average length of stay of in-patients admitted as (a) emergencies and (b) elective was in each of the last five years broken down by age. [131632]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is shown in the table.

Lung Disease

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans there are for a national service framework on lung disease; and if he will make a statement. [131775]

Miss Melanie Johnson: There are no plans for a national service framework (NSF). We are, however, taking steps to improve services for people with lung disease. The children's NSF will include childhood asthma as an exemplar condition. The NSF for chronic heart disease already has a reduction in cigarette smoking as one of its major targets. We have also banned tobacco advertising and made smoking reduction aids available on national health service prescription.

Additionally we have asked the National Institute for Clinical Excellence to prepare guidelines for the management and diagnosis of chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD). We expect this guidance to be produced in 2004. Also, phase three of the national primary care collaborative (NPCC) focuses on chronic disease management, in particular COPD and diabetic care. The programme, which will be rolled out to every primary care trust (PCT) in the country by April 2004, will support frontline NHS staff and primary care trust managers and will involve 20 PCTs and more than 100 general practitioner practices. It will help them to develop skills and techniques to deliver improvements in care and work with patients to maximise their self-care and help improve outcomes.

Medicine and Management

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what actions he is taking following the report of the joint clinician/manager working group entitled Medicine and Management. [127733]

Mr. Hutton: The Chief Medical Officer is taking forward this important area of work, working closely with patients' organisations and those responsible for standards in the medical profession.

It is expected this work will be completed in early 2004.

Methotrexate

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the (a) availability and (b) side effects of methotrexate. [127554]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Methotrexate is a prescription only medicine widely available throughout the United Kingdom. The use of this disease-modifying anti-rheumatic drug (DMARD) has increased in recent years. The National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) has recommended the use of methotrexate and other DMARDs as first line therapy prior to the use of the newer tumour necrosis factor (TNF-a) blockers for the treatment of rheumatoid arthritis (RA).

As with all medicines the Medicines and Healthcare products Regulatory Agency (MHRA) and the Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM) have continued to closely monitor the safe use of methotrexate. Reports of suspected adverse drug reactions (ADRs) to medicines are collected by the MHRA and the CSM through the spontaneous reporting scheme, the Yellow Card Scheme. To date the MHRA/CSM have received 876 UK ADR reports associated with methotrexate. The most common side effects of methotrexate include nausea, abdominal pain, a reduced number of white blood cells and soreness of the mouth and lips. Other rare but more serious side effects include fibrosis and cirrhosis of the liver, bone marrow suppression and pneumonitis.

In 1997 the product information was amended to advise that patients who receive methotrexate therapy are required to have a full blood count and renal and liver function tests measured on a regular basis. An article was also published in the MHRA/CSM drug safety bulletin "Current Problems in Pharmacovigilance (Vol. 23, September 1997).

In September 2000 health professionals were advised, via another article in "Current Problems in Pharmacovigilance" (Vol. 26 September 2000), to exercise caution when prescribing and dispensing methotrexate. In 2001 the CSM established a working group to review medicines labelling in order to reduce the likelihood of medication error occurring and within the review advised that all oral dose preparations should prominently display a warning to check the dose and frequency of methotrexate on the front face of the carton.

In September 2002 the CSM reviewed the increasing number of UK reports of pneumonitis which had been received by the MHRA in association with methotrexate. The CSM recommended updating the product information to provide clearer guidance to prescribers and patients, recognising that the increase was probably a direct consequence of the recent dramatic increase in methotrexate use in patients with early RA. The MHRA is continuing to work closely with the National Patient Safety Agency to reduce the risk of medication errors associated with methotrexate.

Midwifery (Essex)

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action is he taking to fill vacancies for midwives in the area of the Essex Rivers Healthcare Trust; and if he will make a statement. [131613]

Dr. Ladyman: Essex Rivers Healthcare National Health Service Trust has embarked on a recruitment campaign to obtain more midwives and expects to appoint five whole time equivalent midwives in the near future.

A range of recruitment, retention and returner initiatives are in place to facilitate the NHS meeting the increase of 2,000 midwives by 2006. The NHS is striving to be an employer of choice and is in the process of developing and implementing modern recruitment practices. We are committed to increasing the numbers of midwives working in the NHS in order to expand service provision.

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many vacancies there are for midwives in the (a) Essex strategic health authority area and (b) Essex Rivers healthcare trust. [131612]

Dr. Ladyman: The total number of vacancies for midwives is not recorded centrally. However, the number of three month vacancies for registered midwives in the Essex strategic health authority area, as at 31 March 2003, is 16. Of these, three were within Essex Rivers healthcare national health service trust.

MRI Scans

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people are eligible through the Berkshire Choice pilot for MRI scans. [131029]

Mr. Hutton: The Berkshire Choice Pilot in its first phase focused on patients waiting longer than six months including access to mirror resonance imaging (MRI) scans at the Royal Berkshire and Battle Hospital. Last year an additional 40 orthopaedic patients received MRI scans.

This year, the average waiting time for MRI scans is no more than four to six weeks with no patients waiting more than six months. Due to the reduction in waiting times, no patients are currently eligible through the Berkshire Choice Pilot for MRI scans.

NHS Appointments Commission

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the current appointment criteria used by the NHS Appointments Commission are for appointment to the positions of NHS trust (a) chairman, (b) chief executive and (c) board member; and whether these criteria have changed in the last two years. [131700]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The criteria for the appointment of chairs and non-executive directors to national health service boards have been placed in the Library. The only change made to the criteria over the last two years has been to reduce the time commitment expected of non-executives to 2.5 days per month. The reduction is in line with recommendations made in 'Governing the NHS—A guide for NHS Boards', which was jointly published by the Department and the NHS Appointments Commission in June 2003. A copy of the guide has also been placed in the Library.

Chief executives are appointed by the chair and non-executives of NHS boards, not by the NHS Appointments Commission.

NHS Land (Colchester)

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last discussed with the Secretary of State for Transport the proposed junction of the Colchester Northern Approach Road and the A12 and the sale of surplus NHS land in the area; and if he will make a statement. [131820]

Mr. Hutton: My right hon. Friend has had no discussions with the Secretary of State for Transport on these specific issues.

NHSnet

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he proposes to link pharmacies to NHSnet. [131426]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The current contract for NHSnet is due to expire next year. It would be inappropriate to negotiate any amendment to this at the present time to enable community pharmacies to gain connectivity. The model of connectivity needs to take into account future requirements that may arise out of our wish to see community pharmacists as a more integrated part of the national health service, services that they may provide under the new community pharmacy contract currently under discussion and delivery of the national prescription service target outlined in "Delivering 21st Century IT Support for the NHS". The N3 networking project, which is responsible for procuring a successor network to NHSnet, is currently considering which N3 services could help meet these community pharmacy connectivity requirements.

Paddington Health Campus

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what stage of the statutory planning process the Paddington Health Campus is at. [131865]

Mr. Hutton: The North West London Strategic Health Authority (SHA) has been working closely with Westminster Council on the scheme. The council gave approval to earlier planning proposals, but more detailed work showed that these would need adapting to meet the new and larger requirements. The SHA has been working on a revised scheme with the Westminster planners and anticipates making a new outline application in the next few weeks.

Prescription Receipts

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of receipts from prescriptions paid for by recipients of incapacity benefit in each of the last five years. [131967]

Ms Rosie Winterton: No information is collected on the financial circumstances of people paying prescription charges. Therefore, no such estimate can be made.

Prisoners' Health

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what information is collected centrally on the health of prisoners; [131894]

(2) if he will set targets to achieve improvements in the health of prisoners; [131895]

(3) if he will make it his policy to collate centrally information regarding prisoner health sufficient to establish baselines from which improvements in performance can be measured. [131896]

Dr. Ladyman: Information is routinely collected centrally on self-harm incidents, suicides and undetermined deaths and information on communicable diseases, such as hepatitis B, in the prison population. Survey work periodically captures further information on specific aspects of prisoner health, such as the prevalence of psychiatric morbidity.

Prisoners are included within the scope of the Government's overall targets for improving the health of the population.

Private Health Care (NHS Referrals)

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many patients have been referred by the NHS in England to private healthcare providers (a) in Wales, (b) in Scotland, (c) in Northern Ireland, (d) in England and (e) abroad in each of the last five years; [131741]

(2) how much money has been spent by the NHS in England to obtain healthcare from private healthcare providers (a) in England, (b) in Wales, (c) in Scotland, (d) in Northern Ireland and (e) abroad in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [131743]

Mr. Hutton: This information is not held centrally, but we are embarking on a major capacity expansion programme including development of treatment centres run by the independent sector.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria is used by the NHS in England to decide when to refer a patient to a private healthcare provider for treatment. [131742]

Mr. Hutton: The Department has not set any criteria centrally to be used when referring national health service patients for treatment to private healthcare providers. Such decisions are taken locally by primary care trusts (PCTs). In such circumstances, the criteria applied by PCTs and under centrally funded choice pilots would usually include the length of time patients have waited, their clinical appropriateness and fitness for referral to an independent provider and value for money (taking into account the availability of alternative capacity). These criteria would also apply to referrals to the new independent sector treatment centres which we are procuring currently but in addition, these will be supplemented by clear clinical pathways, building on those developed as part of the London patient choice project.

Royal Shrewsbury Hospital (Finances)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the forecast overspend for the Royal Shrewsbury Hospital is for financial year 2003–04. [132293]

Dr. Ladyman: The Royal Shrewsbury Hospitals National Health Service Trust merged with the Princess Royal Hospital NHS Trust on 1 October 2003. The newly formed Shrewsbury and Telford Hospital NHS Trust is expected to fulfil its financial obligations.

All NHS trusts have been asked to plan for and achieve financial balance in 2003–04. Audited information for all NHS trusts will be published in their individual annual accounts and will be available centrally in autumn 2004.

Silverlands (Chertsey)

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the cost of converting Silverlands in Chertsey for use as a nurses' home. [131507]

Mr. Hutton: Discussions are taking place with housing associations for the conversion of Silverlands in Chertsey for use as residential accommodation for nurses and other national health service key-workers employed in the area. It is not anticipated that there will be any cost to the NHS for this conversion, as this will be borne by the housing association.

Single Sex Accommodation

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to publish the names of NHS trusts which have not met government standards for (a) single sex accommodation and (b) separate lavatory and washing facilities; and whether West Suffolk Hospital NHS Trust has reached these standards. [131625]

Mr. Hutton: The elimination of mixed sex accommodation is one of a number of indicators that determined the performance rating for national health service trusts in 2002–03. Details of the performance ratings, including figures for each NHS trust, are published by the Commission for Health Improvement.

West Suffolk Hospitals NHS Trust is fully compliant with single-sex accommodation objectives. A small number of hospitals have yet to achieve these objectives on every ward. This is because a number of new hospitals and healthcare facilities are currently in construction, which will on completion bring all wards to the required standards.

Smoking

Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many new smokers there were (a) under and (b) over 21 in each year since 1997. [131667]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information is not available in the form requested.

In 2001, the General Household Survey's analysis of regular smokers found that 85 per cent. of men and 79 per cent. of women began smoking regularly when aged 19 or less. 15 per cent. of men and 21 per cent. of women began regular smoking aged 20 or more.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps the Government are taking to increase smoking cessation services to Asian men. [130061]

Miss Melanie Johnson: As announced in the NHS Cancer Plan the Department is funding a network of local alliances for action on smoking. These alliances form the bridge between treatment services and local authorities, community groups, businesses, schools, churches etc. and will work with the most deprived sections of their communities to make a difference.

Some local alliances, with Asian communities in their areas, are working to raise the awareness of the risk of smoking for example producing materials in ethnic languages, holding events in community centres and encouraging people to use their local cessation services.

NHS stop smoking services are now well established across England, and are achieving good results. At a local level the services target their local ethnic minority populations. The services are available to help all smokers who want to stop. The services provide counselling and support to smokers in a variety of settings in primary or secondary care, and in the community, to complement the provision of smoking cessation aids such as nicotine replacement therapy (NRT) and bupropion (Zyban).

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans his Department has to introduce legislation to ban smoking in sporting venues. [130170]

Miss Melanie Johnson: We will continue to encourage the voluntary establishment of smoke-free public places, including sporting venues.

Social Services (Elderly People)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on provision of social services to the elderly. [131482]

Dr. Ladyman: The Government are committed to improving access to health and social care services for older people. Examples include: enhanced cataract services; free national health service sight tests; free influenza immunisation; immediate access to information and advice through NHS Direct; the national service framework (NSF) for older people; and guidance on eligibility for adult social care—"Fair Access to Care Services". The then Secretary of State for Health, my right hon. Friend the Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) confirmed the Government's commitment to improving health and social care for older people in a statement to the House on 23 July 2002. He announced an overall figure of £1 billion for older people by 2006. Two thirds of the £1 billion will be ring-fenced for specific older people's services.

The Government are committed to local health and social care services planning and working more closely together in respect of older people's services. It is important for agencies to be clear in their respective responsibilities. Regulations that permit health and social care services to pool resources or otherwise jointly commission or provide services, will help localities deliver integrated care.

The Government are committed to ensuring that standards of health and social services are as high as possible, and variations in levels and quality of service throughout the country are minimised. The NSF for older people and the introduction of national minimum standards for specific services are key policy developments in this regard.

The Government have introduced an independent and more consistent system for the inspection and regulation of residential care and nursing homes, and for the regulation of domiciliary care agencies. The National Care Standards Commission became fully operational on 1 April 2002.

The Government emphasise that health and social care services should be shaped around an individual's needs and not the other way round. Guidance on the single assessment process, published in January 2002, will place older people at the heart of the assessment of their needs and subsequent service planning and delivery.

Unfair age discrimination in health and social care is not to be tolerated and will be addressed by the age-related policy audits introduced in the NSF for older people and "Fair Access to Care Services".

The Government want health and social care services to be more responsive to the needs of older people from minority ethnic backgrounds. In social care, the project, "Developing services for minority ethnic older people", is demonstrating how services can be improved.

The Government recognise that health and social care needs are often best understood and addressed in the context of other needs such as those for housing, lifelong learning and adequate income. For example, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and the Department of Health published a strategic framework, "Quality and Choice for Older People's Housing", in 2001.

The Government are committed to preventing and tackling abuse of older people in any form. Multi-agency codes of practice are now required from health and social care services. Additionally the Department of Health will establish a Protection of Vulnerable Adults list, which will comprise of a list of people judged unsuitable to work with vulnerable adults in the care sector.

Specialist Stroke Units

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage he estimates of the specialist stroke units in operation by April 2004 will be fully operational and staffed. [131213]

Dr. Ladyman: We monitor progress against the key milestones in the national service framework (NSF) for older people. From the information gathered so far, we know that 83 per cent. of the hospitals which have replied now have plans to have a specialist stroke service in place by April 2004.

Our document, "Improvement, Expansion and Reform", which sets for the national health service a priorities and planning framework for 2003–06, makes clear that implementation of the NSF is a top priority and that the 2004 milestone around specialist stroke services is a key target.

PRIME MINISTER

International Treaties

Mr. Shepherd: To ask the Prime Minister pursuant to the statement of 16 September by the Foreign Secretary, Official Report, column 794, when it became Government policy that international treaties take primacy over national laws; and if he will make a statement. [131483]

The Prime Minister: It is an established principle of international law that a State may not plead its national law to escape its international law obligations, including its treaty obligations. As a matter of UK constitutional law, international treaties have effect in UK national law to the extent that they have been implemented in national law. The UK has given effect to the principle of the primacy of Community law through the European Communities Act 1972.

Iraq

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his practice to circulate to all Cabinet members papers relating to Iraq. [131682]

The Prime Minister: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to disclose details of the circulation of Cabinet papers in line with exemption 2 of Part 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

IT Contracts

Mr. Flight: To ask the Prime Minister how many outsourced IT contracts have been signed by his Department in each year since 1997; how much each of these contracts is worth; with whom they are signed; how many have been renegotiated; how many are still in place; and if he will make a statement. [126202]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office gave him on 6 October 2003, Official Report, column 998–99W.

CABINET OFFICE

Executive Agencies

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many executive agencies have been established since 1997. [131542]

Mr. Alexander: Thirty-nine executive agencies have been established since 1997.

Further information on existing agencies and former agencies can be found on the website http://www.cabinet-office.gov.uk/agencies-publicbodies under 'Executive Agencies and Non Ministerial Departments'.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

India-United Kingdom

15. Mr. Pound: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on bilateral diplomatic relations between the United Kingdom and India. [132012]

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the bilateral India-United Kingdom relationship. [132002]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Our relations with the Indian Government are now closer than they have been for a long time across a broad range of policy areas. UK development assistance will increase over the next two years (to £300 million). And there has been a marked increase in bilateral trade (£5 billion in 2001).

Libya

16. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with Libya. [132013]

17. Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on future UK-Libya relations. [132014]

Mr. Rammell: The United Kingdom has had full diplomatic relations with Libya since July 1999 and we continue to engage with the Libyans on areas of mutual interest and concern.

Burma

18. Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further measures he will take against the military Government in Burma to seek to compel them to release the NLD leadership and to take steps towards democracy. [132015]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We are working closely with our EU and Asian partners and in the UN to bring pressure to bear on the regime for political change in Burma. We are considering carefully with our EU partners what further targeted measures could be taken if the Burmese regime does not fully release the NLD leadership and take genuine steps towards democracy.

Iraq

19. Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress in the search for weapons of mass destruction in Iraq. [132016]

Mr. MacShane: David Kay, the senior CIA officer in the Iraq Survey Group presented an interim report on the activities of the group to a number of Congressional committees on 2 October. According to his report the ISG has produced further conclusive and incontrovertible evidence that the Saddam regime was indeed in breach of UNSCR 1441.

The ISG has discovered "dozens of WMD-related programme activities and significant amounts of equipment that Iraq concealed from the United Nations during the inspections that began in late 2002".

23. Tony Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of progress with reconstruction in Iraq. [132020]

Mr. Rammell: Good progress is being made with meeting immediate reconstruction needs in Iraq. Electricity generation has returned to pre-war levels, and oil production has recovered to 2 million barrels per day. The key economic institutions are being rebuilt, including the Central bank of Iraq which now has independence over key decisions. A budget has been agreed for 2003, Iraqi Ministries are planning their budgets for 2004, new bank notes are being distributed to replace the discredited Saddam Dinar, and a legal framework for commercial activity is being created. Iraq's longer-term reconstruction needs, arising from decades of misrule under Saddam, will be addressed at the international donors' conference in Madrid on 23–24 October.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to his Department over possible Turkish military deployment in Iraq; who raised these concerns; and if he will make a statement. [131442]

Mr. Rammell: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and FCO and MOD officials have discussed a possible Turkish military deployment to Iraq with representatives of the Turkish Government and with the Iraqi Governing Council (IGC).

We welcome the generous offer of Turkish troops, and the vote in the Turkish Parliament to approve this in principle. The practicalities of the potential deployment are a matter for the US and the Turkish Governments, taking into full consideration local sensitivities, including those raised by the IGC.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions his Department has had concerning the possibility of Turkish military deployment in Iraq; where these discussions took place; who initiated these discussions; and if he will make a statement. [131443]

Mr. Rammell: The UK has a regular dialogue with the Turkish Government on matters relating to Iraq, including a possible military deployment. On 25 September, Turkish Foreign Minister, Abdullah Gul gave my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary an update on the situation. The Chief of Defence Staff and my right hon. Friend the Minister for the armed forces also discussed this issue, among others, during their recent visits to Turkey.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many women have been appointed to the preparatory committee working on the drafting of the new Iraqi constitution. [132149]

Mr. Rammell: We were disappointed that no women were appointed to the preparatory constitutional committee. In our discussions with the Governing Council and other Iraqi institutions we continue to stress the importance of women's issues being fully addressed in constitutional discussions to ensure that women are able to play a full role in public life. We are in regular contact with Songul Omar and Dr. Raja Habib Khurzai on the Governing Council and Nesreen Mustafa Sidiq Berwari, the Minister for Public Works.

My noble Friend the Baroness Symons of Vernham Dean met one of the women on the Governing Council, and the one woman Minister, during her recent visit to Baghdad.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many senior advisers from western countries have been appointed to work with Iraqi Ministers; and how many are women. [132151]

Mr. Rammell: At present there are 21 senior advisers from western countries that provide help to all 25 Iraqi Ministries. Three are women who work with the Ministries of Foreign Affairs and Displaced Persons, Trade, and Human Rights.

European Constitution

20. Mr. Cameron: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) EU member states and (b) applicant states plan to hold a referendum on the proposed European constitution; and if he will make a statement. [132017]

Mr. MacShane: A new EU treaty would need to be ratified according to the individual political and constitutional traditions of each of the member states. Current and future member states would be in exactly the same position: all 25 would have to ratify before a new treaty could come into effect. Four member states have formally declared that they will hold a referendum on the outcome of the Intergovernmental Conference (IGC): Denmark, Ireland, Luxembourg and Spain. Most countries have yet to make a decision. In the UK, EU treaties are only ratified after scrutiny and approval by Parliament, as has been the case with all previous treaties modifying the founding treaties of the EU.

Israel

21. Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Israeli Government concerning military action outside their borders. [132018]

Mr. Rammell: The Prime Minister's foreign policy adviser expressed the Government's concern to the Government of Israel about military actions, including in Syria, during his recent visit to the region. We recognise Israel's justified anger at suicide bombings, the latest one killing 19 in Haifa on 4 October. We urge all sides to exercise restraint. It is imperative that they recognise the implications for regional stability of the continuing use of force, and that only a political solution can deliver a comprehensive, lasting peace in the Middle East.

Zimbabwe

22. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the situation in Zimbabwe. [132019]

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the human rights situation in Zimbabwe. [132022]

Mr. Mullin: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Macclesfield (Sir Nicholas Winterton), Official Report, column 20.

Afghanistan

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he is taking to help ensure that the Afghanistan elections in June 2004 are free and fair. [127130]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We welcome the establishment on 26 July of the Afghan Interim Management Body. We are encouraging the Transitional Administration to ensure the necessary preparations are made for free and fair elections, including a law on political parties to encourage the formation of national political groupings which renounce violence and espouse democratic principles.

£1 million of DFID funds and a further £2 million of joint FCO/DFID/MOD funding has been allocated so far to support the United Nations programme for voter registration in Afghanistan. We are also working with the European Commission to secure further support for Afghanistan's electoral process.

British Aerospace

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether British Aerospace sought or obtained clearance from his Department for payment of agency commission in connection with the sale of defence equipment to Qatar. [132366]

Mr. Rammell: I am not aware that British Aerospace has ever sought or obtained clearance from the FCO for payment of agency commission in connection with the sale of defence equipment to Qatar.

Indian High Commission Visa Service

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received concerning the Indian High Commission's visa services in the UK. [131750]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I am advised that officials have no record of representations concerning the Indian High Commission visa service in the UK.

International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions (a) he and (b) members of his Department have had with representatives of the US Administration concerning the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. [131531]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Neither my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary, nor officials have had recent discussions with the US Administration specifically about the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (ICESCR). The Foreign and Commonwealth Office does, however, have regular contact with the US Administration on human rights issues, including economic and social rights. Our discussions at official level in the margins of the UN General Assembly Third Committee and the annual Commission on Human Rights in Geneva include a range of discussions on economic and social rights.

Pitcairn Island

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements there are for hearing Pitcairn Island criminal cases in New Zealand. [131403]

Mr. Rammell: On the advice of the Pitcairn Chief Justice, the Governor of Pitcairn signed an order on 28 March granting authority for criminal legal proceedings to take place in New Zealand. Necessary legislation has been passed by the New Zealand Parliament to enable such trials to be held in New Zealand under Pitcairn law. A final decision on the venue for trials in individual cases is however a matter for the Pitcairn Supreme courts.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Bosnia

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many (a) casualties and (b) injuries in Bosnia were directly attributable to (i) mines, (ii) de-mining activities and (iii) cluster bomb submunition in each year since 1997; and if he will make a statement. [131793]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: According to "Landmine Monitor" the casualties recorded in the following table were landmine/UXO casualties in Bosnia and Herzegovina. DFID does not have figures for victims of cluster munitions nor can we disaggregate mine victims from victims of demining accidents.

	Number of casualties
1997	290
1998	149
1999	95
2000	100
2001	87
1 January 2002 to 30 June 2003	72

Cancun Conference

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development which Ministers attended the World Trade Organisation meetings in Cancun; how many (a) advisers and (b) staff accompanied them; at which hotel Ministers and their advisers stayed in Cancun; what the total cost of (i) hotel rooms and (ii) expenses was; in which aeroplane class advisers attending the World Trade Organisation meetings in Cancun travelled; and what the total cost of their flights was. [129728]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have been asked to reply.

In addition to myself, my right hon. Friends, the Secretaries of State for Trade and Industry, Environment, Food and Rural Affairs and my noble Friend, the Secretary of State for the International Development attended the 5th WTO Ministerial Conference held in Cancun in September 2003. The length of stays varied.

We were accompanied by 32 civil servants from the five Government Departments involved and by five advisers from the CBI, the TUC, NGO's and Parliament. Other Members of Parliament attended and assisted with advice.

Ministers and part of the delegation stayed in the Fiesta Americana Coral Beach Hotel, where the EU delegation and others were based. The remainder stayed at the Hotel Riu.

The majority of civil servants travelled via a European Commission charter flight, for which special discount fares were negotiated. Ministers were accompanied on their flights by a small team of support staff, some of whom travelled in the same class as Ministers.

Final accounts for the WTO ministerial are not currently available, and could be produced only at disproportionate cost at this stage. Once the costs have been finalised, we will inform the House.

Darfur

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment the Department has made of human rights abuses in Darfur; what recent assessment has been made of their effect on the human rights situation in Sudan; and if he will make a statement. [131799]

Hilary Benn: We are concerned about the human rights of the people of Sudan, including in Darfur. We continue to raise specific human rights cases in Darfur relating to the rights of minors and women and the application of the death penalty with the Government of Sudan as part of the EU/Sudan dialogue. In July, a member of the British embassy in Khartoum visited Nyala, South Darfur, and held meetings with the Wali, the South Darfur Security Committee, the Chief Judge, the Commissioner of Nyala, and Fur Tribal leaders. He also toured the prison. We are also supporting human rights monitoring and human rights awareness projects in Darfur through the Human Rights Project Fund.

The Secretary of State welcomed the signing on 3 September of a 45-day ceasefire between the Government of Sudan and the Sudan Liberation Army and the launch of the UN Greater Darfur Initiative (UNDGI) which we hope will enable the provision of basic services and help to address basic human rights. The UK has pledged £1 million to UNDGI.

Euro

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much has been spent in each year by his Department in preparing for UK entry to the euro; how much his Department plans to spend on preparations for UK entry to the euro for each year from the current financial year up to and including 2005–06; and what estimates he has made of the total costs to his Department of changeover to the European Single Currency. [131596]

Hilary Benn: Approximately £55,000 will have been spent this year on consultancy costs. These are the only separately identifiable costs incurred since 1999. Other costs comprise modest internal staff time and ensuring that IT system developments are euro compatible; these cannot be separately identified but are likely to have been modest. The costs of conversion in the event of a positive decision on UK entry are estimated at around £500,000.

Foreign Aid

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how the Government intends to use the funds allocated for trade-related capacity building and technical assistance; over what period it will be spent; what support the Government will give to the G21 nations; and if he will make a statement. [131489]

Hilary Benn: The UK trade related capacity building programme works closely with developing countries, including those in the emerging G21 grouping, to build the skills and knowledge they require to deal with trade issues as they relate to their country's specific needs. The programme will continue to be responsive to emerging developing country concerns. These include the effects of trade-distorting subsidies on West African cotton producers and technical assistance to poorer developing countries on a range of trade-related issues.

The UK programme is delivered through a mixture of bilateral programmes with national governments; contributions to multilateral organisations working on Trade-Related Capacity Building; support to governments and to the private sector. The programme is a rolling one with new initiatives agreed as earlier programmes end. Most of the £160 million allocated to Trade-Related Capacity Building since 1998 will be spent over the next five years, although one programme will not finish until 2010.

The UK TRCB programme includes:

training government officials to analyse trade issues, develop trade policy and negotiate internationally. This can also involve improving systems linked to trade, such as customs and excise; helping governments and the private sector respond to opportunities arising from the multilateral trading system as well as cope with possible negative knock on effects; making sure that trade policy takes into account the impact of trade on the lives of poor people; support to regional trade groups as they work to increase regional trade opportunities;

funding to organisations in Geneva offering legal, analytical and networking support, particularly to those developing countries without representation in Geneva.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much aid the Department is contributing (a) directly, (b) through the EU, (c) through the UN and (d) through other organisations to the Chiapas region of Mexico. [131642]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The Department has no bilateral programme to Mexico, nor are we contributing anything currently to the Chiapas region through the UN or other organisations. The EC are planning future support to the Chiapas region with a €15 million poverty reduction programme, the UK share being 19.7 per cent.

HIV/AIDS Programme

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State, Department for International Development what the aims of the Regional HIV/AIDS Programme of the Southern African Development Co-ordinating Committee are; how much funding has been provided to it by the Department in 2003; what assessment has been made of the Programme since 2002; and if he will make a statement. [131644]

Hilary Benn: In 2000, DFID committed £7.65 million to support the Southern African Development Community's work on HIV/AIDS particularly in Botswana, Namibia, Lesotho and Swaziland. DFID provided about £1.5 million from this commitment before March 2003, and expects to contribute a further £1.25 million during 2003–04. The programme was reviewed in late 2002, and is now focused on promoting management of sexually transmitted infections especially at cross-border sites; strengthening programmes for social marketing of condoms; promoting behaviour change; and increasing capacity of national AIDS programmes.

International Housing Rights

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions he has had since January with representatives of the US Administration concerning international housing rights law; and if he will make a statement. [131627]

Hilary Benn: I have not had any discussions with representatives of the US Administration, concerning international housing rights law, since I rejoined the Department for International Development as Minister of State in May 2003, nor do I currently have any plans to do so. DFID also has no record of contacts, with representatives of the US Administration, concerning international housing rights law.

Liberian Refugees

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assistance the Department (a) has pledged and (b) is providing to Liberian refugees in Guinea; what programmes this assistance is going to; and if he will make a statement. [131643]

Hilary Benn: We contribute £14 million per year to UNHCR although we are not directly supporting refugees from Liberia in Guinea.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment the Department has made of (a) the number, and (b) the impact of refugees from Liberia entering Guinea since April 2003; and if he will make a statement. [131800]

Hilary Benn: Refugees from Liberia have been entering Guinea for many years, fleeing hostilities and hardship. UNHCR report a new influx since 13 September of 4,500 arrivals into south-east Guinea. This brings the total number of Liberian refugees in Guinea to 116,000 refugees. The most recent refugees are temporarily housed in clinics and public buildings at the border, but UNHCR is transferring them away from the border to established refugee camps where they receive all basic services. So far, 1,500 have been transferred.

The total number of refugees in Guinea is significantly reduced from 390,000 at the end of 2000 to 180,000 at the end of 2002 as a result of the improved security situation in Sierra Leone. UNHCR are managing to respond to the needs of the new Liberian refugees although the situation will be closely monitored.

Reproductive Health

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the aims of the sexual and maternal health programme in Malawi are; how much funding has been provided to it by the Department in 2003; what assessment has been made of the programme since 2002; and if he will make a statement. [131640]

Hilary Benn: The aim of reproductive health programmes in Malawi is to improve sexual and reproductive health for all men, women and children especially among the poor and vulnerable groups; and to reduce death and chronic ill health of women as a result of childbirth. DFID's total financial commitment to reproductive health in Malawi is £59.7 million for programmes that are currently being implemented. Of this, £6.7 million was spent in fiscal year 2002–03 and another £5.3 million in the first five months of the current fiscal year.

The Malawi Ministry of Health and Population conducted a joint review in November 2002 with DFID and other development partners of the programmes that they support. The review reported some progress in all activities, but also noted that there were factors beyond the control of the programmes that inhibited progress. These included critical shortage of health personnel, under-resourced working environment, and the rising impact of HIV/AIDS. The international financial institutions and donors including DFID are working with the Malawi Government to address the underlying issues, such as wage policy and macro economic management, that cause the problems affecting the health sector.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much money the Department gave in support of the Russian Family Planning Association in 2003; what percentage that represents of the total expenditure for population reproductive health programmes; if he will list the activities of the Russian Family Planning Association in 2003; and if he will make a statement. [131639]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: DFID has given no money in support of the Russian Family Planning Association (RFPA) in 2003; its last project with the RFPA finished in June 2002 and no further assistance is planned. This therefore represents 0 per cent. of total expenditure for population reproductive health services. The RFPA supports a range of activities on advocacy for reproductive health and rights, including training for health personnel, social workers and teachers and the provision of information and education, particularly for young people, through the development of its network of regional branches.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what population reproductive health programmes are directly run by the Department in (a) Africa, (b) South and Central America, (c) the Middle East, (d) Central and Eastern Europe, (e) Asia and (f) Oceania; what changes have taken place since 2002; and if he will make a statement. [131641]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: A list of projects and programmes over £1 million with a policy marker for reproductive health services or HIV/Aids run by DFID's country or regional programmes is at Annex A. Those started after 2002 are shown in italic.

DFID spent over £270 million on reproductive health and HIV/Aids programmes in financial year 2002–03. We regard reproductive health as an essential and inseparable element of good health. We believe that the best way to deliver this is for people to be given the right, freedom and support necessary to enable them to take full individual and personal control of their own fertility and reproductive health. Reproductive health continues to be a key priority for DFID and we remain firmly committed to the 1994 Cairo International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD) target of achieving access to reproductive health for all by 2015.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much money the Department is giving to the Central American regional programme for improving sexual and reproductive health services; what percentage of the Department's 2003 expenditure for population reproductive health programmes that represents; and if he will make a statement. [131645]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: DFID spent £800,000 from its Central America country and regional programmes in UK financial year 2002–03 on improving reproductive health. In addition DFID provides support for reproductive health through contributions to multilateral organisations and to non-governmental organisations, which cannot be broken down in this way.

DFID spent over £270 million on reproductive health and HIV/AIDS programmes in financial year 2002–03. We regard reproductive health as an essential and inseparable element of good health. We believe that the best way to deliver this is for people to be given the right, freedom and support necessary to enable them to take full individual and personal control of their own fertility and reproductive health. Reproductive health continues to be a key priority for DFID and we remain firmly committed to the 1994 Cairo International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD) target of achieving access to reproductive health for all by 2015.

DFID support for reproductive health is wide ranging. It covers HIV/AIDS programmes, prevention and treatment of sexually transmitted infections and maternal and adolescent health. Reproductive health also encompasses the services for family planning, contraception and childbearing that make an important contribution to increasing women's choice and opportunity and to preventing unplanned or unwanted pregnancy. Family planning services also provide an important opportunity to improve sexual health and in particular to increase women's access to methods that help prevent HIV infection. DFID's total expenditure for 2002–03 cannot therefore be apportioned between HIV/AIDS and Family Planning, as many reproductive health programmes and projects contribute to both objectives (for example through the provision of information on family planning and HIV/AIDS prevention or the provision of condoms).

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much the Department has given to the sexually transmitted disease programme in the Russian Federation in 2003; what percentage of the Department's total expenditure for population reproductive health programmes that represents; and if he will make a statement. [131796]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: DFID has supported four projects related to the control of sexually transmitted diseases in the Russian Federation in financial year 2002–03. A particular priority is the prevention of HIV transmission among vulnerable groups, including injecting drug users and commercial sex workers.

Projects	Purpose	Project allocation	Actual spend in financial year 2002–03
1. Development of a public health-based approach to sexually transmitted diseases and treatment in Samara including Togliatti	To develop sustainable, high-quality STD services in Samara and disseminate successful approaches at federal level; and to reduce HIV transmission and associated risk behaviour among injecting drug users in Togliatti City	1,000,000	115,750
2. Open Health Institute: harm reduction bridging project	To reduce the transmission of HIV among injecting drug users and commercial sex workers in the 43 Open Health Institute-supported harm reduction sites in the Russian Federation	4,200,000	1,396,258
3. Knowledge for Action for HIV/AIDS in the Russian Federation.	To contribute to the knowledge needed to guide effective policy and intervention on HIV prevention in the Russian Federation	1,500,000	228,495
4. Comprehensive partnership strategies for HIV/STI prevention among young people in the Russian Federation	To reduce the incidence of HIV/STIs among young people, especially girls and young women, by ensuring the availability of and access to information, education, health services, counselling for HIV testing and commodities required for young people to develop and exercise effective life skills	1,125,000	38,536

The European Commission, through the TACIS programme, is supporting two large-scale projects on HIV/AIDS prevention:

a) HIV/AIDS Prevention and Combating: the project allocation is Euro 2,500,000;

b) Preventive Health and Education: the project allocation is Euro 3,000,000.

DFID contributes approximately 20 per cent. of these project budgets through its funding to the European Commission.

DFID spent over £270 million on reproductive health and HIV/AIDS programmes in financial year 2002–03. Spending on projects related to these issues in the Russian Federation in the same financial year accounted for less than 1 per cent. of the total.

I refer the hon. Member to my reply to his question ref. 131645 for a general statement of DFID's policies on sexual and reproductive health issues.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the aims are of the HIV/AIDS and reproductive health programme in Zambia; how much funding has been provided to it by his Department in 2003; what assessment has been made of the programme since 2002; and if he will make a statement. [131797]

Hilary Benn: DFID is committed to the fight against HIV/AIDS and to giving people a choice in the number of children they have. Our support for HIV/AIDS and Reproductive Health is wide ranging, covering HIV/AIDS programmes, prevention and treatment of sexually transmitted infections and maternal and adolescent health. Reproductive health also encompasses family planning and contraception services that make an important contribution to increasing women's choice and opportunity, and to preventing unplanned or unwanted pregnancies. DFID has a number of programmes in Zambia, which address these issues.

The DFID Reproductive Health Support Project aims to increase access to, and use of, condoms and contraceptives, and to secure improvements in the availability of family planning services provided at health centres and hospitals. The Project was approved in 2001 and will provide £2.9 million over three years. We expect to spend £1.579 million in financial year 2003–04. Annual DFID internal assessments of the Reproductive Health Support Project have been made and these, and other external reports and surveys, reveal an encouraging increase in accessing reproductive health facilities and commodities.

A new DFID/Zambia HIV/AIDS Programme has just been approved (June 2003). It aims to provide an effective national multi-sectoral response to HIV/AIDS by reducing HIV/STD transmission and the socio-economic impact of the disease. The Programme is supported by many donors. The DFID component of the Programme will provide £20 million over five years. We expect to spend £0.675 million in financial year 2003–04 and £4.265 million in financial year 2004–05.

In addition to the above, DFID provides general support to the health sector in Zambia under a Sector Wide Approach Project (SWAP), which was approved in 2000, and will provide £20 million over six years. We expect to spend £6.068 million in financial year 2003–04.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what sums were donated to the United Nations Family Planning Agency's Contraceptive Commodity Support programme in 2003; and if he will make a statement. [131801]

Hilary Benn: The UK is providing £18 million core funding to UNFPA (United Nations Population Fund) in 2003. This helps to support UNFPA's work to assist developing countries meet reproductive health commodity needs. No new contribution was made by DFID to the UNFPA's Contraceptive Commodity support programme in 2003. Various activities at country level continue to be funded until the end of 2003, utilising the balance from a £25 million one-off contribution to the programme made in January 2001.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much the Department has given to (a) the health and sexual education programme in Bolivia, (b) the Orissa Reproductive Health Project in India and (c) the reproductive health programme in Peru in 2003; what percentage each represents of the Department's expenditure for population reproductive health programmes; and if he will make a statement. [131802]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The following are the figures for bilateral expenditure by DFID on these programmes in UK financial year 2002–03, the latest year for which figures are available:

Programme	£ million
(a) Bolivia Health and Sexual Education Programme	[1]0
(b) Orissa Reproductive Health Project, India	0.6
(c) Peru Reproductive Health Programme	0.1

[1] The programme has been completed.

In addition, the Department spent £0.69 million on Contraceptives Supply and Logistics in Bolivia, £0.13 million on the Andean Reproductive Health Initiative in Bolivia and Peru in 2002–03, £0.11 million on the Strategic Pilot Project in Sexual and Reproductive Health and £0.21 million on the Bolivia Post Abortion Care Project. These figures do not include any support provided through contributions to multilateral or non-governmental organisations, which are not broken clown on a sectoral basis.

DFID spent over £270 million on reproductive health and HIV/AIDS programmes in financial year 2002–03. We regard reproductive health as an essential and inseparable element of good health. We believe that the best way to deliver this is for people to be given the right, freedom and support necessary to enable them to take full individual and personal control of their own fertility and reproductive health. Reproductive health continues to be a key priority for DFID and we remain firmly committed to the 1994 Cairo International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD) target of achieving access to reproductive health for all by 2015.

Sri Lanka

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) how many (a) casualties and (b) injuries were recorded in Sri Lanka due to (i) mines and (ii) de-mining operations in each month since 1997; and if he will make a statement; [131790]

(2) what assistance the Department has provided in each year since 1997 to de-mining operations in Sri Lanka; what de-mining projects in Sri Lanka are directly run by the Department; what assistance the Department has sought from the Ministry of Defence for de-mining operations in Sri Lanka; and if he will make a statement. [131791]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The recorded number of fatalities and injuries caused by land mines in Sri Lanka since 1997 are as follows:

	Fatalities	Injuries
1998	3	70
1999	7	77
2000	18	148
2001	22	179
2002	27	116
2003	11	40
Total	100	735

Since 1997 there has been one recorded casualty resulting from de-mining activities. The significant decrease in injuries and deaths from mines in 2003 is extremely welcome.

DFID has provided support for de-mining operations since the ceasefire between the LTTE and the Government of Sri Lanka came into effect last year. DFID has a two-year agreement with UNDP until the end of 2004 for support to de-mining operations. Under this, £697,000 from the allocated £2.6 million for quick impact activities in the North and East of Sri Lanka will be used to fund the early part of UNDP's 2003–06 mine action programme. This funding was approved in 2002. Further needs assessments are under way and we stand ready to make further commitments if necessary. DFID does not directly run any de-mining projects in Sri Lanka and has therefore not sought technical advice from the Ministry of Defence. However, DFID liaises closely with the Ministry of Defence and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on our development programme to Sri Lanka.

Tanzania

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will monitor aid given to Tanzania to ensure that the Singida region receives assistance in alleviating famine in that area. [131414]

Hilary Benn: DFID has made £60 million available as direct budget support (DBS) to the Government of Tanzania (GoT) in 2003–04 to support its Poverty Reduction Strategy, which includes action on food security. The first tranche of DBS has been released. We have received reports that the GoT has released food from its strategic grain reserve and is starting distribution to drought affected areas on the basis of its vulnerability assessment.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development whether a representative of the Department attended a meeting called by the Prime Minister of Tanzania on 14 August to request assistance to alleviate food shortages; and what response the Department has made to his request. [131417]

Hilary Benn: The Head of DFID Tanzania and one of her staff attended the meeting called by the Prime Minister of Tanzania on 14 August. The Prime Minister asked the World Food Programme and the Food and Agriculture Organisation to co-ordinate the detailed appeal to donors. WFP is currently finalising the formal appeal for food assistance, which we will consider when we receive it. FAO issued an appeal for assistance for seed and fertilisers on 17 September which we are currently considering.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

EU Chemicals Policy

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the costs of the European Commission's REACH policy to small and medium-sized enterprises. [131844]

Alun Michael: In May 2001, the Government prepared a preliminary partial regulatory impact assessment of the proposals in the European Commission's White Paper. A revised partial Assessment will be required when proposals for the European Commission's legislation are available and my Department is working closely with other interested Departments, the Devolved Administrations and concerned stakeholders to develop its scope and content. As set out in the guidance on conducting such an Assessment, consideration of the impacts on small to medium sized businesses will form a key part of this.

As well as considering the benefits and costs of the proposals, the Assessment will include an analysis of the implications of the proposed legislation for the international competitiveness of the UK chemicals industry and other manufacturing sectors that use chemicals in their processes and products. In addition the Government will consider what further analysis may be needed, particularly for small to medium sized businesses to meet the demands of any new legislation. We have noted the results of other work undertaken for instance by the Commission and the Federation of German Industry (BDI) and this will be taken into account when carrying out our assessment. Getting these aspects right is a key element to achieve the Government's first objective for the new EU chemicals strategy of a fast, efficient and workable process.

Urban Commons

Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what powers are available to local authorities compulsorily to purchase land designated as an urban common under the Law of Property Act 1925 to ensure continued access to and use of the land by the general public for leisure and recreation and the protection of wildlife. [131671]

Alun Michael: Powers are available under various enactments that may enable public authorities compulsorily to purchase common land to secure continued public access. Such powers are contained in, for example, section 76 of the National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act 1949, section 164 of the Public Health Act 1875 and section 19 of the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1976. It is for the local authority concerned to determine which powers might apply in the particular circumstances and, if so, whether it would be appropriate to use them.

Under the provisions of section 193 of the Law of Property Act 1925, the public already has a statutory right of access for air and exercise to any common which was wholly or partly in a borough or urban district prior to 1 April 1974. Section 194 of this Act enables a county or district council, or any other person with a legal interest in the land, to make an application to the county court for the removal of works unlawfully carried out on common land that prevent or impede access, and the restoration of the land to its previous condition. This might be an alternative to compulsory purchase.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what action her Department has taken to encourage local councils to fulfil their obligation to clear rights of way. [131449]

Alun Michael: Section 63 of the Countryside and Rights of Way Act 2000 introduced new powers that will enable members of the public to oblige local highway authorities to secure the removal of certain types of obstruction, unless it can show that there are good reasons for not doing so. Defra aims to make regulations implementing these powers later this year. In addition, the introduction of 'Best Value' from 1 April 2000, requires local authorities to seek continuous improvement in the way they carry out their functions. The Best Value performance indicator for rights of way includes a specific measure for ease of use of rights of way.

Air/Light Pollution

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to reduce light pollution; and if she will include light pollution in the proposed indicators of countryside quality. [131509]

Mr. Bradshaw: Defra considered the control of nuisance caused by lighting in its recent consultation "Living Places: Powers, Rights, Responsibilities". The paper sought opinions as to whether the Government should introduce new regulations for the positioning of external lighting (excluding street lights); and whether the remit of the statutory nuisance regime should be extended to include such lighting. The consultation period closed on 14 February. Copies of the summary report of the responses received have been placed in both Houses, and it is also available at: www.defra.gov.uk/environment/consult/pubspace/index.htm

The House of Commons' Select Committee on Science and Technology recently held an inquiry into light pollution and astronomy. This focused on the effectiveness of measures taken to reduce the impact of light pollution on astronomy and considered what further steps, if any, are required. The outcome of the inquiry will be published in due course and will be made available on the House of Commons' website.

The Government will consider their future course of action taking into account any recommendations and conclusions emerging from the Select Committee's inquiry and from Defra's recent consultation exercise. We are currently appraising, in conjunction with the Countryside Agency, the selection of indicators to be monitored as measures of 'countryside quality'. Light pollution is under consideration, but no decision has yet been taken. It is expected that the agreed list of indicators will be published next year.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs which chemicals are included in the measurement of air pollution. [131570]

Mr. Bradshaw: Defra measures approximately 180 air pollutants in the national networks, including benzene, 1,3-butadiene, carbon monoxide, nitrogen dioxide, nitric oxide, nitrogen oxides, ozone, PMio particulate matter, PIVb.s particulate matter, sulphur dioxide, black smoke, 26 volatile organic compounds, 17 metals and trace elements (for example, lead, arsenic and chromium), 52 transboundary pollutants (for example, ammonium nitrate and sulphate), 42 polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons (for example, benzo[a]pyrene), 17 of the most toxic dioxins including tetrachlorodibenzo-p-dioxin (2,3,7,8-TCDD) and 7 polychlorobiphenyls. The number of sites measuring each pollutant and their sampling frequency varies from just a few sites sampling on a weekly or monthly basis (for example, dioxins) to dozens of sites monitoring continuously (for example, nitrogen dioxide) depending on the characteristics of each pollutant. Monitoring data for each air pollutant can be found on the National Air Quality Information Archive (www.airqualitv.co.uk).

Beef Ban

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what actions the British Government is taking to secure compensation by the French Government for those directly affected by the ban on the import of British beef. [131294]

Mr. Bradshaw: The UK Government cannot claim compensation as it has no direct commercial interest. Compensation for losses must be sought by those directly affected.

However, the Government will provide information and practical assistance (although not financial support or detailed legal advice) to those who wish to pursue claims for compensation against the French .

Bovine TB

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of arrangements for valuing animals for the purposes of compensating farmers who have bovine TB reactors. [131874]

Mr. Bradshaw: We intend to consult on proposals to rationalise existing compensation arrangements for all notifiable animal diseases later this year. Our consultation will include proposals to address valuations of animals, particularly higher value pedigree animals.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the financial impact of bovine tuberculosis on (a) farmers and (b) her Department in each of the last five years for which records are available. [131897]

Mr. Bradshaw: The information is as follows:

(a) Defra has commissioned the University of Reading to carry out research into the economic impact of bovine tuberculosis. This work covers the cost to industry of TB breakdowns. The final report on the project is expected later this year.

(b) Expenditure by the Government on the bovine TB programme from 1998–99 to 2002–03 is given in the following table:

Expenditure on TB in Great Britain 1998–99 to 2002–03

	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02	2002–03

Administrative Costs

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the conclusions were of her Department's review of the indicative level of total administrative costs for 2003–04 and beyond. [129357]

Margaret Beckett: We have not carried out a specific review of 'total administrative costs'. However my Department reviews its administrative costs on an annual basis as part of its Resource Allocation and Business Planning process. The results of this are reflected in the annual Departmental Report (Cmd 5919).

Committee Meetings

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the dates of meetings of the (a) Implementation Committee for Spirit Drinks, (b) Committee on Agricultural Structures and Rural Development, (c) Standing Forestry Committee, (d) Committee on the Conservation, Characterisation, Collection and Utilisation of Genetic Resources in Agriculture and (e) European Agricultural Guidance and Guarantee Fund Committee and Working Party on Irregularities during the (i) Danish and (ii) Greek presidency; what issues were discussed; when the Scottish Executive was informed of each meeting; for what meetings requests for Scottish representation were made; and if she will make a statement. [131650]

Alun Michael: The information is as follows:

(a) Spirit Drinks Implementation Committee

During the Danish presidency the Spirit Drinks Implementation Committee (SDIC) met on 8 and 22 October, and during the Greek presidency they met on 11 March and 28 May. They discussed the proposed amendments to the base Council Regulation 1576/89, mutual recognition of Tequila, enlargement negotiations, bilateral agreements with Switzerland, South Africa and Canada, the definition of 'bierbrand', prescribed quantities, and rum and cachaca. UK representation at SDIC is determined by the agenda and can include members of the Scottish Executive. However, following consultation with devolved administrations during the above presidencies, it was agreed that Defra would represent UK interests.

(b) Committee on Agricultural Structures and Rural Development (STAR)

The dates of the STAR Committee meetings for the Danish and Greek presidencies are listed as follows. A brief outline of the issues discussed and the number of Scottish Executive officials who attended each meeting is also given.

Date of Meeting	Issues Discussed	Number of Scottish Executive officials attending
24 July	Discussions on the rural development simplification exercise, and link with CAP MTR, Information Society and rural development, and SAPARD	1
4 September	Modifications to regional rural development programmes (RDPs) for Germany, Portugal and Finland.	—
25 September	Discussions on amendments to Italian and Swedish RDPs, SAPARD annual report, simplification, LFA data and EAGGF expenditure.	2
23 October	Discussion and approval of modifications of German and Belgian RDP's. Discussions on SAPARD and LEADER +	1
18 November	Modifications of RDPs from 5 accession countries and 2 member states (including Scotland) were presented and approved. General information on SAPARD funds was given by the commission.	1
18 December	Modifications to several member state rural development programmes (RDPs), including the England RDP. Discussion on simplification of Regulation 445/2002 (Commission Regulation laying down detailed implementation rules for the rural development regulation), and LEADER +	1
29 January	Modifications to Latvian and Polish SAPARD programmes, and Italian and Austrian rural development plans. Timetable set for simplification of Regulation 445/2002.	1
19 February	Discussion on the proposed text to amend Regulation 445/2002.	—

Date of Meeting	Issues Discussed	Number of Scottish Executive officials attending
19 March	RDR simplification discussions concluded. Consultation on the proposal to evaluate systems established by MS for the management and control of rural development programmes funded by the EAGGF Guidance section.	1
9 April	Approval of SAPARD programmes of Bulgaria, Romania and Latvia. Discussion on information of uptake of SAPARD, computer records, closure of 94–99 programmes, access to information and CAP-IDIM.
25 June	Approval to amendments to the SAPARD programmes of several accession countries the rural development programmes (RDP) of a number of member states. General uptake of SAPARD also discussed.	1 (am session)

STAR meeting dates are known a year in advance and Scottish Executive officials are welcome to attend any meeting should they wish to do so. They and other interested parties are notified of each meeting as soon as the agenda is published on the commission's website which is usually between 7–10 days in advance of the meeting.

(c) Standing Forestry Committee

The Standing Forestry Committee met on 27 November and 4 December last year and 10 February, 7 April and 5 June this year. The committee covered a wide range of issues at these meetings, including forest fire protection plans, preparation of a community action plan on Forest Law Enforcement, Governance and Trade, monitoring forest health, and a proposal for a European Forest Information and Communication network. The Forestry Commission has full responsibility for representing Scotland, England and Wales, on the committee. The commission is the Government Department for forestry in Britain, and it reports direct to the Scottish, English and Welsh forestry ministers.

(d) Committee on the Conservation, Characterisation, Collections and Utilisation of Genetic Resources in Agriculture

The Committee on the conservation, characterisation, collection and utilisation of genetic resources in agriculture met on 24 February 2003, during the Greek presidency. There were no meetings during the Danish presidency. The issues discussed were a report on the state of projects funded under Council Regulation EC 1467/94 and an exchange of views on a commission working document on a revised proposal for a new council regulation on the conservation, characterisation, collection and utilisation of genetic resources in agriculture. Officials from Defra are in regular contact with officials in the Scottish Executive. UK representation varies according to the agenda for each meeting and may include members of the Scottish Executive and other devolved administrations where they consider that there are items of sufficient interest. No requests were made by the Scottish Executive for representation at this committee meeting.

(e) European Agriculture Guidance and Guarantee Fund Committee and Working Party on Irregularities

The European Agricultural Guidance and Guarantee Fund Committee met in the Danish presidency on 18 July, 20 September, 7 October, 22 October, 8 November, 19 November and 17 December. In the Greek presidency it met on 22 January, 20 February, 20 March, 22 April, 16 May, 21 March and 18 June. Issues discussed at the committee included the payment of monthly advances from the fund, decisions on the clearance of CAP accounts, the exclusion from community financing of certain expenditure as a result of disallowance decisions, and other matters relating to the control of CAP expenditure. Details of the agenda are available to the Scottish Executive before each meeting, the date of which is usually set many months in advance, and representatives are entitled to attend.

The European Agricultural Guidance and Guarantee Fund, Irregularities and Mutual Assistance—Agricultural Products Working Group did not meet during the Danish presidency and met only once during the Greek presidency, on 11 March 2003. The main agenda items were: formation of a temporary task force to audit all member states' outstanding cases of financial irregularity and attempts at recovery; difficulties experienced in the operation of the so-called 'black list' legislation; presentations on a variety of technical items, including electronic reporting systems; oral presentation, by commission experts, on visits to and co-operation with a number of third countries. Irregularity reporting and mutual assistance are the responsibilities that the Rural Payments Agency undertakes on behalf of the UK. As usual, Scottish representation was not sought for this meeting, but the Scottish Executive was briefed on the outcome.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the dates of meetings of the committees on (a) Geographical Indications and Protected Designations of Origin for agricultural products and foodstuffs, (b) certificates of specific character for agricultural products and foodstuffs, (c) the farm accountancy data network, (d) organic production of agricultural products and indications referring thereto on agricultural products and foodstuffs and (e) agricultural research during the (i) Danish and (ii) Greek presidency; what issues were discussed; when the Scottish Executive was informed of each meeting; for what meetings requests for Scottish representation were received; and if she will make a statement. [131769]

Mr. Bradshaw: The information is as follows:

(a) Committee on Geographical Indications and Protected Designations of Origin for agricultural products and foodstuffs

The Regulatory Committee on Protected Designation of Origin and Protected Geographical Indications of Agricultural Products and Foodstuffs met three times during the Danish and Greek presidencies: 22 July 2002; 5 February 2003 and 4 June 2003. The main issues discussed were: whether 'feta' cheese should be registered as a Protected Designation of Origin; the implications of WTO agreement on Trade Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights; the EU/Swiss bilateral agreement on protected food names and the implications of the European Court of Justice Judgment relating to Parma ham. The Scottish Executive were provided with the agenda prior to each meeting and given the opportunity to comment or request attendance.

(b) Committee on the Certificates of Specific Character for Agricultural Products and Foodstuffs

The Regulatory Committee on Certificates of Specific Character for Agricultural Products and Foodstuffs met once during the Danish and Greek presidencies: 22 July 2002. The committee discussed amendments to the Commission Regulation setting out the detailed rules for the administration of the scheme. The Scottish Executive were provided with the agenda prior each meeting and given the opportunity to comment or request attendance.

(c) The Management Committee on the Farm Accountancy Data Network

Within the periods of the Danish and Greek presidency, the Management Committee of the Farm Accountancy Data Network met on 30 June 2003, 7 April 2003, 20 November 2002. The Community Committee for the Farm Accountancy Data Network was set up to support the information needs of the Common Agricultural Policy, specifically for determining farm incomes, for analysing the state of farm businesses and to contribute to the annual report on the situation of agriculture in the community. Issues discussed include selection plans for the survey; results for the 2000, 2001 and 2002 data; typology regulations; comparison of FADN results with other sources; the FADN database projects; and the situation in accession countries. The Scottish Executive is informed of all FADN meetings and papers in advance by the European Commission directly and by the Defra representative. A representative of the Scottish Executive attended the meetings of 30 June 2003 and 7 April 2003.

(d) The Standing Committee on Organic Farming

The Standing Committee on Organic Farming and its associated working groups met during the Danish presidency on 8–10 July; 5 and 30 September; 1, 7 to 9 and 15 October; 13 November and 4 to 6 and 12 December 2002; and during the Greek presidency on 21, 22, 27 and 28 January; 4 to 6 and 27 February; 14 and 26 March; 1, 2 to 3 and 29 April; 14 and 21 to 23 May and 12 and 13 June 2003.

A wide variety of issues was discussed, in particular inspection arrangements for feed for organic livestock, seeds for use in organic farming, additives permitted in organic food, imports to the EU from third countries, the use of conventional ingredients in feed for organic livestock, conversion of livestock for organic production and the proposed EU Organic Action Plan. Arrangements are in place for consulting the Scottish Executive. No requests for Scottish representation were made.

(e) The Standing Committee on Agricultural Research

The Standing Committee on Agricultural Research did not meet during the Danish or Greek presidencies. DEFRA officials keep their counterparts in the Scottish Executive informed about meetings of SCAR. There is no bar to their attending as part of the UK delegation as their needs and interests arise.

Common Agricultural Policy

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what proposals she will make to the European Union for further reductions in agricultural (a) export and (b) trade distorting subsidies; whether the Government will press the European Union substantially to reduce expenditure on the Common Agricultural Policy; and if she will make a statement on the Common Agricultural Policy and the World Trade Organisation trade round. [131491]

Mr. Bradshaw: The agreement on CAP reform which was reached by the Agriculture Council in June enabled the European Union to take a credible and constructive position on agriculture in the WTO negotiations at Cancun. Unfortunately the negotiations broke down before detailed discussion of agriculture was begun. However, in the forthcoming EU reviews of sugar, cotton, tobacco, olive oil and hops we shall be seeking decisions which further assist in reaching a satisfactory outcome to the Doha Development Agenda.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the impact of Common Agricultural Policy reform proposals on (a) smaller and more economically marginal full-time farm holdings and (b) tenant farms in the UK. [131888]

Mr. Bradshaw: No specific assessment has been undertaken of the impact of the CAP reform proposals on smaller, economically marginal or tenant farmers. However, we have assessed the impacts of the proposals on farming and other businesses generally, including an analysis by farm activity, and a summary of these is included in the Regulatory Impact Assessments which have been lodged in the House Libraries.

For the first time, the bulk of farm subsidy will not be dependent on what or how much farmers produce. They will instead be free to produce what they judge the market wants and so be better able to cut costs and increase profits. Our analysis suggests that those farmers who are economically marginal at present are likely to be more disposed to take advantage of this freedom to alter their activity and thereby increase their income. Farmers will also be freed from some of the bureaucracy associated with the subsidy schemes which are being replaced by this new decoupled subsidy. The historic recipient, whether owner or tenant, will continue to hold the subsidy entitlement.

Farmers whose subsidy is less than €5,000, which is likely to include many of the smallest holdings, will be exempt from the reduction in subsidies to fund rural development and environmental measures. This exemption applies to tenants as well as farmers who own the land.

The UK also has the option to retain 10 per cent. of payments to establish a national envelope to address potential negative impacts of decoupling for specific types of farming. The detailed rules of how this will apply have yet to be developed by the European Commission.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the dates of the joint meetings of management and regulatory committees in the field of agriculture on (a) promotion of agricultural products, (b) agrimonetary questions and (c) trade mechanisms, during the (i) Danish and (ii) Greek presidency; what issues were discussed; when the Scottish Executive was informed of each meeting; for what meetings requests for Scottish representation were made; and if she will make a statement. [131649]

Mr. Bradshaw: Agenda details of management and regulatory committees are provided to the Scottish Executive prior to each meeting with the opportunity to comment or request further information on any issue under discussion. The Scottish Executive is informed of the results of each meeting. No requests for Scottish representation were made for meetings of the Committee on the Promotion of Agricultural Products, the Agrimonetary Management Committee and the Trade Mechanisms Management Committee during the Danish and Greek presidencies. The dates of these meetings and a synopsis of the issues discussed is listed as follows:

Committee on the Promotion of Agricultural Products

The committee met monthly during the Danish and Greek presidencies with the exception of August and October 2002 and March 2003. The committee discussed amendments to and interpretation of the regulations, proposals submitted for funding and other issues relating to the implementation of regulations.

Agrimonetary Management Committee

The committee met in the Danish presidency on 16 October 2002 and in the Greek presidency on 9 April 2003. It discussed aspects of agrimonetary compensation and a minor amendment to the agrimonetary regulations.

Trade Mechanisms Management Committee

The UK is represented at the Management Committee by the Rural Payments Agency. With the exception of July and August 2002 and April 2003, the committee met monthly during the period of the Danish and Greek presidencies. The Committee is responsible for horizontal issues in respect of export refunds and CAP import and export licensing.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the dates of meetings of the management committees of the common organistations of agricultural markets for (a) cereals, (b) dehydrated fodder, (c) sugar, (d) oils and fats, (e) natural fibres, (f) milk and milk products, (g) beef and veal, (h) sheep and goat, (i) pigmeat, (j) poultrymeat and eggs, (k) fresh fruit and vegetables, (l) products produced from fruit and vegetables, (m) hops, (n) seeds and (o) live plants and floriculture products, during the (i) Danish and (ii) Greek presidency; what issues were discussed; when the Scottish Executive was informed of each meeting; for what meetings requests for Scottish representation were made; and if she will make a statement. [131648]

Mr. Bradshaw: The information requested is as follows.

Management Committee for (a) Cereals

The Cereals Management Committee normally meets on a weekly basis. Meetings are attended by officials from Defra and additionally, as necessary, by officials from other UK Agriculture Departments or the Rural Payments Agency. The Scottish Executive receives the agenda for each meeting at the same time as Defra, normally a week prior to the meeting taking place. During the period of the Danish and Greek presidencies, members of the Scottish Executive attended Cereals Management Committee meetings on 4 and 5 occasions respectively. Items under consideration included the regular adjudications for the export of cereals to third countries, the cereals harvest situation, the implementing rules for the import of cereal from third countries and the implementing rules for the trade in cereals with those applicant countries with whom the EU has negotiated reciprocal arrangements.

Management Committee for (b) Dehydrated Fodder

The Management Committee for dehydrated fodder met on 20 June 2003, under the Greek presidency. They did not meet during the Danish presidency. The Scottish Executive was informed once the date of the meeting was known, they did not ask to attend any Management Committee. The Committee considered the setting of the aid rate for dehydrated fodder.

Management Committee for (c) Sugar

The Sugar Management Committee normally meets on a weekly basis. Meetings are attended by officials from Defra and additionally, as necessary, by officials from other UK Agriculture Departments or the Rural Payments Agency. The Scottish Executive receives the agenda for each meeting at the same time as Defra, normally a week prior to the meeting taking place. During the period of the Danish and Greek presidencies, members of the Scottish Executive attended the Sugar Management Committee meetings on three and two occasions respectively. Items under consideration included the regular adjudications for the export of sugar to third countries, the sugar market situation, the implementing rules for the levies charged on the production of sugar in the EU, and the implementing rules for the trade in sugar with the Western Balkans.

Management Committee for (d) Oils and Fats

The dates of Management Committee meetings for oils and fats were:

2002	2003
5 July	22 January
11/24 September	12 February
16 October	19 March
20 November	9 April
11 December	19 May
	11 June

The Scottish Executive was informed as soon as dates of meetings were known, they did not request to attend any Management Committee. The Committee considered matters relating to the management of the market for oils and fats.

Management Committee for (e) Natural Fibres

The dates of Management Committee meetings for Natural Fibres were:

25 July	18 March
1 August	28 May
4 September
29 November

The meetings on 1 August 2002 and 13 November 2002 took place in the margins of the Management Committees for Sugar and for Oils and Fats respectively. The types of issues discussed include harvest and market reports for cotton, flax, hemp and silk; estimating cotton production so that a provisional reduction of the guide price can be calculated; revising cotton production estimates; fixing actual cotton production; apportioning a National Guaranteed Quantity of 5000 tonnes of short fibre between 5 minor producing countries; and contributing to the design of a fibre industry questionnaire. The Scottish Executive is regularly informed of the dates of Natural Fibres Management Committees, usually about a week beforehand, in case a representative wishes to attend.

Management Committee for (f) Milk and Milk Products

The dates of Management Committee meetings for milk and milk products were:

2002	2003
11/25 July	16/30 January
29 August	13/27 February
12/26 September	13/27 March
10/24 October	10/24 April
14/28 November	15/28 May
12 December	12/26 June

The Scottish Executive was informed a week prior to every meeting, they did not ask to attend any Management Committee. General subjects discussed at Milk Management Committees included, changes to annex I and non annex I export refunds, butter and skimmed milk powder intervention stocks, butter for food manufacture, butter for concentration, aid rates for casein, and the monthly market situation reporting. To view fully all items that were discussed at milk Management Committees please visit the following website: http://www.defra.gov.uk/foodrin/milk/mancom/2002/Archives.htm

Management Committee for (g) Beef and Veal

The dates of Management Committee meetings for beef and veal were:

12/26 July	17/31 January
30 August	14/28 February
13/27 September	14/28 March
11/25 October	10/24 April
15/29 November	16 May
13 December	13/27 June

The normal work of this Committee involves regular consideration of the market situation, including production, consumption, imports and exports. Its work also includes setting export refund rates, adjudicating intervention tenders (purchases and sales), opening import tariff quotas, consideration of technical aspects of beef carcase classification and price reporting and consideration of implementational aspects of the various producer support schemes and technical measures. The Scottish Executive was informed of these meetings at the same time as Defra, and it is for the Executive to decide whether or to not to attend as part of the UK delegation. An official from the Scottish Executive attended the Committee on 28 February.

Management Committee for (h) Sheep and Goats

The dates of Management Committee meetings for sheep and goats were:

2002	2003
29 November	13 January
	14/28 February
	28 March
	10/25 April
	13/27 June

The normal work of this Committee involves regular consideration of the market situation (including production, consumption, imports and exports). Its work also includes opening import tariff quotas, consideration of technical aspects of sheep carcase classification, price reporting and consideration of implementational aspects of producer support schemes and other technical measures. The Scottish Executive was informed of these meetings at the same time as Defra, and it is for the Executive to decide whether or to not to attend as part of the UK delegation. No official from the Executive attended the Management Committee on Sheep and Goats. 1nb

Management Committee for (i) Pigmeat

The dates of Management Committee meetings for pigmeat were:

2002	2003
9 July	21 January
18 September	18 February
17 October	8 April
19 November	21 May
5/10 December	17 June

The Scottish Executive was informed a week prior to every meeting, and for training purposes attended the September meeting. General subjects discussed at pigmeat Management Committees included, changes to export refunds, the monthly market situation reporting, pig carcase grading classification and aids to private storage.

Management Committee for (j) Poultrymeat and Eggs

The dates of Management Committee meetings for poultrymeat and eggs were:

9 July	21 January
18 September	18 February
17 October	11 March
19 November	8 April
	17 June

General subjects discussed at the eggs and poultry Management Committees included changes to export refunds for eggs, egg products (including non annex I products) and frozen chicken, representative prices, monthly market situation reporting, balance sheets and public stocks, and proposed amendments to egg marketing legislation. To view the latest agenda and debrief for the most recent meeting please visit the following website: http://defraweb/foodrin/poultry/mancom/brussels.htm.

Management Committee for (k) Fresh Fruit and Vegetables and (l) Products Produced from Processed Fruit and Vegetables

The dates of Management Committee meetings for (k) and (l) fresh and processed fruit and vegetables were:

2002	2003
16 July	10 January
17 September	11/19 February
15 October	12 March
12 November	8/29 April
10 December	6/14 May
	13/23/24 June

The Scottish Executive was informed as soon as dates of meetings were known, they did not ask to attend any Management Committee. The subjects discussed at fresh and processed fruit and vegetables Management Committees included the setting of export refunds, aid for certain products grown for processing and arrangements for assisting Producer Organisations.

Management Committee for (m) Hops

There were no meetings of the Management Committee for hops during this period.

Management Committee for (n) Seeds

The Seeds Management Committee met jointly with the Sugar Management Committee on 19 December 2002, and jointly with the Cereals Management Committee on 9 January 2003, to discuss a draft Regulation setting the minimum aid rate for certain agricultural products for the Outermost Regions (Canary Islands, Madeira and the Azores). The Scottish Executive receives the agenda for each meeting at the same time as Defra, normally a week prior to the meeting taking place.

Management Committee for (o) Live Plants and Floriculture Products

There were no meetings of the Management Committee for live plants and floriculture products during this period.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans the Department has to encourage people to increase the installation of household energy-saving appliances. [131394]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Energy White Paper details the steps being taken to encourage greater energy efficiency in the UK, and sets out an ambitious strategy for energy efficiency up to 2010 and beyond. Energy efficiency is expected to deliver about half the carbon savings needed to meet our goals for 2020. This will mean roughly doubling the rate of energy efficiency improvement of recent decades.

Key measures proposed in the White Paper include extension of the Energy Efficiency Commitment beyond 2005 at possibly twice its current level of activity; revisions to the Building Regulations; faster improvements in the standards of new household appliances; and consultation on economic instruments to improve household energy efficiency.

Tighter building regulations will have an impact on new homes, alterations to existing stock and all replacement windows and boilers. We have already begun work on the next major revision of the building regulations, which we will aim to bring into effect in 2005. Tighter building regulations will also encourage developers to use low carbon solutions such as solar water heating and photovoltaics.

As announced in Budget 2003, following the initial consultation last year the Government are consulting in more detail on specific economic instruments to encourage greater energy efficiency by households, including the use of measures to change the price differential between efficient and inefficient products.

Micro-CHP could also in due course provide a useful contribution towards improving household energy efficiency. An estimated 250–500MW could be generated from micro-CHP by 2010, although the Government do not have a specific target for the amount of electricity to be generated by micro-CHP technology.

The Government intend to publish an Energy Efficiency Implementation Plan within a year of the White Paper's publication, which will provide further detail on all of these policies.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what assessment she has made of the cost of energy wasted by UK households each year; [131395]

(2) what estimate has been made of the average potential financial saving to UK households through the implementation of energy-saving home improvements. [131396]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Government estimates the potential for cost-effective improvements in energy use in homes at almost £ 3 billion a year or around 20 per cent. of current total expenditure. This is almost £120 per household. These figures are based on the installation of cost-effective insulation and the replacement, at the end of their useful lives, of boilers, lights and domestic appliances by the most efficient equivalent models available. Precise estimates vary, since new products reach the [redacted] and existing measures are installed but there is broad agreement on the 20 per cent. estimate.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much energy was produced per person in 2002; and what estimate she has made of production levels in EU countries. [131077]

Mr. Timms: I have been asked to reply.

Energy production figures are shown in the following table. This information is for 2001, as this is the most recent date for which data for all the member states of the EU are available.

Country	Total Energy Production (Millions of tonnes of oil equivalent)	Population (Thousands)	Energy Production per capita (Tonnes of oil equivalent)
Denmark	27.17	5,349	5.08
UK	262.19	59,862	4.38
Sweden	34.38	8,883	3.87
Netherlands	60.44	15,987	3.78
Finland	15.16	5,181	2.93
France	133.19	59,038	2.26
Germany	133.74	82,260	1,63
Belgium	13.08	10,263	1.27

Farm Animals (Health)

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to (a) review compensation arrangements for all notifiable diseases in farm animals and (b) review the information systems used to administer and record compensation payments for each notifiable disease. [131872]

Mr. Bradshaw: (a) We intend to consult on proposals to rationalise existing compensation arrangements for all notifiable animal diseases later this year. The main aim of the exercise will be to increase transparency and operational simplicity by creating a single approach for all notifiable diseases.

(b) Work is in hand to improve business processes for bovine tuberculosis (TB) in Animal Health Offices and this includes the systems used to administer and record TB compensation payments.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the levels of compensation available for bovine TB reactors in the context of known market values over each of the last five years for which records are available. [131873]

Mr. Bradshaw: An internal audit review of compensation paid for animals slaughtered as part of the TB control strategy has found a steady increase in valuations in England since the compensation rate was changed to 100 per cent. of average market price in 1998. However, the auditors concluded that finding data against which TB valuations can be compared in a meaningful way is not a straightforward process.

The total amount of compensation paid in GB from 1998–99 to 2002–03 is given in the table.

Expenditure on TB compensation payments in Great Britain 1998–99 and 2002–03

Financial year	GB expenditure on TB compensation
1998–99	3,491
1999–2000	5,303
2000–01	6,632
2001–02	9,243
2002–03	31,146

Farming Incomes

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what changes have taken place in the annual (a) net and (b) gross incomes of farmers in each of the past three years; and what estimates she has made of income levels in the next three years. [129236]

Mr. Bradshaw: The gross income of the UK agriculture industry, as measured by the gross value of production, and the net income measures of Total Income from Farming and Total Income from Farming per full time person equivalent, are given in the table for the years 2000–02:

	Gross value of production	Total income from farming	Total income from farming per full time equivalent
2000	15.0 billion	1.74 billion	7,848
2001	15.3 billion	2.04 billion	9,298
2002	15.5 billion	2.36 billion	11,107

Total income from farming is an aggregate measure of income across the whole farming industry. It is income generated by production within the agriculture industry, including subsidies, and represents business profits plus remuneration for work done by owners and other unpaid workers.

Forecasts of the key drivers of future business prospects—in particular commodity prices and exchange rates—are highly uncertain.

An increase in Total Income from Farming per full time equivalent of around one third is expected for 2003 due primarily to the effects of the exchange rate. There has been a recovery in the Euro so far in 2003 which has led to a rise in prices across a range of commodities and will result in higher direct subsidy payments.

Beyond 2003, there is likely to be only a modest recovery in commodity markets over the medium term future.

More detailed information may be found in a regular notice on the economic position of the farming industry published on the Defra website at http://statistics.defra.gov.uk/esg/reports/repfi.pdf.

Fishing Industry

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will (a) seek to initiate a review of fisheries science by the EU and (b) commence an independent study into the Icelandic and Faeroese models of maintaining fish stocks and the fishing industry. [131787]

Mr. Bradshaw: I see no need to initiate an EU review of fisheries science, given the advisory role that the Scientific, Technical and Economic Committee for Fisheries is already required to play in relation to EU fisheries management measures. I expect that the forthcoming independent report from the Prime Minister's Strategy Unit on its UK Fisheries Project will review among other things the fisheries management systems applied by other countries.

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many fishing vessels registered to other countries than the UK fished in each of the statistical fishing regions which fall within the UK's national waters in each of the last five years. [131786]

Mr. Bradshaw: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The information held by Fisheries Departments in the UK relates only to the activity of foreign vessels when a landing has been made into the UK. It would be necessary to invite the various member states involved to supply the data.

Harmful Chemicals (Household Items)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what research her Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the presence of harmful chemicals in household items: and if she will make a statement. [131500]

Alun Michael: The Department has commissioned and evaluated research into chemicals in the environment. Some of these chemicals may also be present in household items and this has been considered where relevant, but this has not been the focus of the work as it is outside Defra's remit. The Department has also conducted reviews on chemicals, which have been shared with the United Nations Environment Programme and the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development. This is in addition to work which the Department conducts under the Existing Substances Regulation (EC) 793/93 to meet our regulatory responsibilities. This work is focused on the environment and also considers impacts on human health via the environment.

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether the Government intends to introduce legislation to allow people claiming the pension credit to be eligible for services under the Warm Front home energy efficiency scheme. [131465]

Mr. Bradshaw: On 4 September, Statutory Instrument, The Home Energy Efficiency Scheme (England) (Amendment) (No. 2) Regulations 2003, amended the list of qualifying benefits for Warm Front to include Pension Credit. This came into effect on the 6 October.

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what is meant by the phrase: the offer of services of products, in promotional material for Warm Front produced by the scheme managers. [131457]

Mr. Bradshaw: Reference to the use of client information for other services or products is included on the Warm Front application form, which is part of the Warm Front leaflet. This is to comply with the requirements of the Data Protection Act 1998.

Particulate Matter Emissions

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate she has made of the number of tonnes of particulates saved from emission to the atmosphere in the UK as a result of accumulated switching from conventional automotive fuels to (a) LPG, (b) CNG, (c) LNG and (d) hydrogen. [131715]

Mr. Bradshaw: Industry sources suggest there are around 100,000 vehicles currently running on LPG. It is not possible to precisely estimate the particulate matter emissions savings (a) because there are no measurements of particulate matter emissions from LPG fuelled vehicles and (b) there are no records of which fuel, petrol or diesel, was replaced. It is however estimated that around one third of LPG fuelled vehicles were converted from diesel. In this case, there would be savings of particulate matter emissions of around 130 tonnes per year. This is out of a total of 30,000 tonnes of PM emitted from UK road transport in 2001.

Industry sources suggest approximately 850 vehicles currently run on CNG/LNG. These are mainly heavy-duty vehicles that would otherwise be running on diesel. On the basis of this figure, it is estimated that 13 tonnes of PM have been saved in the UK by these conversions to CNG.

While comparatively small, these emissions savings contribute to improved air quality and help the UK move towards meeting its air quality objectives.

There are presently only a few prototype/demonstration vehicles in the whole of the UK running on hydrogen. Therefore, the particulate matter emission savings from converting to hydrogen are currently negligible. There is, however, long-term potential for significant particulate matter emissions savings by replacing conventional fuelled vehicles with hydrogen fuelled vehicles.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate she has made of the monetary value to the (a) environment and (b) human health of averting the emission of one tonne of particulates to the atmosphere. [131716]

Mr. Bradshaw: The external costs of air pollution is a subject where considerable research work is being undertaken to improve our scientific and economic understanding of the health and environmental damages of air pollution. This work is important to provide the evidence base on which policies are developed.

The framework for estimating the external costs of one tonne of particulates to the atmosphere requires a detailed step-by-step analysis to assess the effect of emissions on local and regional air concentrations; quantify the health and environmental impacts using dose response functions and data on population exposed and value these health and environmental impacts in monetary terms where appropriate. Many factors including location of emissions will determine the extent of damages from a tonne of particulates.

In September 2001, the Interdepartmental Group on Costs and Benefits published "An Economic Analysis to Inform the Review of the Air Quality Strategy Objectives for Particles". This quantified a range of environmental and health effects arising from particulate emissions. Direct environmental effects of particles include damages from soiling of buildings. Evidence on the health effects of particles has been accumulating. Day to day variations in concentration of airborne particles are associated with day to day variations in a range of health end points. These include daily deaths, admissions to hospital for the treatment of both respiratory and cardiovascular diseases and symptoms among patients suffering from asthma. In addition, there is evidence from the United States that long-term exposure to particulate air pollution is associated with a decrease in life expectancy. In 2001, COMEAP (Committee on the Medical Effects of Air Pollutants) reviewed the evidence on the long-term effects of particles on mortality and concluded that it was more likely than not that a causal association existed between long-term exposure to particles and mortality. The IGCB Report took on board this advice in quantifying the long-term mortality effects of particles. However, the health benefits were not presented in monetary terms due to the uncertainties over valuation in the air pollution context where empirical studies are not yet available.

Rights of Way

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what studies have been carried out into the contribution of functioning rights of way to income creation for rural economies. [131450]

Alun Michael: The 1998 Day Visits Survey, which surveyed leisure day visits in both urban and rural areas, found that walking was a principal activity on approximately 930 million trips in England and Wales. It estimated that over one billion pounds was spent on trips where walking was the main activity. The 2002 Leisure Day Visits Survey will be published later this year.

Sheep Farmers (Early Retirement)

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of a voluntary early retirement scheme for tenant sheep farmers, funded from the surrender of sheep premia. [131326]

Mr. Bradshaw: Early retirement schemes have in the past been judged to provide poor value for money. For this reason, we have not used the provision in the EU Sheepmeat Regime permitting the Sheep National Envelope to be used to buy out sheep premium quota rights to establish an early retirement scheme; last year's Sheep Quota Purchase Scheme was intended to help address environmental problems caused by high sheep numbers in some upland areas. Direct payments under the Sheepmeat Regime will be made for one further year, but will be replaced from 2005 by Single Payments under the reform of the CAP agreed in June.

Sustainable Energy

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what representations she has received regarding targets for sustainable energy usage by Government properties and the attainment of those targets. [126890]

Mr. Bradshaw: From time to time the Government have received representations both from the public, from environmental groups and from the energy sector concerning the use of sustainable energy within their own estate.

Most recently, correspondence on this issue has been concerned with the publication of the Sustainable Development in Government Report, the Energy White Paper consultation and the Sustainable Energy Bill 2001.

Veterinary Surgeons Act

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment her Department has made of the effects that proposals to amend the Veterinary Surgeons Act 1966 to enable non-veterinary surgeons to diagnose bovine tuberculosis may have on (a) the welfare of cattle, (b) the welfare of badgers, (c) the welfare of non-wild animals, (d) the welfare of other wild animals, (e) the workload of existing veterinary practices, (f) the cashflow of existing veterinary practices, (g) the standards of diagnosis by (i) veterinary surgeons and (ii) non-veterinary surgeons and (h) the rate of the spread of the disease in (A) the national cattle herd, (B) geographic areas currently unaffected and (C) non-cattle animals. [131588]

Mr. Bradshaw: We do not believe that the introduction of lay testers will have a detrimental effect on any of the elements listed.

The role of the lay TB tester, set out in our consultation paper issued on 4 July 2003, does not include diagnosis. This will be the responsibility of the supervising Local Veterinary Inspector (LVI) or Veterinary Officer of the State Veterinary Service. It is proposed that 72 hours after the tuberculin injection, the lay tester would record skin measurements, together with a description of the type of reaction observed. This information will be passed to a veterinary surgeon for interpretation of the results.

There is no intention of depriving LVI practices of their routine testing and no practice will be required to use lay testers. Those practices that chose to continue to use veterinary surgeons to perform TB tests would continue to receive fees at existing rates. A lower fee would be paid if a lay tester was used.

Water Abstraction

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what factors underlay the proposal of the Environment Agency to reduce the number of water abstractions in the South East; what assessment she has made of the effect on water supplies in the South East of this proposal; and if she will make a statement. [131499]

Mr. Morley: Proposals to reduce abstraction in the South East are aimed at improving the environment at important wildlife sites that are presently being damaged or are threatened with being damaged by abstraction.

Water companies have been given the proposed list of sites and have been asked to identify the solutions that they would have to implement to make these environmental improvements.

The Office of Water Services and the Environment Agency are scrutinising the companies' plans and I have asked them to report to me in November. From their reports I will identify the environmental improvement schemes that should be included in companies' final business plans for 2005–10, due in April 2004. Throughout this process, security of water supply to customers is paramount and the timing of any changes to abstraction will be arranged so that there is no risk to public water supply.

Mercury Emissions

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether she has made an assessment of the health benefits of reducing mercury emission from crematoria, using the methodology developed for assessing the health benefits of the National Air Quality Strategy. [131760]

Mr. Bradshaw: The methodology for the Air Quality Strategy is aimed at assessing the health impacts for pollutants where inhalation is the main route of exposure. It is not appropriate to use this methodology in this case because exposure through inhalation is negligable.

Crematoria are a source of inorganic mercury. This is associated with tremors, gingivitis and/or minor psychological changes, together with spontaneous abortion and congenital malformation.

Concern arises from the fact that this inorganic mercury can be transported over long distances and be transformed to methyl mercury in the bottom sediments of aquatic ecosystems. Methyl mercury can cause damage to the brain, kidneys and the central nervous system; as it readily crosses the placental barrier, foetal brain levels are approximately 5–7 times higher than in maternal blood. Foetal and postnatal exposures have given rise to abortion, congenital malformation and development changes in young children, with toxic effects in infants even when absent in the mother.

The UK's long-standing policy approach is therefore to minimise, wherever practicable, the amounts of mercury entering the environment from all human activities. We have been discussing with the crematoria sector how they might mitigate any impacts.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Liquid Petroleum Gas

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what her estimate is of the investment in the last five years in the UK economy generated by suppliers and distributors of (a) automotive LPG and LPG vehicles, (b) CNG and CNG vehicles, (c) LNG and LNG vehicles and (d) hydrogen and hydrogen vehicles. [131688]

Mr. Timms: The best estimates are:

(a) For LPG £250 million (being £200 million for vehicles and £50 million for fuel),

(b) and (c) For CNG and LNG combined £50 million, and:

(d) Estimates are not available for this technology which is in its infancy.

South Sefton Partnership

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps have been taken by the South Sefton Partnership to improve support for businesses. [128880]

Jacqui Smith: This is one of South Sefton Partnership's four key objectives. The Partnership has recently prepared a small booklet, "South Sefton Partnership—The Story So Far", which aims to illustrate steps taken to date on these four key objectives.

The steps taken in respect of this objective are as follows:

developing the South Sefton Investment Centre project, which will provide much-needed managed workspace for small businesses and generating income for community projects beyond the lifetime of the Partnership; creating the South Sefton Small Firms Loan Fund, a seedcorn finance scheme run through Merseyside Special Investment Fund; launching two grant schemes for local companies. Gateway to Growth supports investment in capital equipment and Improve Your Lot supports improvements to sites and premises;

funding a major study into the redevelopment of Bootle town centre with the aim of attracting investment and jobs to South Sefton and supporting the first phase of the improvement work; supporting an important study into the regeneration of Crosby Marina, creating anew watersports and visitor centre; funding a project providing grant assistance to small retail businesses to enable them to improve the security of their premises;

funding the new post of Business Liaison Officer to promote the further development of the South Sefton Business Forum and the Partnership funded grant schemes; and funding the demolition and clearance of the former Secrets nightclub in Litherland to create a site for possible future use for housing.

British Energy

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the cost will be to the taxpayer of the credit facility made available to British Energy. [132143]

Mr. Timms: A credit facility (currently £200 million) has been made available to BE which will be repaid by the company under the terms of the restructuring plan at no cost to the taxpayer.

Full details of the credit facility agreement are commercially confidential under Exemption 13: Third Party's Commercial Confidences of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information unless and until it is made public by British Energy.

Broadband

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will press BT to decrease the threshold numbers required for the instalment of Broadband in rural areas. [131780]

Mr. Timms: Decisions about whether to reduce further the threshold numbers for activating exchanges are a matter for BT. The Government welcomes the reductions that have already been announced in recent months.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list those areas in the Lewes constituency capable of accessing broadband; to which areas there are plans to extend such a capability; and on what dates. [131827]

Mr. Timms: This information is not currently held centrally within Government.

However, BT's website (www.bt.com) includes a list of exchanges in the Lewes and the South East region showing which exchanges are already enabled for Broadband or are planned to be enabled with ready for service dates, which have trigger levels set and which do not.

The local Regional Development Agency—South East of England Development Agency (SEEDA), have recently invited tenders for their Coastal Superhighway Programme. As a result of this programme, a new internet point of presence from a fibre optic network will be built in Lewes, which should improve the availability of broadband services in Lewes, by reducing the cost of backhaul and stimulating competition.

In addition, any enterprises in the Lewes area and indeed the whole of the South East region, which cannot receive broadband from BT or from any other telecom or cable companies, may apply for a SEEDA satellite grant (http://www.rabbit-broadband.org.uk/)of up to £700, which covers an installation fee to contribute for the cost of a satellite broadband service.

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate she has made of the proportion of the population in (a) Suffolk, (b) Norfolk, (c) Essex, (d) Cambridgeshire and (e) the UK who are unable to access broadband. [131839]

Mr. Timms: The latest available data (June 2003) forecasts that, in October 2003, the proportions of the population who are unable to access broadband are:

	Percentage
(a) Suffolk	53
(b) Norfolk	57
(c) Essex	23
(d) Cambridgeshire	45
(e) UK	[1]20

[1] all broadband technologies

Note:

The data for figures a-d is only available for ADSL broadband

The recent East of England Development Agency 'Connecting Communities Competition' has introduced significant use of wireless solutions and should significantly improve broadband access in the region.

Carpets International

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action she has taken to assist Carpets International (UK) Ltd. since it went into receivership; and if she will make a statement. [130399]

Mr. Sutcliffe: Under the insolvency previsions of the Employment Rights Act 1996, the Redundancy Payments Directorate may pay certain guaranteed debts (within limits) if the employer is legally insolvent within the meaning of that Act. Any outstanding contractual debts owed to employees' remain listed in the insolvency as unsecured debts. The Edinburgh Redundancy Payments office has received and paid redundancy and other insolvency claims for all the employees (over 400) who worked at the Bradford Hartlepool and Hull establishments. The Gwent establishment is still trading with a view to selling that part of the business.

The Employment Services (ES) Rapid Response Unit—a flexible service, tailored to the needs of the particular area, sector and company—was notified and is liaising with local partners such as the Regional Development Agency, the Local Learning and Skills Council, the Local Authority, Chamber of Commerce, to take any appropriate measures to assist or retrain the employees in question. For example, the ES offers access to a range of support schemes, from the New Deal and the Jobseekers Allowance through to more focused schemes designed to help those caught up in restructuring. It provides information on job searching, compiling CVs, further education and training for individuals who need to develop new skills, and benefits.

Coal Industry

Paddy Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when she last met Ministers in the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs to discuss the Large Combustion Plant Directive and its implications for the UK coal industry. [131215]

Mr. Timms: Government decisions relating to consultation on the implementation of the Large Combustion Plant Directive were reached by ministerial correspondence following extensive contact between officials of the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, which leads on the Directive, this Department and others with relevant interests

Combined Heat and Power

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will take steps to compel electricity companies to allow the installation into domestic accommodation of CHP units capable of feeding excess power into the grid. [131285]

Mr. Timms: I have no plans to do so. It is unnecessary to compel network operators to allow the installation of domestic scale CHP units as, provided that certain technical and safety related requirements are met, they are not currently in a position to deny connection to the distribution networks. Through the work of the Distributed Generation Working Group, the Government and Ofgem are working to encourage the development of simplified connection and metering arrangements that will facilitate the development and integration of domestic scale CHP technology.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will ensure there is a reply to the letter dated 7 August from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. Tarik Shaei, addressed to the Companies Investigation Branch in her Department. [131737]

Ms Hewitt: My official replied to the letter from my right hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. Tarik Shaei on 3 October 2003.

Debt Management

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the Office of Fair Trading's compliance review of debt management companies; and what measures she plans to introduce to ensure good practice among debt management companies. [129936]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The Office of Fair Trading has carried out a thorough compliance review to check on the industry's compliance with its debt management guidance. A report on the compliance review will be published shortly.

The guidance sets out minimum standards which debt management companies should adhere to—failure to do so could result in action by the Office of Fair Trading to question their fitness to hold a consumer credit licence. The Office of Fair Trading continues to take up any issues of non-compliance with individual companies, such action can range from advisory/warning letters to formal action i.e. licence refusal/revocation.

Due to the restrictions in the Consumer Credit Act relating to disclosure of information, the Office of Fair Trading cannot disclose details about action taken or planned against individual companies. Details of formal action taken are usually publicised and placed on the Office of Fair Trading public register.

Since the guidance was issued there has been a considerable drop in complaints about Debt Management Companies to the Office of Fair Trading and to other consumer advice agencies.

Direct Selling

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations she has received about the need to improve the regulations relating to direct selling; what plans she has to bring forward legislative proposals; and if she will make a statement. [132135]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The Office of Fair Trading is currently investigating the doorstep selling market as a supercomplaint within the terms of the Enterprise Act 2002. Its report is expected around the end of this year. Any recommendations will be carefully considered.

Euro

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much has been spent in each year by her Department in preparing for United Kingdom entry to the euro; how much her Department plans to spend on preparations for United Kingdom entry to the euro for each year from the current financial year up to and including 2005–06; and what estimates she has made of the total costs to her Department of changeover to the European Single Currency. [131599]

Ms Hewitt: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today by my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary to the Treasury at column 142W.

Export Credit Guarantees Department

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant to her Answer of 20 June 2003, Official Report, column 493W, on ECGD, if she will list the exposure under each reinsurance contract; what the split of business reinsured between defence and non-defence is; which claims have been (a) notified but not yet agreed and (b) agreed but not paid; and what projections have been made of expected claims payments. [130246]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Since the start of 1997, ECGD has reinsured 22 deals with other Export Credit Agencies (EGAs) in respect of medium/long-term business. ECGD has received no claims and therefore paid no claims. ECGD does not currently anticipate receiving any claims in respect of any of these cases. Current Exposure refers to the amount that ECGD has reinsured which is still outstanding.

NCM Credit Insurance Ltd	18,600,000	0	1998	Defence

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list reinsurance contracts underwritten by the ECGD; and in each case (a) who the reinsured party is, (b) who the underlying insured party is, (c) what cover is provided, (d) what the amount of the total exposure under the contract is and (e) what amounts have been paid in respect of these contracts for each year up to and including 1997. [129932]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Prior to the end of 1997, ECGD provided reinsurance to other Export Credit Agencies (EGAs) under Co-operation Agreements on only two occasions in respect of medium/long-term business. The cover provided was reinsurance of all risks covered by the lead EGA.

(a) Reinsured ECA	(b) Underlying insured party	Risk status	Market	(e) Claims paid £	Issue date	Sector	Original value £	(d) Current exposure £
Coface (France)	Matra Marconi Space UK Ltd	Corporate	Singapore	0	1997	Civil	10,022,063	0
Coface (France)	Matra Marconi Space UK Ltd	Public	Taiwan	0	1997	Civil	9,983,926	0

Current Exposure refers to the amount that ECGD has reinsured which is still outstanding.

These cases are also referred to in PQ No. 130246 answered today and were the first cases under the first Co-operation Agreement (with France) that was signed in 1995.

There is no current exposure for the one reinsurance case issued in 1997 as this deal has been fully paid. ECGD has received no claims and paid no claims on this.

Reinsured short-term insurer	Underlying insured party	Risk status	Market	Original value £	Current exposure £	Issue date	Sector
NCM Credit Insurance Ltd	BAE Systems (Defence Systems Ltd)	Public	United Arab Emirates	8,000,000	0	1997	Civil

However, it would incur disproportionate cost to list and detail every occasion that ECGD has provided short-term reinsurance prior to 1997 due to the very large numbers involved. When its short-term business was privatised in 1991, ECGD provided reinsurance on all exposure transferred to the commercial insurer (NCM Credit Insurance Ltd.)

Extra-territorial Control

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant to her answer of 16 May 2003, Official Report, column 463W, what assessment was made of the section of the Home Office report Raising Standards, Upholding Integrity: The Prevention of Corruption which states that the Home Office guidelines on extra-territorial control are not mandatory. [130177]

Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 16 September 2003]: I am aware that the Home Office guidelines on the application of extra-territorial jurisdiction are not mandatory.

Food Expenditure

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much was spent on food by her Department and by each agency for which it is responsible in (a) 2001–02 and (b) 2002–03; what proportion of that food by value was produced in the United Kingdom; what guidance she has issued to encourage the procurement of home-grown food; and if she will make a statement. [129381]

Ms Hewitt: Approximately 85 per cent. of food purchased on behalf of my Department is provided by our in-house catering contractors, as follows.

Year	£000
2002–03	1,037

65 per cent. of this was spent on food produced in the United Kingdom.

Acquiring similar information on the rest of the food purchased, which is provided by a large number of lesser supplies, would entail disproportionate cost.

DEFRA guidance on sustainable good procurement has been circulated to the appropriate directorates in DTI and to our agencies and non-departmental public bodies.

I have asked the Department's executive agencies to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Letter from Roger Heathcote to Mr. Lidington, dated September 2003:

You tabled a question on 9 September to the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry asking her how much was spent on food by her Department and by each Agency for which it is responsible in (a) 2001–02 and (b) 2002–03; what proportion of that food by value was produced in the United Kingdom; what guidance she has issued to encourage the procurement of home-grown food; and if she will make a statement.

The direct purchase of food and drink by the Employment Tribunals Service (ETS) consists solely of convenience refreshments for training events and meetings and was as follows:

2002–03	7,868

Since the supplies in question are provided by an external retail supplier we have no knowledge of the provenance of the food and drink involved.

ETS has not issued guidance on the procurement of home-grown food.

Letter from Desmond Flynn to Mr. Lidington:

The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has asked me to reply to you on behalf of The Insolvency Service in respect to your question (2002/3851) requesting information on how much was spent on food by each Agency in (a) 2001–02 and (b) 2002–03; what proportion of that food by value was produced in the United Kingdom; what guidance has been issued to encourage the procurement of home-grown food.

Expenditure on food in The Insolvency Service is generally limited to official hospitality provided by The Service in 2001–02 was £37,000 (including the cost of the closure of our London canteen facility) and in 2002–03 was £23,000. This took the form of buffet style services supplied by numerous small catering organisations across the country.

The Agency does not hold any information on how much was grown or produced within the United Kingdom.

Letter from Claire Clancy to Mr. Lidington:

I am responding to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on behalf of Companies House, which is an Executive Agency of the DTI.

The total amount spent on food by Companies House in the year 2001/02 was £212,000 and in the year 2002/03 it was £221,000, of which approximately 55% was produced in the United Kingdom.

The majority of our costs are recovered in the prices charged in the staff restaurant.

Letter from Dr. J. W. Llewellyn to Mr. Lidington:

The Secretary for Trade and Industry has asked me to reply on behalf of the National Weights and Measures Laboratory (NWML) to your question on how much was spent on food by her Department and by each agency for which it is responsible in (a) 2001–02 and (b) 2002–03; and what proportion of that food by value was produced in the United Kingdom

National Weights and Measures Laboratory has spent (a) £5.8k in 2001–02 and (b) £5.2k in 2002–03 on entertainment. This covers the purchase of catering services for Agency events, biscuits, coffee and tea for meetings, consumables for working lunches and entertaining customers. Records are not kept in such a way that the amount spent on UK produce can be identified.

Letter from R. J. R. Anderson to Mr. Lidington:

The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has asked me to reply on behalf of the Radiocommunications Agency to your Parliamentary Question about expenditure on food.

Agency expenditure (ex-VAT) on food is as follows:

FY 2001/02 £121,922 of which £75,592 was spent on UK produced goods (62%).

FY 2002/03 £139,560 of which £87,913 was spent on UK produced goods (63%)

We have been assured by our caterers Baxter and Platts that it is their Policy to purchase food in accordance with UK and EC legislation and to satisfy their clients requirements. The Agency encourages all its suppliers to procure all goods and services competitively and to deal with all parties in a fair and reasonable manner.

Letter from Alison Brimelow to Mr. Lidington:

House of Commons Parliamentary Question: 2002/3851.

I am replying to this parliamentary question, tabled on 9 September 2003, about expenditure on food.

Expenditure on food in the Patent Office is generally limited to the provision of official hospitality, some of which is supplied under a contract with an external food supplier. This contract is administered by the Office for National Statistics with whom we share a site. Our recorded expenditure is:

2002–03	46,000.

Whilst no analysis of country of origin is available, it is estimated that the greater part of the food supplied was produced in the United Kingdom.

Graffiti

Siobhain McDonagh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions her Department has had with representatives of the statutory undertakers about graffiti on their street furniture or other property; and if she will make a statement. [118087]

Mr. Sutcliffe: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given on 1 July 2003, Official Report, column 249W by my hon. Friend the Minister for Crime Reduction, Policing and Community Safety.

Mineworkers' Compensation

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much money the Government has paid to Vernside Ltd. in legal costs for processing vibration white finger and respiratory coal health claims. [129207]

Mr. Timms: In total the Department has made over 315,000 payments to VWF and respiratory disease claimants in full and part settlement, totalling £1.68 billion.

Minimum Wage

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many successful prosecutions for failure to pay the national minimum wage there have been in Crosby. [129508]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The National Minimum Wage Act 1998 contains a number of provisions empowering enforcement officers to take civil action against non-paying employers and the Inland Revenue always uses these in the first instance.

In 2002–03, 1,996 employers in the UK were found by the Inland Revenue not to be complying with the minimum wage regulations. The north-west region accounted for 181 of these employers.

In addition, the Inland Revenue identified over £3.5 million in arrears. The majority of employers complied without further action being needed and only 26 enforcement notices were issued. To date there have been no criminal prosecutions in relation to underpayment of the minimum wage.

Model/Photographic Agencies

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many spot check inspections on model agencies and photographic agencies were carried out by the Employment Agency Standards Inspectorate in each year since 1997; and how many prosecutions took place in each year. [129053]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The total number of inspections and prosecutions undertaken by the Employment Agency Standards Inspectorate since 1997 are as follows:

	Inspections	Prosecutions
1997–98	1,325	14
1998–99	1,360	3
1999–2000	1,319	3
2000–01	1,124	2
2001–02	854	8
2002–03	950	8

Data broken down by sector of the private recruitment industry are not available for these years.

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to introduce regulation in the child model agency and child photography industry, with particular reference to a requirement for compulsory registration with the Criminal Records Bureau. [129054]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The Government have no plans to introduce a requirement for compulsory registration with the Criminal Records Bureau for the child model agency and child photography industry. However, a review of the legislation covering the private recruitment industry is currently under way and we propose to introduce revised regulations covering the conduct of all employment agencies and employment businesses.

Offshore Wind Farms

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the Crown Estate's plans to charge rent in respect of offshore wind farms. [131261]

Mr. Timms: The Crown Estate owns the seabed around the United Kingdom to the limit of the territorial sea. The Crown Estates Act 1961 requires The Crown Estate Commissioners to maintain and enhance the value of the Estate and the return obtained from it, with due regard to the requirements of good estate management. Companies entering into lease agreements for wind farm developments with the Crown Estate will be charged an appropriate rental for the site. Following discussion with industry and the British Wind Energy Association, The Crown Estate has indicated that, up to 2010, the basis for calculating rentals for new wind farm site leases will be unchanged from the current 2 per cent. of gross revenue, with a rent review after 20 years.

The Government have committed themselves to bringing forward legislation as soon as the Parliamentary timetable allows to facilitate the construction of wind farms beyond territorial waters in a Renewable Energy Zone (REZ). Our intention is that The Crown Estate will have powers to licence areas of the seabed in the REZ and will be able to charge a rental for use of the sea bed.

Post Offices

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make it her policy to urge the Post Office to organise public meetings (a) before decisions are made about closures and (b) for each individual closure proposal once the decisions are made on a particular area; and if she will make a statement. [131432]

Mr. Timms: The development of post office closure proposals under the urban reinvention programme and the associated public consultation arrangements are operational matters for Post Office Ltd. within the framework of the Code of Practice agreed with Postwatch.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on her policy on the (a) proposals by the Post Office to close post offices in South Portsmouth in 12 months and (b) closure by the Post Office of financially viable local offices. [131433]

Mr. Timms: Post Office Ltd. has recently put forward to public consultation its post office closure proposals for Portsmouth, South constituency under its revised arrangements for the urban network reinvention programme whereby proposals are put forward on an area-by-area basis using Parliamentary constituencies as a guide. This will result in a 'once over the ground' approach bringing clarity and greater certainty to the future shape of the network in each area. Public consultation has been extended from four to six weeks.

Post Office Ltd.'s area closure proposals are determined by a range of factors including the numbers of offices in close proximity to each other and current and projected business volumes. The aim of the programme is to create a sustainable network of viable urban post offices.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much compensation has been paid to the Post Office for their closure programme; and how much more is expected to be paid. [131434]

Mr. Timms: Parliament has approved funding of up to £180 million for compensation payments under the urban post office network reinvention programme. To date, £38,554,936 has been paid to Post Office Ltd.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations she has received about the proposals by the Post Office to close local post offices in South Portsmouth; what has been her response; and if she will make a statement. [131435]

Mr. Timms: Five letters have been received from the hon. Member from Portsmouth, South and one joint letter from Councillors Goble, Andrew and Bentley of Portsmouth city council. The responses explained the rationale for the urban post office network reinvention programme and that the process to determine the closure of individual offices is an operational matter for Post Office Ltd. which they carry out in accordance with the formal public consultation process under the Code of Practice agreed with Postwatch.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make representations to the Post Office about the number of proposed closures of local post offices in South Portsmouth; and if she will make a statement. [131436]

Mr. Timms: Proposals for post office closures and final decisions on them, following public consultation under the Code of Practice, are operational matters for Post Office Ltd. The Government do not have a role in the process to determine the closure of individual post offices.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many rural sub-post offices have closed since 1 March. [131484]

Mr. Timms: I understand that Post Office Ltd. produces information on post office closures on a quarterly basis. For the quarter up to the end of March 2003, there were 61 net closures throughout the rural post office network with 43 net closures in the quarter to end of June 2003, the latest quarter for which figures are currently available.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many post offices she has visited since she took up her appointment. [131721]

Mr. Timms: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State visits post offices regularly in her capacity as the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, in her capacity as a Member of Parliament, and as a customer.

Power Failures

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the effects of the recent power failures affecting London on the national economy; and what the possible causes of the power failures are. [132260]

Mr. Timms: The major power failure affecting London and parts of Kent on the 28 August 2003 occurred at 18:20 and lasted 41 minutes. Due to the timing and duration of the interruption there was transport disruption that affected a large number of people travelling home at the end of the working day, however the Department of Trade and Industry has not conducted a formal assessment of the impact of the event on the UK economy.

According to National Grid Transco, the cause of the failure was the incorrect operation of a protective device at Wimbledon substation. My Engineering Inspectorate is currently carrying out a detailed investigation of the circumstances of the incident, including the impact on the transport infrastructure.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent assessment her Department has made of the cost of the loss of power through overhead power lines in terms of transmission costs compared to underground transfer; and what research she has commissioned to assess the amount of energy lost overhead and the impact on the cost and efficiency of such lines. [132261]

Mr. Timms: The National Grid Company (NGT) has indicated that losses from overhead lines are approximately 50 per cent. greater than for underground cables for power flows at the same voltage.

The cost of losses is not separately available for overhead lines and underground cables. However, NGT advise that total transmission losses (including overhead lines, underground cables and transformers) account for about 1.5 per cent. of energy transferred on the England and Wales transmission network or a cost of around £90 million p.a. (This compares with average losses on the distribution system of approximately 7 per cent.).

The available data indicate that replacing overhead lines with underground cables could not be justified by gains in efficiency, due to the significantly higher capital cost of underground cables.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment her Department has made of the risks to the United Kingdom of a major power failure in January to February 2004; and what plans are in place to prevent power incapacity at the coldest time of year. [132262]

Mr. Timms: Maintaining the reliability of energy supplies is one of four key goals set out in the Government's Energy White Paper.

It is not Government's role to second-guess the electricity market. Rather, through competitive markets, participants have strong financial incentives to maintain reliable supplies of electricity. These incentives are backed by a number of licence conditions and statutory obligations on National Grid, electricity suppliers and generators, which are enforced by Ofgem.

The Government do have a co-ordinating role to ensure that information is provided to the market. A major component of this is our work with Ofgem, through the joint energy security of supply working group to monitor energy security.

National Grid also informs the market as to the forecast likely supply and demand position using a variety of publications and industry fora. In addition National Grid notifies market participants of tight reserve margins nearer to real time through a hierarchy of alert notices.

National Grid Transco's report on the outlook for gas and electricity markets was published today by Ofgem, and a copy of the report has been placed in the Libraries of the House.

National Grid has announced that it will be tendering for additional reserve capacity to enable it to mange the risks of short-term plant failure and changes in demand. These contracts would be in place prior to the winter period.

In addition, NOT is considering with participants to the Gas Network Code proposals to reduce the risk of supply disruptions in the gas market and the potential impact of these on gas-fired generation to the electricity market. Any formal proposals for modification would need to be considered by Ofgem, in light of their statutory duties, prior to implementation.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the cost to the National Grid was of loss of power through (a) trees falling on a power line, (b) high winds causing interruption of power in high wires carried over pylons, (c) birds landing on such lines and (d) other major loss of power from other causes in the last 12 months. [132263]

Mr. Timms: The number of incidents on NGT's network, which caused an immediate loss of supplies in the 12 months to 30 September 2003, is 10.

These incidents break down as follows:

(a) trees—none

(b) high winds—none

(c) birds—none

(d) other—10 incidents (of which three are attributed to lightning strikes, one to a light aircraft colliding with an overhead line, four due to protection operations, one to plant failure, and one as a result of a construction incident—the losses of supply in these incidents range from under 1 minute to approximately 40 minutes).

On average 0.0001 per cent. of the total energy transferred on the England and Wales transmission network is lost per annum due to faults on the transmission network. Consequently, the actual figure for the cost to NGT through the loss of power from these incidents is very small (of the order of a few thousand pounds per annum).

Small Businesses

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of gross domestic product is accounted for by the output of (i) small and (ii) micro businesses in (a) Dumfries & Galloway, (b) Scotland and (c) the UK. [132320]

Nigel Griffiths: The percentage of gross domestic product accounted for by the output of small and micro businesses in the UK is not available.

Supermarkets

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when she expects the Office of Fair Trading to conclude its review of the Supermarket Code of Practice; and if she will make a statement. [131829]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The Office of Fair Trading is expected to conclude its review of the Code of Practice governing supermarkets' relations with their suppliers this autumn. The OFT will then send its results to DTI for formal consideration. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry will wait for the results of that review before deciding if any action is necessary.

Wind Farms

Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry who bears the cost of public inquiries into planning applications for wind farms. [131670]

Mr. Timms: Each participant bears his own costs and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry recovers her costs, such as the employment of an inspector, from the developer.

WTO (Cancun)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what the (a) size and (b) cost of the EU delegation to the Cancun Summit was; [131250]

(2) what the total cost of the United Kingdom delegation's travel and subsistence at the Cancun Summit was. [131251]

Ms Hewitt: Accounts for the World Trade Organisation ministerial are not currently available and can be produced only at disproportionate cost. The costs will be spilt over a number of different Departments. Each Department publishes its financial accounts after the end of the relevant financial year.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the total cost was of Ministers' and civil servants' attendance at the Cancun Fifth World Trade Organisation ministerial, including accommodation and travel charges. [131260]

Ms Hewitt: Accounts for the World Trade Organisation ministerial are not currently available and can be produced only at disproportionate cost. The costs will be spilt over a number of different Departments. Each Department publishes its financial accounts after the end of the relevant financial year.

DEFENCE

HMS Tireless

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the cost of repair to HMS Tireless is; when he will return to service; what the result was of the inquiry into the incident; and if he will make a statement. [131934]

Mr. Ingram: HMS Tireless rejoined the Fleet earlier this month. The cost of the repair has still to be finalised, but is expected to be under £1 million.

This incident was subject to a Royal Navy Board of Inquiry (BOI). A BOI is an internal fact-finding investigation into the circumstances surrounding a particular incident, undertaken by the Services for internal use. The main purpose is to establish the facts concerning an incident as quickly as possible and to make recommendations aimed at preventing a recurrence. The Board found no grounds for any disciplinary action.

Alvis Vickers

Mr. David Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Alvis Vickers personnel were dispatched to Kuwait in the period immediately preceding the invasion of Iraq to upgrade British Army vehicles; what assessment he has made of the contribution of the upgrades provided by Alvis Vickers to the performance of the British Army on Operation Telic; and what weight will be given to a proven ability to provide operational support and upgrade work when choosing a contractor for the Future Rapid Effect System. [130409]

Mr. Ingram: Some 60 AVL personnel went to Kuwait to support British troops on Operation Telic. Equipment availability is a key factor in any military operation, and we greatly value the contribution made by civilian contractors. The capacity to support equipment effectively when it enters service is a consideration for acquisition programmes, and this will be the case with FRES.

Armed Forces (Modernisation)

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy not to reduce the strength and establishments of (a) Royal Navy frigates, destroyers and submarines, (b) the Army Air Corps, (c) the Infantry, (d) the Royal Armoured Corps, (e) the Royal Artillery, (f) the Royal Engineers, (g) RAF squadrons and (h) RAF aircraft procurement programmes. [131694]

Mr. Ingram: In his speech to RUSI on 26 June this year (a copy of which is available in the Library of the House), the Defence Secretary made clear how we will continue to modernise our armed forces to respond to changes in society, technology and the strategic environment.

Arms Sales Exhibition (Excel Centre)

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the cost was of policing the arms sales exhibition at the Excel Centre in London. [130294]

Mr. Ingram: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 18 September 2003 Official Report, column 950W to the hon. Member for Twickenham (Dr. Cable). The final cost remains to be established.

Death-in-service Benefits

Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to improve the death-in-service benefits and pensions of servicemen and women. [131419]

Mr. Caplin: I refer my hon. Friend to my written statement on 15 September 2003, Official Report, columns 39–40WS.

Defence Attaches

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many defence attaché staff there are at each diplomatic post abroad; what the roles of those based in the United States are; and what proportion of their working time was spent on each major activity in the last year for which figures are available. [131774]

Mr. Ingram: A total of 128 United Kingdom Defence attachés/advisors are currently deployed in 82 locations as follows:

Country	City	Number of attachés at post
Albania	Tirana	1 Army
Angola	Luanda	1 Army
Argentina	Buenos Aires	2 (1 Army, 1 RAF)

There are a total of four officers (2 RN, 2 RAF) employed in Canada, Russia, India and USA as Office Managers; these are not accredited diplomatic posts.

The principal role of an attaché is to further the UK's Defence Diplomacy aims in his host country. This is articulated as six core attaché functions:

Support to Defence Diplomacy;

Provision of Operational Military Advice and Assistance;

Provision of Politico-Military Advice;

Support to Defence Intelligence;

Support to Defence Exports; and Representation and Administrative Support.

With the exception of Washington, the average percentage effort devoted to each core function by attachés employed in British embassy Defence sections is as follows:

Support to Defence Diplomacy—38 per cent.

Provision of Operational-Military Advice—16 per cent.

Provision of Politico-Military Advice—12 per cent.

Support to Defence Intelligence—8 per cent.

Support to Defence Exports—16 per cent.

Representation and Administrative Support—10 per cent.

A similar breakdown of Washington's outputs against the same six functions is as follows:

Support to Defence Diplomacy—33 per cent.

Provision of Operational-Military Advice—16 per cent.

Provision of Politico-Military Advice—15 per cent.

Support to Defence Intelligence—14 per cent.

Support to Defence Exports—4 per cent.

Representation and Administrative Support—18 per cent.

The main area of variance between Washington and the rest of the world is its support to Defence Exports. Within the British Defence Staff Washington there is a significant non-diplomatically accredited Defence Equipment Staff dedicated to supporting this core function.

European Competition Policy

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with European partners on the development of European competition policy in the defence industry. [130807]

Mr. Sutcliffe: I have been asked to reply.

I have had no discussions on this issue with European partners. My hon. Friend the Minister for Employment Relations, Industry and the Regions represented the UK at the 13 May 2003 EU Competitiveness Council where the European Commission Communication of 11 March 2003, entitled "European Defence—Industrial and Market Issues: Towards an EU Defence Equipment Policy", was discussed. As a result, the European Commission plans to present its reflections on the application of competition rules in the defence sector for further discussion, possibly by the end of 2003.

Firing Ranges

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what firing ranges, other than Tipner, are used by the Royal Navy; and how many days in each of the last three years these alternatives have been used. [131430]

Mr. Caplin: The Royal Navy has used the following ranges other than Tipner in the Portsmouth area:

Firing ranges	Days used
MWS (Collingwood)	549
Army Cadet Range at Browndown	90
MWS (Dryad)[1]	375
Pirbright (Army)	15
Bisley (Army)	60

[1] Closes 2004.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many days, in each of the last three years, the Tipner firing ranges have been used by (a) Royal Navy and (b) other agencies. [131429]

Mr. Caplin: The information requested is only readily available for the last 12 months, but there is no reason to believe that the pattern of usage has changed significantly over the last three years:

RN—252 days

Other Agencies—58 days

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for the future use of the Tipner firing ranges; and if he will make a statement. [131431]

Mr. Caplin: The ranges at Tipner are vital to maintaining military training for the Royal Navy in the Portsmouth area, and will remain in use for the foreseeable future.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there has been a recent study into the use of Tipner firing ranges by Brent geese; and if he will make a statement. [131428]

Mr. Caplin: There has been no Ministry of Defence sponsored study into the use of Tipner ranges by Brent Geese. However, the MOD is aware of two recent studies, by the Hampshire and Isle of Wight Wildlife Trust and Ecological Planning and Research.

Future Rapid Effects System

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his Department's planned expenditure on (i) the Future Rapid Effects System and (ii) all other armoured vehicle projects is over the next 15 years. [130620]

Mr. Ingram: The Ministry of Defence's financial planning processes focus on ten years ahead for equipment acquisition costs and four years ahead for other areas of expenditure. It is not therefore possible to provide the detailed cost information sought over a 15 year period.

The Future Rapid Effects System project is still in its concept phase. We are therefore yet to endorse the acquisition cost of the project, although it could be in the region of £6 billion.

Other armoured vehicle projects (which have passed their Main Gate investment decision point) are shown below, together with their post Main Gate expected acquisition costs:

Future Beach Recovery Vehicle (£13 million);
Viking (£73 million);
Terrier (£365 million);
Titan and Trojan (£407 million);
Future Command and Liaison Vehicle (£238 million).

In addition, two other armoured vehicle projects—the Armoured Battlegroup Support Vehicle (ABSV) and the Warrior Mid Life Improvement—are still in their concept phases. Consequently, costs have yet to be agreed for these programmes.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether funding for other armoured vehicle projects has been changed as a consequence of the funding arrangements for the Future Rapid Effects System. [130621]

Mr. Ingram: The Ministry of Defence's annual planning round is used to balance levels of investment across capabilities to ensure that our acquisition plans are, in aggregate, affordable within the resources allocated to the future equipment programme. At the individual project level, there is therefore no direct or specific linkage between increased funding in one area and reductions in another.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make an announcement on the Future Rapid Effects System; and if he will make a statement on its role in the future capability of the Army. [130623]

Mr. Ingram: FRES will be at the forefront of the Army's rapid intervention capability, across the spectrum of missions from warfighting to peace-keeping. It is expected that the capability will be provided by a system of air-transportable medium weight armoured vehicles and that it will operate as an integral part of future network-enabled forces.

As part of the current concept phase of the FRES project, the MOD has been undertaking planning work in order to inform decisions on how best to take the programme forward. The MOD is now considering procurement options and we expect to make an announcement later this year on the way ahead for the project.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he estimates that the number of variants for the proposed Future Rapid Effects System will fall below 15. [130782]

Mr. Ingram: The Future Rapid Effects System (FRES) project is in its concept phase. The optimum make up of the FRES fleet will be determined by studies planned for the subsequent assessment phase of the programme. Only when these studies have been completed will we be able to finalise the number of variants required.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when he expects the A400M to be compatible with the requirements of the proposed Future Rapid Effects System; and how this has been affected by the delays in the assessment phase for the Future Rapid Effects System; [130783]

(2) what extra costs he expects to incur to the A400M programme to make it compatible with the requirements of the proposed Future Rapid Effects System. [130775]

Mr. Ingram: The requirements for the Future Rapid Effects System (FRES) are still being developed as part of the project's concept phase. Studies are planned for the next phase of the FRES programme to examine coherence with associated programmes including A400M. These studies will ensure that the FRES requirements take into account the need for air portability. The contract for the A400M programme has now been signed. It is not currently expected that there will be any consequent adjustments to it, and therefore no additional costs have been identified.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the effects of the timescales for (a) the A400M and the development of a strategic lift capability and (b) the awarding of the contract for the Future Rapid Effects System on (i) the development of a rapidly deployable medium force capability and (ii) the projected in-service date of the Future Rapid Effects System. [130804]

Mr. Ingram: In seeking a better balance in our deployable land forces, we plan to shift from the current mix of light and heavy forces representing the two extremes of deployability and combat power to a more graduated and balanced structure of light, medium and heavy forces, together with a greater emphasis on enabling capabilities such as logistics, engineers and intelligence. The introduction of the air-transportable, medium-weight Future Rapid Effects System family of vehicles is one part of this re-balancing. The ISD for FRES will be formally set at the Main Gate investment decision, however the planning assumption for its ISD remains around the end of this decade. A400M enters service in a comparable timeframe—its ISD is 2011.

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he plans to purchase or lease further C-17s to provide a strategic lift capability for the proposed Future Rapid Effects System. [130781]

Mr. Ingram: The MOD is currently considering the retention in service of a small fleet of C17 aircraft. This is not specifically linked to the introduction of the Future Rapid Effects System (FRES), although C17s could have utility in this role alongside other airlift assets.

Iraq

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contribution the Government has made to ensure that an accurate central list of Iraqi detainees in coalition-run prisons in Iraq, with names in Arabic, is kept. [130354]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 16 September 2003]: The names of all Iraqis held at the Theatre Internment Facility are held on a database which includes Arabic names that have been transliterated into English by an interpreter. A list of names of all UK detained Iraqis held in the Theatre Internment Facility, and for which the UK Military is therefore responsible, is passed onto the International Committee of the Red Cross every two weeks.

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what the estimated monthly cost of keeping British military personnel and equipment in Iraq and the surrounding region is, following the recent deployment of extra troops; [131510]

(2) what the estimated total cost to date is of deploying British military personnel and kit to Iraq. [131520]

Mr. Ingram: The Ministry of Defence identifies the costs of Operations in terms of the net additional costs it has incurred. The costs which the Department would have incurred had the operation not been undertaken—expenditure on wages and salaries or on conducting training exercises, for example—are deducted from the total costs of the operation.

Calculating all the costs of military action will take some time since they will include the cost of ammunition, bombs and guided weapons consumed in excess of peacetime levels and the cost of repairing and replacing equipment destroyed and damaged. We do however estimate the cost of preparatory activities in 2002–03 at around £700 million, less than the £1 billion set aside at Spring Supplementary Estimates 2002–03. This estimate includes the procurement or modification of equipment, increased maintenance and stock consumption, civil sea and air charter and provision of infrastructure in-theatre. A figure for total costs in 2002–03 including the cost of operations up to 31 March 2003 will be published in the Department's Resource Accounts at the end of October 2003.

It is too early to estimate the costs likely to arise in 2003–04. Once these are known, additional funding will be sought in the normal way through Supplementary Estimates.

Costs are not incurred on a regular monthly basis and force levels have fluctuated considerably during 2003–04. As a result, to attempt to provide monthly average costs would be misleading.

Suez Canal (Medals)

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when he plans to issue qualification criteria for the medal for service in the Suez Canal Zone; how long the distribution of medals will take; and what factors underlie this timetable; [131437]

(2) what measures he is taking to try to ensure that Suez Canal Zone veterans receive their medals before this year's Remembrance Day service; [131438]

(3) what measures he will take to minimise the number of veterans who lose their eligibility to the Suez Canal Zone medal because of the lack of detail in service records of the 1950s. [131439]

Mr. Caplin: Final approval of the Suez Medal is now awaited. As soon as that occurs I will make a statement to the House. Prior to that officials are carrying out preparatory work on the applications already received, and aim to issue medals to eligible veterans as soon as practicable.

It is hoped that everyone who served in the Suez Canal Zone for the requisite number of days, within the designated dates and geographical boundaries which are in the process of being agreed, will receive a medal and/or clasp. However, on some individual Service records it might be more difficult to confirm eligibility from the limited information. In such cases, the files will be cross-referenced against the detailed Service records and maps that have been prepared by officials from contemporary historical documents. These will help to determine which Units, ships, regiments, squadrons etc. were deployed in the Canal Zone during the period specified in the White Paper. In rare cases where the evidence is insufficient to confirm eligibility for the medal, the medal offices may have to invite veterans to supply additional proof of entitlement in the form of contemporary official documentation, but it is hoped that this will not be necessary, I expect most veterans to receive their medals during the course of next year.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

14 to 19 Curriculum

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what his policy is on working with (a) Sea Cadets, (b) Army Cadets and (c) Air Training Corps in the provision of greater curriculum flexibility for 14 to 19 year olds. [131812]

Mr. Miliband: Our policy document, 14 to 19: Opportunity and Excellence sets out how we intend to ensure that young people are offered greater choice, coherence and quality in their programmes. We explained that all 14 to 19 year olds should be involved in wider activities and experience beyond the curriculum which can enrich learning, while developing practical skills and interests. Participation in the Sea and Army Cadets and the Air Training Corps is one positive form of such participation.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment he has made of the pilot schemes for greater flexibility in the 14 to 19 curriculum. [131814]

Mr. Miliband: The 14 to 19 pathfinders, which are testing, among other things, greater curriculum flexibility and choice, are currently being evaluated. We plan to publish the outcomes in January 2004. In addition, the 'Increased Flexibility for 14 to 16 year olds' Programme has provided new vocational and work-related learning opportunities for this age group, including provision of the new GCSEs in vocational subjects. This Programme too is being evaluated and the findings are due to be published early in 2004.

In the meantime, we intend to amend the National Curriculum at Key Stage 4 to give schools greater flexibility in responding to the needs of their pupils. The Working Group on 14 to 19 Reform has been asked to consider how there might be greater coherence in learning programmes for young people throughout their 14 to 19 education.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what funds were allocated to (a) schools, (b) futher education colleges and (c) other providers in connection with pilot schemes for greater flexibility in the 14 to 19 curriculum in 2003–04. [131813]

Mr. Miliband: The information is not available in the form requested. In the academic year 2003/04, £16 million has been allocated to the 14–19 pathfinders which are testing, among other things, greater curriculum flexibility and choice.

All the 14–19 pathfinders involve partnership and collaboration among a variety of different institutions and providers including schools, colleges, training providers, employers and higher education institutions. Funding is allocated and monitored at partnership level through the pathfinder lead body, which may be, for example, the local education authority, Local Learning and Skills Council, a school or an FE college.

The 'Increased Flexibility for 14–16 year olds' Programme is also providing new vocational and work-related learning opportunities for this age group, including provision of the new vocational GCSEs. During 2003–04, this Programme is providing £38.3 million via the Learning and Skills Council to the lead partners, which are mainly FE colleges, to support provision in schools and colleges.

We also expect schools and FE colleges to use their mainstream funding to provide greater curriculum flexibility.

Access Agreements

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills when it will be possible to approve access agreements for higher education institutions for incorporation in their prospectus for potential students; and what assessment he has made of the implications for a student who is accepted for entry by a higher education institution of cases where (a) an access agreement has not been concluded and (b) an access agreement has been reached and promulgated but is subsequently modified. [131541]

Alan Johnson: We expect the Office for Fair Access to approve access agreements in time for universities to inform prospective students' applications to higher education. We therefore expect agreements to be in place before students are accepted for places and would not expect the agreement to change in respect of a students already committed to a course once it has been approved.

Class Sizes (Suffolk)

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the average class size is in Suffolk schools for (a) 5, (b) 6, (c) 7, (d) 8, (e) 9, (f) 10 and (g) 11-year-olds in each year since 1997. [131836]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: Average class size by national curriculum year group (first collected in 1998) is shown in the table.

Maintained primary schools[1]: average class size taught by one teacher by year group[2] Position in January each year—Suffolk Local Education Authority

	National curriculum year group
	1	2	3	4	5	6
1998	26.1	26.5	27.3	27.1	26.2	25.7
1999	26.6	26.1	26.5	26.9	26.6	27.4
2000	26.0	26.4	27.0	27.0	26.5	26.2
2001	25.4	25.8	26.6	26.8	27.3	26.0
2002	24.9	25.4	26.5	26.7	27.4	26.7
2003	25.8	25.4	26.7	26.8	26.3	26.1

[1] Includes middle deemed primary schools.
[2] Classes as taught during a single selected period in each school on the day of the census in January.

Education Spending

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much was spent per primary school pupil, using figures adjusted for inflation, in (a) Suffolk, (b) Norfolk, (c) Essex, (d) Cambridgeshire and (e) the UK in each year since 1997. [131835]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested is only available from 1999–2000 onwards. Due to changes in the school funding system, it is not possible to provide corresponding figures for previous years. My Department collects data for schools in England only. The information available is contained in the following table:

Expenditure per primary school pupil

LEA name	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02
Cambridgeshire	2,247	2,413	2,561
Essex	2,280	2,519	2,678
Norfolk	2,275	2,489	2,792
Suffolk	2,447	2,634	2,803
England	2,402	2,572	2,781

Notes:
1. Figures calculated using Net Current Expenditure (after recharges) which includes expenditure within schools and also that incurred centrally by the LEA's.
2. Real terms figures used are adjusted to 2002–03 prices using 27 June 2003 GDP deflators.
3. Figures are as reported by the LEA.
4. Financial data is drawn from the DfES Section 52 outturn statements.
5. Pupil data are drawn from the Annual Schools Census adjusted to be on a financial year basis.

Education Standards

Mr. Mike Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many (a) boys and (b) girls reached the required standards in (i) English and (ii) maths at key stage (A) 1, (B) 2, (C) 3 and (D) 4 in each year since 1997, broken down by local education authority, using value added data. [131467]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested in this question has been placed in the Library in answer to PQ127922.

The tables show, for each local education authority, the number of boys and girls in maintained schools who achieved the expected level in each year from 1997 to 2002. The figures shown are based on:

Pupils achieving level 2 or above at Key Stage 1 in reading and in maths

Pupils achieving level 4 or above at Key Stage 2 in English and in maths

Pupils achieving level 5 or above at Key Stage 3 in English and in maths

Pupils achieving good grades (A*—C) at GCSE in English and in maths.

Educational Maintenance Allowance

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on the progress of the pilot schemes on the Education Maintenance Allowance scheme. [131408]

Alan Johnson: An independent evaluation of EMAs has been taking place since 1999. Evidence from the second year of the pilots, which was published in July 2002, shows that EMAs have increased the number of eligible young people in full time education in year 12 in pilot areas by 5.9 percentage points compared to local authority areas without EMAs. The EMA scheme will be available across the whole of England from 2004 and the pilot scheme will continue until then.

Evaluation of the pilots has also provided information on which features of the different variants are most effective. This has informed development of the national model.

EU Enlargement

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many full-time students in British higher education came from countries which are (a) about to be admitted to the EU and (b) in the European Economic Area, in the last year for which figures are available; and what estimate he has made of the likely loss of income to higher education institutions from fees revision when enlargement takes place. [129986]

Alan Johnson: In 2001/02, 3,258 full-time undergraduate students in British higher education came from countries which are about to be admitted to the EU, and 55,356 came from the European Economic Area.

Assuming that international students would pay an average fee of upwards of £6,500 in 2004/05, then the likely loss of income to higher education institutions from those students admitted to the EU would be at least £17 million. Students studying in England would become eligible for funding from HEFCE; the amount depending on the course of study.

European Higher Education Reform

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on the conclusion of the Berlin Conference on the Bologna Process for higher education institutions, held in September 2003. [131534]

Alan Johnson: The Government welcome the outcomes of the recent Berlin ministerial meeting on the Bologna process of European higher education reform. The process of reform will make it increasingly easy for students and researchers to gain the social and educational benefits from studying in another European country. In Berlin, Education Ministers set clear goals for 2005 on making progress across Europe on degree structures, on credit systems and on quality assurance. This will ensure that there is no danger of the process of reform slowing down.

In addition, another seven countries joined the Bologna process in Berlin. This raises to 40 the total number of countries committed to working together to build a successful and attractive European higher education area by the end of the decade, an important plank of the Lisbon agenda on competitiveness.

Food Expenditure

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much was spent on food by his Department and by each agency for which it is responsible in (a) 2001–02 and (b) 2002–03; what proportion of that food by value was produced in the United Kingdom; what guidance he has issued to encourage the procurement of home-grown food; and if he will make a statement. [129382]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: In 2001–02 DfES recorded expenditure of £448,893 on hospitality and £71,829 on contract payments. The figures for 2002–03 were £531,494 and £19,487 respectively. Expenditure on food in DfES is generally limited to official hospitality and canteen subsidies/contract payments. Records of spend on food provided at external conferences and like events are not kept centrally and so have not been included. Unfortunately, we are unable to breakdown this expenditure further. Our service provider is encouraged to purchase fresh UK produce wherever possible. Guidance produced by Defra on "Integrating Sustainable Development into Public Procurement of Food and Catering" has been issued to our service provider and associated action plan completed.

GCSE Pass Marks

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment he has made of changes in GCSE examination pass-marks in the last (a) five and (b) 10 years. [131807]

Mr. Miliband: QCA as the statutory regulator for public examinations has responsibility for the maintenance of standards. The Chief Executive of QCA will write to the hon. Member providing details of the assessments the Authority has made.

Learning and Skills Councils

John McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on the impact of Reshaping in the Learning and Skills Councils on the delivery of the organisations functions. [131733]

Alan Johnson: The Learning and Skills Council is undertaking a reshaping exercise which is designed to build on its existing strengths to enhance its capacity to work with partners to develop and to implement the strategies necessary to achieve national targets for skills and learning, while streamlining routine administrative arrangements. The reshaping programme will not damage the LSC's ability to deliver. It will improve the organisation's overall efficiency and effectiveness. The reshaping programme is a matter for the Learning and Skills Council, and I have therefore asked Mark Haysom, the council's chief executive, to write to my hon. Friend with further information. A copy of his reply will be placed in the Library.

John McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) how much he estimates will be saved by the exercise Reshaping in the Learning and Skills Councils; [131734]

(2) how many staff he estimates will leave their posts as a result of the exercise Reshaping in the Learning and Skills Councils; [131735]

(3) what the timetable is for the completion of the exercise Reshaping in the Learning and Skills Councils. [131736]

Alan Johnson: These are matters for the Learning and Skills Council. Mark Haysom, the council's chief executive, will write to my hon. friend with this information and a copy of his reply will be placed in the Library.

Non-EU Students

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list the 50 further education colleges with the lowest percentage of non-European Union students successfully completing their courses, giving (a) the percentage for each institution and (b) the number of non-EU students at each institution in the last year for which figures are available. [131727]

Alan Johnson: The information requested is not available. The Learning and Skills Council (LSC) only publish success, retention and achievement rates for those learners funded by the council in further education colleges and external institutions in England. However, the majority of learners from countries outside of the European Union are not funded by the LSC—so figures are not available.

Furthermore, the LSC do not publish further education institution success, retention and achievement rates based on less than 500 learners as they can be misleading. In 2001/02, less than 15 further education institutions in England had more than 500 LSC funded non-European Union students.

Physical Education

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list for each school in Shrewsbury and Atcham the average number of hours for which schoolchildren undertake physical education. [132286]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: This information is not currently held in the format requested and can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proportion of schools provide a minimum of two hours physical education per week for school children. [132287]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The Government are investing more than £1 billion in England to transform physical education (PE) and school sport. This funding will help deliver an ambitious Public Service Agreement target, shared by DfES and DCMS, to increase the percentage of school children who spend a minimum of two hours each week on high quality PE and school sport within and beyond the curriculum to 75 per cent. by 2006. Currently, about a quarter of schools provide this entitlement at key stage 1, two-fifths at key stage 2 and a third at key stages 3 and 4.

School Catering

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills which schools in Shrewsbury and Atcham allow the sale of drinks with a high added sugar content to schoolchildren. [132285]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The Department for Education and Skills does not collect this information.

School Curriculum (Music and Dance)

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what his policy is towards including the promotion of English folk songs and English folk dances in the school curriculum; and if he will make a statement. [131611]

Mr. Miliband: We believe that a broad range of high quality music and dance experiences should be available to all our young people, whatever their background and wherever they live.

Opportunities for pupils to sing, dance and make music from a range of times, places and cultures are firmly embedded within the National Curricula for Music and Physical Education. In England, we have a rich folk tradition which teachers can draw upon. However, it is for the individual teacher to select their repertoire, based on their own professional judgement and expertise.

School Funding

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on school funding in (a) York and (b) North Yorkshire. [131477]

Mr. Miliband: Between 1997–98 and 2003–04, North Yorkshire's total funding per pupil has increased in cash terms from 2,340 to 3,460 an increase of 48 per cent. York's funding has increased from £2,290 to £3,290, an increase of 44 per cent.

School Opening Hours

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment he has made of the implications for parental choice for schools of the announcement of proposals to stagger the school day; and if he will make a statement. [131618]

Mr. Miliband: School governing bodies will continue to set school opening hours to suit the circumstances of parents and pupils at their school. The recent publication "Travelling to School: an action plan" encourages school to work with their local authority and transport providers to consider whether staggered school opening hours can allow pupils to access a wider range of school based activities, cut costs and improve services by allowing the same number of buses to provide a service to many more pupils. Decisions on school session times are and will remain a matter for individual schools. If schools in their local area adopt different times, parents with reasons to prefer one school's opening hours to another's will no doubt take this into account in choosing a school.

Skills Gap (Suffolk)

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment he has made of the skills gap in the Suffolk work force aged over 16 years old. [131837]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: My Department measures skills gaps in the Employers Skills Survey. The 2001 survey indicated that 8 per cent. of establishments in Suffolk reported skills gaps within their current work force. This was slightly above the England average of 7 per cent.

Up to date information will be available through the LSC National Employers Skill Survey which will provide assessments of skills gaps in the current work force for individual LSC areas. It will be available in December 2003.

Teacher Redundancies

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many school teachers have been made redundant in each local education authority in each year since 1997. [131847]

Mr. Miliband: Statistical First Release 23/2003, released on 9 September, provides teacher numbers at regional and LEA level for each year since 1997. Provisional national and regional figures for January 2004 are due to be published next April. Definitive statistics on teacher redundancies are not collected centrally.

University Tuition Fees

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much was paid in tuition fees for higher education in UK universities by citizens of British Overseas territories in each of the last five years, broken down by territory; and what proportion of the fees were (a) reimbursed by the government of that territory and (b) borne by the individual. [131809]

Alan Johnson: The information requested is not collected centrally.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

BBC Licence Fee

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recent representations she has received on the future of the BBC television licence. [131471]

Estelle Morris: Representations on the future of the television licence fee are not recorded separately from other representations about television licensing received by the Department for Culture, Media and Sport. In the year from April 2002 to March 2003, the Department received 268 letters from Members of Parliament and 527 letters from members of the public about all aspects of television licensing.

The forthcoming review of the BBC's Royal Charter will include public consultation on the Corporation's funding arrangements.

Call Centres

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport whether her Department plans to outsource call centre work to premises outside the United Kingdom. [132107]

Mr. Caborn: DCMS is not an organisation that operates a call centre.

Cinemas (Sub-titling and Audio Description)

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport pursuant to the answer of 15 September, Official Report, column 520W, on subtitled films, what steps her Department is taking to ensure initiatives are introduced to supply cinemas in (a) Scotland, (b) Wales and (c) Northern Ireland with subtitling and audio-description equipment to improve access to cinemas by people with hearing and sight impairments. [131560]

Estelle Morris: The UK Film Council, the Government's strategic adviser for film, is in discussion with the national screen agencies, the Northern Ireland Film and Television Commission, Scottish Screen and Sgrin Cymru Wales about improving access to cinemas for people with hearing and sight impairments. I am writing to the devolved Administrations to express my support for this very valuable initiative.

Community Sports Coaches

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport pursuant to her answer of 19 June, Official Report, column 343W, on community sports coaches, what the current Budget allocation for the community sports coaches schemes is; and whether it is sufficient to meet the target of 3000 coaches by 2006. [131630]

Mr. Caborn: Of the £28 million that DCMS is investing to implement the key recommendations of the Coaching Task Force, the Community Sports Coach scheme has been allocated a total of £16.1 million: £0.5 million in 2003–04, £5.0 million in 2004–05 and £10.6 million in 2005–06.

This is sufficient for 3,000 full-and part-time community sports coaches by 2006. I have today written to my hon. Friend with more detail about progress with the scheme. I am arranging for copies of the letter to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many consultancies were commissioned by her Department in the last two years for which figures are available; and what the cost of those contracts was. [130906]

Mr. Caborn: In 2001–02 11 contracts were awarded at a cost of £323,820, while in 2002–03 16 contracts were awarded at a cost of £693,000.

Digital Curriculum

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what discussions she has had with the BBC on the delay in announcing its outline plan for the digital curriculum; [131526]

(2) if she will make a statement on the timetable for the BBC's (a) announcement of an outline plan regarding and (b) launch of the digital curriculum; [131527]

(3) what discussions she has had with the BBC on the content of its outline plan for the digital curriculum, with particular reference to the commissioning of content from the independent production sector. [131528]

Estelle Morris: The conditions on the approval of the Digital Curriculum require the BBC to publish a five-year commissioning plan, no less than 15 months before the launch of the service. The European Commission announced on 1 October 2003 that the Digital Curriculum was compatible with European state aid rules. The BBC is therefore now able to pursue its work on the service, and has announced that it intends to launch the full service in 2006, following a series of pilot projects. In accordance with the conditions, half of all content will be commissioned from external producers.

English Folk Songs /Dance

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what her policy is towards promoting English folk songs and English folk dances; and if she will make a statement; [131607]

(2) what action she (a) has taken since 1997 and (b) plans to take in future years to promote English folk songs and English folk dances; and if she will make a statement. [131608]

Estelle Morris: The Department for Culture, Media and Sport recognises the particular contribution of folk arts to rural life regeneration and cultural tourism. In March 2003, Arts Council England announced increases in core funding to contemporary music, including folk music, of £1.7 million. This included an increase of over £100,000 to Folk Arts England to support the development of a dynamic English folk music sector.

Arts Council funding for the Colchester Arts Centre, which provides a diverse programme of folk music will also rise over the next three years by 16.5 per cent. to £104,000.

Football Grounds (Standing Areas)

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment she has made as to the safety implications of introducing small sections of standing areas at football grounds. [132402]

Mr. Caborn: The Government's position on standing at football grounds has not changed. Whatever their size, standing terraces are implicitly more dangerous to spectators than seated areas. As such, there are no plans to revise the all seater policy, which applies to all Premier and First Division grounds.

I have made it clear to those who seek changes to that policy that it will remain in place unless or until compelling technical evidence is produced that it is no longer necessary. My officials regularly discuss the Government's position on this issue with the Football Supporters' Federation and other interested parties. No technical evidence in favour of the re-introduction of standing areas has been produced to date.

Grade I Listed Buildings

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make list the Grade I listed buildings in England which are classified as at risk; and if she will make a statement. [131683]

Mr. Caborn: 288 Grade I listed buildings are included in English Heritage's Buildings at Risk Register 2003, which was published on 18 July, copies of which have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. The Register is also available as a database on English Heritage's website: www.english-heritage.org.uk/bar

Iraq (Heritage/Conservation)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make a statement on her support for training conservation and heritage professionals in Iraq since 15 September. [130812]

Tessa Jowell: The Government are committed to supporting the Iraqi people in securing the long-term well being of Iraqi collections and antiquities. We believe that the most sustainable way of achieving this is to ensure that the museums have Iraqi conservators, curators and restorers who have the necessary and up-to-date skills to look after the collections. The British Museum, English Heritage and other organisations funded through my Department are consequently providing initially six secondment scholarships to help train Iraqi Board of Antiquities staff in the skills which the board most urgently needs. A number of staff have already been identified who will come to the UK to undertake secondments in the British Museum as soon as possible. In addition, my Department has compiled a database of offers for help and support by a number of UK-based heritage bodies and will match these offers with future needs identified by the Board of Antiquities.

Irish Art/Culture/Sport

John McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what support her Department has given to the promotion of Irish art, culture and sport in this country since 2001. [131732]

Estelle Morris: DCMS does not directly support the promotion of Irish art, culture and sport. This is a matter for the Arts Council of Northern Ireland, the Arts Council (Republic of Ireland), the Sports Council for Northern Ireland and the Irish Sports Council. However, art organisations, whose work incorporates Irish art and culture, have received grants from our sponsored body for the arts in England, Arts Council England.

Licensing Act 2003

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when her Department will publish details of the (a) fees that will be charged under the Licensing Act 2003 and (b) subordinate legislation under the Act explaining (i) the prescribed forms of application and (ii) the building plans that will be required. [132155]

Mr. Caborn: The Government intend to introduce all of the secondary legislation that will be required for transition to the new licensing regime, including that on fees, forms and plans, as soon as possible.

Sports Facilities (Modernisation)

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make a statement on how the money earmarked in the Budget statement for a pilot scheme of capital modernisation of sports facilities has been spent. [131579]

Mr. Caborn: This is not a pilot scheme. The Government are making £60 million available to 16 governing bodies for capital work at affiliated amateur sports clubs over the period 2003–04 to 2005–06. £20 million of this is coming from the Capital Modernisation Fund, as announced earlier this year.

This money is being made available to governing bodies to make a real difference to community sport. Each will submit a strategy document before the end of October 2003, detailing how the money will be used, and building work on new and improved facilities is expected to begin in April 2004.

Terrestrial Television

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment she has made of the number of households that will not be able to access terrestrial television following the decision to stop the free to air access on Sky television in (a) the UK, (b) Suffolk, (c) Bury St. Edmunds constituency, (d) Norfolk, (e) Cambridgeshire and (f) Essex. [131842]

Estelle Morris: Estimates of terrestrial television coverage are not available in the requested form. The estimated coverage of analogue terrestrial television services is 99.4 per cent. of the UK and currently 73.1 per cent. of UK households can receive Freeview's services via digital terrestrial television. Information about analogue coverage and digital terrestrial coverage based on post code, can be obtained from the BBC and the Independent Television Commission. BBC services on digital satellite can be viewed free-to-air without the need for a viewing card. ITV, Channel 4 and Five are now considering a scheme to enable viewers to continue receiving these services, with a viewing card.

Tyntesfield Estate

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport pursuant to her Answer of 26 June 2003, Official Report, column 212W, on the Tyntesfield Estate, what the level of the further grant award which has been agreed in principle by the Heritage Lottery Fund to be made to Tyntesfield is; and whether that grant has been made. [131453]

Mr. Caborn: The level of award which has been agreed in principle for Tyntsfield by the Heritage Lottery Fund (HLF) is £20 million. The grant will be awarded subject to the receipt and favourable assessment of a fully worked up application which meets HLF's priorities. The National Trust is currently working up this application in accordance with standard HLF procedures. The application is expected to be submitted to the HLF in December this year.

US Embassy (11 September)

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what arrangements she made for (a) access by US citizens to the US Embassy and (b) access to Grosvenor Square by members of the public offering their condolences on 11 September when the Square was closed. [131412]

Tessa Jowell: My Department liaised closely with the US Embassy throughout the organisation of this event and access to the Embassy was available on 11 September 2003. The opening of the garden was a ticket-only event for the families of the UK victims. It would not have been appropriate to allow other members of the public to participate in this very private moment. Furthermore, permitting members of the public to access the site on the day of the event would have compromised the extremely tight security which was required for such a high profile event.

LEADER OF THE HOUSE

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Leader of the House on how many occasions in financial year 2002–03 his special advisers travelled abroad in an official capacity; which places were visited; and how much each visit cost. [131705]

Mr. Hain: My special advisers made no trips abroad in an official capacity in 2002–03.

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Leader of the House what the total cost was of special advisers to his office in financial year 2002–03, broken down by (a) salary and related expenses and (b) other costs. [131706]

Mr. Hain: The information requested is set out in the table and covers the period of my right hon. Friend the Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) when he was President of the Council and Leader of the House of Commons.

MINISTER FOR WOMEN

Assaults (Minicab Drivers)

Linda Perham: To ask the Minister for Women what recent representations she has received on assaults committed against women by illegal mini-cab drivers; and when she will next discuss such assaults with the Secretary of State for Transport. [127788]

Ms Hewitt: I have not received any representations recently on this subject and have no plans to raise it with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. However, the Government are committed to reducing crime and the fear of crime wherever it occurs in the transport system.

The Government are fully aware that many people (particularly women) are concerned about using public transport, especially at night. We are working with transport operators, local authorities, the police and others to improve personal security for both pedestrians and public transport passengers.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Employment Tribunal Appeals

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Solicitor-General what the average wait before an appeal is heard against the decision of an Employment Tribunal has been in the last 12 months. [128333]

Mr. Sutcliffe: I have been asked to reply.

For appeals received in the last 12 months ending August 2003 the average time between receipt of the appeal and first hearing was four months.

Presently, appeals are on average being listed for a hearing within three months.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Approved Development Programme Funding

Bob Russell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister pursuant to his answer of 17 September (129309), if he will give his reasons as to why Approved Development Programme funding is not available for local authorities. [131617]

Keith Hill: The Approved Development Programme is the main source of public subsidy supporting the development of social and keyworker housing by registered social landlords (RSLs). Resources for the Programme are limited and not all RSLs are successful in obtaining a share.

Local authorities have an enhanced strategic housing role and they have access to revenue and capital resources separate from the Approved Development Programme to address local housing needs.

Consultation Documents

John Barrett: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the consultation documents issued by his Department in each of the last four years; what the cost was of producing each of these; how many documents were issued in each consultation; and how many responses were received in each consultation. [124578]

Yvette Cooper: The Government recommend that policy development should be done in close consultation with stakeholders. Formal consultation documents are one part of this process, which can also include:

Stakeholder meetings

Listening events/public meetings

Web forums

Public surveys

Focus groups

Regional events

Free-phone and freepost surveys and events

Targeted leaflet campaigns

Road shows and exhibitions.

It is standard practice for Departments to evaluate the policy development process, including the use of consultation. The specific information requested is not collated on a central basis and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, details of the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's recent consultation exercises are available at www.ODPM.gov.uk.

Criminal Records Bureau (Fees)

Mr. Bailey: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the financial impact of recent Criminal Records Bureau fee increases on education and social care budgets in local government. [131818]

Mr. Raynsford: Responsibility for paying the fee for a criminal record Disclosure rests with the individual applicant, although it is open to the employer to reimburse the cost. A Regulatory Impact Assessment, which assesses the impact of the fee increase across all sectors, is available in the Library of the House.

It has always been the intention that the Criminal Records Bureau (CRB) should be self-financed by means of the charges that it makes of those using the service, and that the cost of the service should not be a drain on the Exchequer. That remains the objective.

However, in the short term, the costs of the CRB will continue to be met by a combination of fee receipts and contributions from the Home Office (HO), the Department of Health (DH) and the Department for Education and Skills (DfES). In 2003–04 the HO will contribute £4 million and DH and DfES a further £7.4 million each.

Empty Housing

Mr. Pike: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister which 20 local authority areas have the highest percentage of empty housing; and if he will make a statement. [131413]

Keith Hill: Information relating to the number of empty housing is reported annually by local authorities on their Housing Investment Programme returns. The latest available data for the 20 local authority areas that have the highest percentage of empty housing are reported at 1 April 2002 and contained in the following table.

Vacants as percentage of stock at 1 April 2002

Departmental Advertising

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the total expenditure on advertising by the Department was in (a) 2001–02 and (b) 2002–03; and what the level of planned expenditure is for (i) 2003–04 and (ii) 2004–05. [114430]

Yvette Cooper: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister was created on 29 May 2002. The total expenditure on advertising by the Office in (b) 2002–03 was 3,346,943. The majority of this advertising spend was on the Fire Safety Campaign. The level of planned expenditure for (i) 2003–04 is £3 million; and for (ii) 2004–05 is £3.3 million. The majority of this advertising spend will also be on the ongoing Fire Safety campaign.

Fire Service Pensions

Mr. Heald: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to reform fire service pensions in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [126413]

Phil Hope: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister announced in the White Paper "Our Fire and Rescue Service", published on 30 June, our plans for changes to the pension arrangements for firelighters. As a first step, on 17 July a document, for consultation, detailing our proposals to amend the existing Firefighters' Pension Scheme was published.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is also planning to introduce a new scheme more suited to the service of the future as well as pension arrangements for retained firefighters. We will consult fully on our proposals in due course.

Gross Credit Approvals

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what his Department's expenditure limits for total gross credit approvals are for the 2003–04 financial year; and of those sums how much (a) has been committed, (b) is planned to be committed and (c) remains uncommitted. [126122]

Yvette Cooper: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's budget for credit approvals in 2003–04 is £1,227,062,000. Of this (a) £1,221,462,000 has been committed; (b) £5,600,000 is currently planned to be committed; and (c) none remains uncommitted.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what proportions of his Department's expenditure limits for total gross credit approvals for financial year 2002–03 were unused in that year. [126123]

Yvette Cooper: Six per cent. of the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's budget for gross credit approvals in 2002–03 remained unused at the end of the financial year although end year flexibility arrangements allow unspent budgets to be carried forward from one year to the next.

Homeless People

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many homeless families there are in the UK. [129451]

Yvette Cooper: Information on local authorities' activities under homelessness provisions in England is published in a quarterly Statistical Release, "Statutory Homelessness: England". Table 3 of the Statistical Release presents a summary of those households accepted as unintentionally homeless and in priority need under the homelessness provisions of the 1996 Housing Act. Tables 6 and 7 summarise the number of homeless households in accommodation arranged by local authorities on the last day of the quarter.

Copies of the Statistical Release are available in the Library of the House and the latest edition, published on 10 September, presents statistics up to and including the second quarter of 2003. In the period April to June 2003, local authorities accepted 36,230 households as homelessness, and as at 30 June 2003 there were 93,480 households in accommodation arranged by local authorities under homelessness provisions of Housing Acts.

For information about other parts of the United Kingdom, I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

The March 2002 report, 'More than a roof', set out the Government's approach to tackling and preventing homelessness. Specific measures included investment of £125 million in 2002–03 to support local authorities and voluntary agencies working with them to support new approaches to tackling and preventing homelessness. The Homelessness Directorate within the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has a revenue budget of £70 million and a £23.5 million capital budget for 2003–04. These resources will help to support the Government's commitment that by March 2004 no homeless family with children should be placed in a bed and breakfast hotel other than in an emergency, and even then for no more than six weeks.

Funding will also support new approaches that help people tackle the problems that are making and keeping them homeless and help to sustain the Prime Minister's target to reduce rough sleeping by two thirds of 1998 levels.

While the latest quarterly statistics show increases in homelessness acceptances and the number of homeless households in temporary accommodation, there has been a significant reduction in the number of homeless families with children placed in bed and breakfast accommodation. The number of such families has fallen by 22 per cent. over the last quarter and 44 per cent. compared with a year ago. In addition, the latest rough sleeping figures for England, also published on 10 September, estimate that 504 people were sleeping rough on any one night—the lowest ever recorded level.

The rising trend in homelessness is the result of numerous complex factors, many of which are outlined in "More than a roof". In addition, the Priority Needs Order has extended the criteria by which people are assessed to have a priority need if they are homeless.

The Homelessness Act 2002 placed a duty on local authorities to have a strategy in place by the end of July 2003 to tackle and prevent homelessness, based on a review of homelessness in their district. While the number of homelessness acceptances is likely to continue to increase in the short term, improved housing supply and increased investment in prevention should lead to reductions in the longer term.

Housing Renewal Pathfinder Project

Mr. Pike: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment his Department has made of the progress of each Housing Renewal Pathfinder Project; and if he will make a statement. [131415]

Keith Hill: On 6 October 2003 the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister announced the allocation of £125 million to the Manchester Salford pathfinder over the next two and a half years for the implementation of its scheme (Official Report, column 16W). The Newcastle Gateshead pathfinder has submitted its scheme and it is being assessed by the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and by the Audit Commission who are independently scrutinising each of the pathfinder schemes. We will announce the outcome of the negotiations on the scheme once they are complete.

On present plans we expect to have agreed the remaining schemes by the end of March 2004, with the exception of the Hull and East Riding pathfinder which received its pathfinder status on 9 September 2003 and which expects to submit its scheme to the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister by October 2004.

IT Projects

Dr. Pugh: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what major IT projects with a value in excess of £10,000 he authorised expenditure on in each of the last three financial years. [125722]

Yvette Cooper: Since its creation, the Office has approved a number of major IT projects jointly with the Department for Transport in the 2002–03 financial year, consequently there may be some overlaps between the two departments. These projects have been identified separately in the following list.

2002–03: ODPM Centre—joint projects with DfT

Market Testing

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the estimated level of saving to the Department is from the use of market testing in 2002–03. [107766]

Yvette Cooper: The information requested is not held centrally and could only be provided at a disproportionate cost.

Research and Development

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the Government is doing to encourage research and development in the North East. [130733]

Yvette Cooper: The Government are committed to encouraging investment in research and development throughout the United Kingdom. Last year, the Government allocated the largest sustained increase in the Science Budget for more than a decade; total science spending by 2005–06 will be £1¼ billion higher than in 2002–03.

To encourage commercial investment in Research and Development, the Government have a range of policies including the new Grant for Research and Development, Small Business Research Initiative (SBRI) and Research and Development tax credits to encourage companies in the North East to invest in new technologies.

Research funding for the region's five universities was £19.7 million in 2000–01 which represents 0.7 per cent. of the region's GDP.

The Government also fund ONE North East, the regional development agency. They have put in place a "Strategy for Success" which, with the support of the regional Science and Industry Council will be investing very significant amounts of Government and European funding in to the Research and Development of key emerging technologies via newly established centres of excellence. ONE North East is investing £60 million in supporting regional science, engineering and technology, some £23 per head of population, above the national average of around £5 per head.

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much the Government has spent on research and development in (a) the North East, (b) each of the other regions and (c) the UK in each year since 1997. [130734]

Jacqui Smith: I have been asked to reply.

Government research and development spending—both within higher education institutes and outside of higher education institutes—is tracked regionally through the ONS regional trend series. The most recent figures available—for 2001—are provided in Tables 1 and 2 as follows, together with figures for the years 1997–2000 inclusive.

Sponsorship

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister which of his Department's projects have received sponsorship in the last financial year; who the sponsor was in each case; what the nature of each project was; what time period was covered by each project; what the total cost of each project was; how much money was involved in each sponsorship deal; and if he will make a statement. [112405]

Yvette Cooper: The Urban Summit was held on 31 October and 1 November 2002 at a net cost of £450,000[1]. English Heritage paid £4,000 to sponsor the drinks reception. English Partnerships sponsored the Urban Summit newspaper that was produced at the end of the first day at a cost of £5,250. Advantage West Midlands and the Birmingham and Solihull Connexions Services sponsored the Cyber Cafe at a total cost of £5,000. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister does not have any information on 'sponsorship' of the delegate dinners on the first night of the Summit as these were organised and paid for direct by the dinner hosts themselves: Advantage West Midlands, Birmingham and Solihull Learning and Skills Council, Birmingham Chamber with Business Link, Birmingham City Council, English Partnerships and West Midlands Local Government Association.

The Fire Safety Campaign is designed to raise awareness of fire safety issues. In 2002–03, two campaigns were launched—The Fire Action Plan in September 2002 and Kitchen Safety in February 2003. In each case, around £750,000 in the form of in-kind support was provided by the sponsors/ Woolworths, Homebase, Argos, Currys, El Electronics, B&Q, Comet, Robert Dyas, Wickes, Energizer, Duracell, Fire Angel and Kidde Safety sponsored both campaigns and in addition the National Union of Students, Wilkinson's, Tefal and Morphy Richards sponsored the Kitchen Safety Campaign.

[1] Estimated net cost, after taking account of income from ticket sales, sponsorship and exhibition sales. This figure includes the cost of contractors, consultants and agency staff recruited to work on Summit organisation.

Travellers

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister, if he will make it his policy to give local authorities the power to seize the assets of travellers who camp illegally in order to recoup the cost of clearing sites on their departure; what guidance he gives to local authorities; what plans he has (a) to alter this advice and (b) to propose amendments to the law; and if he will make a statement. [125984]

Yvette Cooper: There are no plans to give local authorities additional powers to seize the assets of illegally camped Gypsies and Travellers in order to recoup the cost of clearing sites. Local authorities if they choose to do so, are able to use their powers under Section 77 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994, to remove unauthorised campers from land.

The police are also able to use their powers under Section 62 of the same Act to seize and remove any vehicles parked on illegal sites if a Section 61 Direction has already been served, and the owners have failed to remove them.

TRANSPORT

Air Travel Trust Fund

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the scope of the financial cover under the insolvency protection provisions of the Air Travel Trust Fund. [R] [131515]

Mr. McNulty: Customers purchasing package travel including a flight are protected financially in the event of failure of the travel organiser concerned. Customers abroad at the time of failure will be repatriated at the end of their holiday, and those who have yet to travel will be fully reimbursed for what they have paid. Under the terms of the Civil Aviation (Air Travel Organisers' Licensing) Regulations 1995, in the event of failure of a licensed travel organiser the bond established with the Civil Aviation Authority would be used to cover the repatriation and reimbursement costs. If the bond is insufficient to meet these costs the Air Travel Trust Fund would be used to make up the difference.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will bring forward legislation to change the scope of the financial protection of the Air Travel Trust Fund. [R] [131516]

Mr. McNulty: The Government have no plans to change the scope of the financial protection provided by the Air Travel Organisers' Licensing scheme, backed up by the Air Travel Trust Fund.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to extend financial protection to those booking accommodation through an on-line airline facility. [R] [131517]

Mr. McNulty: Accommodation booked on the same on-line facility as that used for the purchase of an airline ticket is already covered by the provisions of the Civil Aviation (Air Travel Organisers' Licensing) Regulations 1995 and is therefore protected financially. If the accommodation is booked on a different website the two transactions are legally distinct, and the two transactions do not constitute a package for the purposes of Council Directive 90/314/EEC on package travel, package holidays and package tours. The Government have no plans to amend the ATOL Regulations to extend the financial protection to cover this type of purchase.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what level of protection is extended under the Air Travel Trust Fund to those booking airline tickets and separate accommodation on the same website. [R] [131518]

Mr. McNulty: A company offering both air travel and accommodation on the same website is obliged to have an ATOL licence, thereby financially protecting customers who buy a package. If flight and accommodation were booked separately there would be no financial protection for the accommodation; the flight, however, would be financially protected unless the vendor issued the ticket within 24 hours of payment being made. If the flight and accommodation were linked, albeit booked separately, the vendor might recognise the linkage and issue a single invoice, thereby conferring financial protection on the resulting package.

Automotive Fuels

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce demand targets for LPG as a road fuel. [131686]

Mr. Jamieson: The Chancellor announced in Budget 2003 that the Government would be consulting stakeholders on how best to ensure that future support for road fuel gases, including LPG, continued to reflect environmental and other policy objectives, with a view to announcing decisions on future duty rates and other forms of support in the 2003 pre-Budget report. A joint Department for Transport, Treasury and Customs and Excise consultation document "Road fuel gases and their contribution to clean low-carbon transport: Establishing a consistent and durable framework of Government support" discussed the issues and invited comments by 17 September. The Government are now considering the responses received.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many vehicles in the United Kingdom were propelled by (a) LPG, (b) CNG, (c) LNG and (d) hydrogen in the last year for which figures are available. [131707]

Mr. Jamieson: DVLA statistics do not provide a breakdown by fuel type, only vehicles that are dedicated gas or petrol/gas combinations. DVLA statistics also do not distinguish between Liquefied Petroleum Gas (LPG), Natural Gas vehicles and hydrogen vehicles. Statistics from the DVLA for June 2003 show that there are 41,361 vehicles running on road fuel gases (Liquid Petroleum Gas (LPG), Compressed Natural Gas (CNG), Liquid Natural Gas (LNG) and Hydrogen).

But this understates the number of vehicles because not all conversions to alternative fuelling are notified to DVLA. Industry sources suggest there are around 100,000 vehicles currently running on LPG, around 850 on natural gas (CNG and LNG) and there are presently only a few prototype/demonstration vehicles in UK running on hydrogen.

Mr. David Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many automotive refuelling points there were in the United Kingdom for (a) LPG, (b) CNG, (c) LNG and (d) hydrogen in the last year for which figures are available. [131708]

Mr. Jamieson: Information supplied by the Energy Saving Trust show that there are currently around 1,300 LPG, 19 CNG and 7 LNG refuelling sites in the UK. There are currently no public access hydrogen refuelling points. However, a refuelling point will be available to support the Clean Urban Transport for Europe (CUTE) hydrogen fuel cell bus project.

Balloons

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what assessment he has made of the effects of introducing a domestic airworthiness standard for tethered balloons for passenger transport in advance of the introduction of a European standard, with particular reference to the effects on UK manufacturers of balloons; [131218]

(2) what options are open to manufacturers of tethered balloons for passenger transport to attain certification. [131219]

(3) when he first received reports that, under single market provision, a certification of airworthiness would be required for tethered balloons for passenger transport. [131220]

Mr. McNulty: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 29 September 2003, Official Report, 6 October 2003 columns 1057–1060W.

Biofuels

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the funding necessary to enable the UK to meet the EU targets of (a) 2 per cent. biofuels by 2005 and (b) 5.75 per cent. by 2010. [131717]

Mr. Jamieson: The EU Biofuels Directive requires member states to set their own indicative targets for sales of biofuels to be met in the years 2005 and 2010. The Government will be consulting early next year on the level of targets that might be appropriate for the UK, and on the steps that we might take to meet them. In doing so, we will take full account of the likely costs and benefits to the UK, and of the level of Government support that might be necessary.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what funds he has provided for the promotion and development of (a) sustainable liquid biofuels and (b) fossil gas fuels for road transport in the last three years. [131718]

Mr. Jamieson: The Government have supported biofuels since July 2002 by means of a 20 pence per litre duty incentive which has resulted in sales of biodiesel increasing to over 2 million litres a month from virtually nothing before that date. Biodiesel is used mainly in a 5 per cent. blend with conventional diesel, and bio-blend fuel already represents some 2 per cent. of diesel sales. Vehicles do not need to be converted to run on 5 per cent. bio-blend diesel.

In addition to this, the Government have funded a number of research projects into aspects of biofuels, including their emissions performance. The Government will be consulting early in 2004 on possible targets for biofuels sales in the UK and on how best to meet these targets.

In the last three financial years, 2002–01 to 2002–03, the Energy Saving Trusts' TransportEnergy Powershift programme has provided grants of around £12.6 million for the purchase or conversion of vehicles to run on road fuel gases (natural gas and liquefied petroleum gas). The duty rate for the gases has since Budget 2001 been 9 pence per kilogramme. The Government have been consulting key stakeholders on how best to ensure that future support continues to reflect environmental and other policy objectives, with a view to announcing decisions in the 2003 pre-Budget report.

Coach Safety

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advice his Department has given to British coach drivers on adhering to French regulations on coach travel during coach accident memorial days. [131692]

Mr. McNulty: The Department is aware that the French authorities place a restriction on coach travel during a weekend in late July or early August, annually. The date of the ban changes year-to-year, but during the 24-hour period of application, coach groups of more than 15 children under the age of 16 years are prohibited from travelling. The restrictions were originally put in place due to a number of serious coach accidents occurring at this time of year, which is traditionally the busiest weekend for transporting French children and heavy holiday traffic.

The French authorities notify the British Embassy in Paris once the date of the ban is confirmed. They in turn pass this information to the UK trade association, the Confederation of Passenger Transport (CPT), for further dissemination amongst the UK coach industry. This information would also be available from the French Embassy and industry publications. Therefore, the Department does not pass this information to UK coach operators.

Correspondence

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the Minister of State will reply to the letter of 10 September from the hon. Member for North Shropshire regarding Mr.Per Lindstrand of Lindstrand Balloons Ltd. [131217]

Mr. McNulty: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my letter to him on this subject of the 22 September 2003.

Deep Vein Thrombosis

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to his answer of 15 September 2003, Official Report, columns 499–500W, on deep vein thrombosis, when the Aviation Health Unit will come in to existence; what its composition will be; and if he will make a statement. [131932]

Mr. McNulty: The Aviation Health Unit, based at the Civil Aviation Authority's Gatwick offices and funded by this Department, will be a centre of expertise on health issues affecting air passengers and crew. The Civil Aviation Authority will announce the appointment of the Head of the Unit, and the start date of the Unit's work, shortly. The Head of the Unit will help determine its composition.

Derailment (King's Cross)

John McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the action to be taken as a result of the derailment of a train at King's Cross station on 16 September. [131729]

Mr. McNulty: The derailment remains the subject of an on-going Health and Safety Executive (HSE) investigation. HSE's HM Railway Inspectorate is still gathering evidence to inform its decision about bringing any possible enforcement action.

Network Rail has launched a formal investigation into the cause of the accident.

Disabled Parking Permits

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the level of crime associated with the theft of blue badge disabled parking permits; what steps his Department is taking to deal with such crime; and if he will make a statement. [132085]

Mr. McNulty: Vehicle crime is a matter that the Government continues to take very seriously and many initiatives are being taken forward to reduce levels of crime and theft in particular. Indeed, in recent years there has been a fall in such crime and we are on track to meet our target to reduce vehicle crime (thefts of and theft from vehicles) by 30% by March 2004.

Theft of Blue Badges and abuse of the Blue Badge Scheme is of concern to the Department. These are issues that were considered during a recent comprehensive review of the Scheme, which concluded with 47 recommendations (including a number of enforcement measures) from our statutory advisers, the Disabled Persons' Transport Advisory Committee. These have been accepted by the Government and are being taken forward. The enforcement measures include an important power for the police, traffic wardens and local authority parking enforcement officers to inspect badges to check details and the photograph of the badge holder. We are also looking at the feasibility of establishing a national database of badge holders; the introduction of smartcard technology; increasing penalties for abuse and misuse of the Scheme.

The power to inspect, and a number of other measures, will need to be introduced through primary legislation and we are looking for a suitable legislative opportunity to do so. We aim to implement the changes at the earliest opportunity.

Driving Licences

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which countries' passports (a) are and (b) are not accepted by the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency as proof of identity from individuals applying for a replacement driving licence; for what reasons the latter are not acceptable; what other form of documentation is acceptable to the DVLA; and if he will make a statement. [131501]

Mr. Jamieson: DVLA will consider passports from all countries in support of a driving licence applicant. In some cases, additional evidence of an applicant's identity may be required before a licence can be issued. A wide range of documents can be considered including birth certificates and appropriate papers issued by the Home Office. DVLA will not grant a driving licence until the identity of the applicant has been clearly established.

Euro

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much has been spent in each year by his Department in preparing for United Kingdom entry to the euro; how much his Department plans to spend on preparations for United Kingdom entry to the euro for each year from the current financial year up to and including 2005–06; and what estimates he has made of the total costs to his Department of changeover to the European Single Currency. [131606]

Mr. McNulty: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today by my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary (PQ reference 131597), at column 142W.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many official speeches he has made since June supporting entry into the euro. [131848]

Mr. McNulty: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given today by my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary (PQ reference 131748), at column 142W.

Flight Paths (Walthamstow)

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changes have taken place in the last three years in the number of aircraft on flight paths above Walthamstow. [131581]

Mr. McNulty: Records are not kept of the numbers of aircraft routed over Walthamstow. Approximately 20 to 25 per cent. of Heathrow arrivals overfly Walthamstow or adjoining areas. Aircraft inbound to London City overfly Walthamstow only occasionally.

There are no Heathrow departure routes over Walthamstow. A London City departure route passes over the south of the area.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what altitude restrictions apply to aircraft on flight paths above Walthamstow; and how these have changed in the last five years. [131582]

Mr. McNulty: The airspace over all of Walthamstow above 2,500 ft has been classified as 'controlled' for many years. Over the southernmost quarter of Walthamstow the airspace has been controlled to ground level since the opening of London City Airport. Aircraft using Heathrow and City operate within this controlled airspace. Aircraft inbound to Heathrow will normally be above 5,000 ft.

Over the remainder of my hon. Friend's constituency below 2,500 ft, helicopters and general aviation aircraft from smaller aerodromes can determine routes and altitudes according to their particular requirements. Such flights are subject to the Rules of the Air Regulations, notably Rule 5, which means most will be above 1,500 ft.

There have been no changes to the airspace over Walthamstow in the last five years.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for which airports (a) inbound and (b) outbound flight paths overfly Walthamstow; and how this has changed in the last three years. [131583]

Mr. McNulty: The information requested is as follows.

Inbound—There are no fixed paths over Walthamstow for arriving aircraft although they tend to follow a regular pattern that varies depending on wind direction and how busy Heathrow airport is at the time. Aircraft over-flying Walthamstow comprise mainly those descending from the Lambourne holding stack en route to the final approach to Heathrow, and occasionally aircraft inbound to London City. Exceptionally, aircraft inbound to Stansted may be routed over Walthamstow.

Outbound—There are no Heathrow departure routes over Walthamstow, but air traffic controllers are permitted to use all controlled airspace, and so a small number of Heathrow departures may overfly Walthamstow above 4,000ft. Any London City departures over Walthamstow will normally be above 3,000ft. Aircraft departing from other south-east airports can be routed over the Walthamstow area, but will be at much higher altitudes and probably not be heard.

There have been no changes to these airspace arrangements in the last three years.

Heathrow Airport

John McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what consultation his Department has undertaken with the Environment Agency on the risk of flooding in the Thames Valley resulting from the potential development of a third runway at Heathrow; [131730]

(2) what assessment he has made of the impact of the development of (a) a third runway and (b) the fifth terminal at Heathrow airport on the risk of flooding in (i) the Thames Valley and (ii) the London borough of Hillingdon. [131731]

Mr. McNulty: The Future Development of Air Transport in the United Kingdom: South East consultation closed on 30 June 2003. We are currently analysing over 400,000 responses to the consultation. It would not be appropriate to comment on any of the responses while the analysis is being undertaken. However, all options considered in the South East and

East of England Regional Air Services Study (SERAS), including the option for a third runway at Heathrow, were appraised for potential impacts on the water environment including any contributory risk to flooding.

The appraisal system took account of national guidance including the Environment Agency's 1 in 100 year flood plain mapping and the Flood Estimation Handbook. The option for a third runway at Heathrow Airport was assessed as having a low adverse impact on flooding.

There was a detailed Environmental Impact Assessment including flood risk for Terminal 5. The Secretary of State took account of the inspector's conclusions on environmental impacts in reaching his decisions in November 2001. The issue of the impact of the development on the Twin Rivers was unresolved at that time and a condition was imposed requiring BAA to secure planning permission for a scheme to address it. The London borough of Hillingdon has now granted permission for such a scheme.

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what assessment he has made of the impact of a third runway at Heathrow on flooding in the area; [131868]

(2) what assessment he has received from the Environment Agency on the flooding implications of building a third runway at Heathrow. [131869]

Mr. McNulty: The Future Development of Air Transport in the United Kingdom: South East consultation closed on 30 June 2003. We are currently analysing over 400,000 responses to the consultation. It would not be appropriate to comment on any of the responses while the analysis is being undertaken. However, I can confirm that all options considered in the South East and East of England Regional Air Services Study (SERAS), including the option for a third runway at Heathrow, were appraised for potential impacts on the water environment including any contributory risk to flooding.

The appraisal system took account of national guidance including the Environment Agency's 1 in 100 year flood plain mapping and the Flood Estimation Handbook. The option for a third runway at Heathrow Airport was assessed as having a Low Adverse impact on flooding.

Horley Station

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the cost to public funds of building a rail tunnel under Horley Station; and if he will make a statement. [131502]

Mr. McNulty: The Strategic Rail Authority (SRA) is responsible for promoting and securing the development of the rail network, including improvements to stations and infrastructure. The SRA has not made an estimate of the cost to public funds of building a tunnel under Horley Station and has no plans to carry out such works.

Maritime Transport Funding (Republic of Ireland)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what progress his Department has made in renegotiating the funding contributed by the UK for navigational aids used solely by vessels using ports in the Republic of Ireland; [131536]

(2) what plans he has to end the Irish Light Dues subsidy. [131540]

Mr. Jamieson: The UK is seeking to renegotiate the current agreement to require Ireland to meet the full costs of their aids to navigation. Discussions with FCO and Irish Government are ongoing but progress is slow.

We are working with the General Lighthouse Authorities to review the future requirement of marine aids to navigation. The review will examine the provision of existing and future aids in Ireland and determine whether all existing aids are required.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much was contributed by the UK authorities for navigational aids in the Republic of Ireland in each of the last five years. [131537]

Mr. Jamieson: The contribution of the General Lighthouse Fund to navigational aids in the Republic of Ireland in the last five years is assessed as follows:

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much subsidy was paid by the UK Government for each vessel using ports in the Republic of Ireland, in the last year for which figures are available. [131538]

Mr. Jamieson: We do not hold the information in the form requested in respect of the costs of providing aids to navigation for vessels using Republic of Ireland ports. Once a merchant vessel has paid light dues, there is no further liability for a period of one month from that date. Furthermore, no more than seven payments are required in any fiscal year. We therefore do not hold information on merchant vessel movements beyond the seven voyage limit. Neither do we hold records on fishing vessel or tug activity.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he (a) last raised and (b) next intends to raise the issue of light dues with the Irish Government; what discussions his Department has had with the Irish Government over the last three years regarding light dues; and what representations he has received from the Irish Government on the reform of the light dues. [131539]

Mr. Jamieson: In seeking to renegotiate the current funding agreement, light dues issues are discussed throughout the year with representatives of the Irish Government. No representations have been received on the reform of the light dues structure.

Rail Franchises

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what requirements he has placed on the Strategic Rail Authority to consult passengers in determining which applicant is to be awarded the Greater Anglia Franchise. [131610]

Mr. McNulty: As with all franchise competitions, the onus is on the bidders to consult local stakeholders. They are required to supply the Strategic Rail Authority with a summary of the consultation undertaken and how the outcome was included in their bid.

Royal Mail

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many train paths were allocated to the Royal Mail in each week in the last year for which figures are available. [131680]

Mr. McNulty: In the summer 2002 timetable 62 paths each weekday were allocated for Royal Mail services. Paths have been given up at various dates since then. As of 30 September 26 were still operative.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the mail trains and other facilities associated with the transport of mail by rail are to be mothballed following the decision of Royal Mail to send mail by road; and if he will make a statement. [131684]

Mr. McNulty: That is a matter for the owners of the trains and facilities concerned.

School Hours

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he had with the Secretary of State for Education and Skills before 16 September on proposals to stagger the school day; and if he will make a statement. [131619]

Mr. McNulty: The Secretaries of State for Transport and for Education and Skills have discussed staggered school opening hours on a number of occasions. Experience in some local authorities has shown that small changes to school opening hours can make a major difference to the economics of dedicated school bus services and can also improve services by allowing the same number of buses to provide a service to many more pupils. But this is a matter for individual schools and local authorities to take a view on, in developing comprehensive school travel plans.

Shipping Safety

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many British ships were (a) lost and (b) damaged whilst at sea in each year since 1997. [132288]

Mr. Jamieson: The numbers of United Kingdom registered merchant vessels of 100 gross tonnes[1] and over lost and damaged while in coastal or high seas since 1997 are set out in the table. This table is based on accidents reported to the Marine Accident Investigation Branch of the Department for Transport.

[1] "British Ships" has been defined as United Kingdom Merchant Vessels of 100 gross tonnes and over.

Constructive Total Loss[1]	1	0	0	0	1	0	2
Damaged	29	19	21	29	23	13	134
Total	30	19	21	29	24	13	136

[1] The term "constructive total loss" is used by insurance companies. It describes the situation where the ship insured is reasonably abandoned on account of its actual total loss appearing to be unavoidable, or because it could not be preserved from actual total loss without an expenditure which would exceed its value when the expenditure had been incurred.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the minimum strength standard that British ships are built to for (a) the hull and (b) the aft. [132289]

Mr. Jamieson: The detailed designs of structural elements of British ships are to standards which are maintained and published by those classification societies to which this responsibility has been delegated under the Merchant Shipping Acts. Such standards govern the hull and fittings, superstructures and machinery of ships and take into account hull form, speed, operational restraints and geographic area of operation. Minimum strength standards are dependent on the role of the specific vessel.

The International Association of Classification Societies (IACS) exists as a forum for the unification of such standards. IACS publishes a number of unified requirements related to ship's structures.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of British ships are built to withstand freak waves while at sea. [132290]

Mr. Jamieson: British vessels are designed to meet the worst waves reasonably expected in service. The International Association of Classification Societies (IACS) has tables showing what wave loadings are to be used for differing service requirements. Standards for ship's structures are based on known wave environments expressed statistically and incorporate appropriate safety margins. Freak waves by definition are in excess of these expectations and therefore no ship is specifically designed to meet them.

Transport (Concessionary Fares) Bill

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to accept the proposals outlined in the Transport (Concessionary Fares) Bill introduced by the right hon. Member for Gateshead, East and Washington, West (Joyce Quin) on 16 September; and if he will make a statement. [131498]

Mr. McNulty: We have ensured that older people aged 60 and over and disabled people are entitled to a free bus pass allowing half-fare travel on local buses, as a minimum. Local authorities may already run more generous schemes, such as free travel and cross boundary concessionary travel, if they wish. We have also introduced a half-fare for older people (aged 60 and over) and disabled people on many long distance scheduled coach services, in return for the operators of those services receiving grant from the Department for Transport.

Walking Strategy

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how much money has been spent on the development and production of a draft Walking Strategy; and when the final strategy will be published: [132357]

(2) what initiatives his Department has implemented to reverse the decline in people choosing to walk their journeys as a means of travelling; [132358]

(3) what plans the Government has made to establish a National Walking Board to implement the findings of the draft walking strategy; [132359]

(4) what plans the Government has made to establish a walking website as a resource for promoting walking as an alternative way of travelling short journeys. [132360]

Dr. Howells: My Department issued a discussion document to inform our strategy on walking on 30 June. "On the move: by foot" sought views on how we might improve conditions for pedestrians and increase levels of walking. The consultation period closed on 26 September. We shall consider carefully all responses received to determine the need for future resources, institutions and additional specific guidance. It is not possible to quantify accurately the costs to Government and to list the many organisations and individuals who have contributed to the development of our strategy on walking to date. We aim to publish a follow-up document before the end of this year.

My Department has implemented a range of initiatives which support sustainable travel options, including walking journeys. These focus on school and workplace travel and traffic management measures.

My Department has pledged part-funding to an alliance of Living Streets, London Walking Forum and the Ramblers Association for the development of an interactive website for practitioners and the public. It will bring together news on publications, conferences, training and good practice, as well as providing a forum for advice and exchange of views.

The Government's 10 Year Transport Plan and Liveability agenda fully recognise the benefits to the environment of more journeys on foot. The recently-established cross-Whitehall Activity Co-ordination Team is also considering how best to promote the health benefits of routine physical activity such as walking.

Wind Farms

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce offshore wind farm safety legislation to create a safety zone around the Robin Rigg Offshore. [131473]

Mr. Jamieson: The Government hope to bring forward legislation to create a comprehensive legal framework which applies to all marine renewable energy developments as soon as parliamentary time allows.

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for what reasons he decided to legislate for offshore wind farm safety for Scotland; and whether he consulted the office of the Secretary of State for Scotland before deciding to legislate in this area. [131474]

Mr. Jamieson: The Government hope to bring forward legislation relating to renewable energy developments as soon as parliamentary time allows. Officials in the Department of Transport are in regular contact with those in the Scotland Office and Scottish Executive about a range of issues concerning renewable energy developments. This will ensure fully effective provisions dealing with navigational safety in the vicinity of all offshore renewable energy developments located around the UK.

ADVOCATE-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Official Engagements

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Advocate-General for Scotland, pursuant to her Answer of 8 September 2003, Official Report, column 17W, on engagements, if she will list the Scotland Office official engagements she has undertaken over the last 12 months. [131559]

The Advocate-General for Scotland: It is not practice to list the individual engagements.

SCOTLAND

Airport Expansion

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on airport expansion in Scotland. [131479]

Mrs. McGuire: The Government will publish an air transport White Paper later this year which will include consideration of issues relating to airport capacity in Scotland and in other parts of the United Kingdom.

Euro

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been spent in each year by his Department in preparing for UK entry to the euro; how much his Department plans to spend on preparations for UK entry to the euro for each year from the current financial year up to and including 2005–06; and what estimates he has made of the total costs to his Department of changeover to the European Single Currency. [131589]

Mr. Darling: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today by my hon. Friend, the Financial Secretary to the Treasury at column 142W.

Food Expenditure

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was spent on food by his Department and by each agency for which it is responsible in (a) 2001–02 and (b) 2002–03; what proportion of that food by value was produced in the United Kingdom; what guidance he has issued to encourage the procurement of home-grown food; and if he will make a statement. [129380]

Mrs. McGuire: Scotland Office expenditure on food is minimal, is generally limited to catering associated with official hospitality and supplied by external contractors. Information on the cost or the source of food supplied is not held centrally.

Holyrood Project

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if his Department will make a submission to the Fraser inquiry into the Holyrood project. [131487]

Mrs. McGuire: Invitations to make written submissions to the inquiry are a matter for Lord Fraser. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has made clear, the Scotland Office will provide any information he may request.

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether his Department (a) has met and (b) will meet Lord Fraser to discuss (i) the inquiry into the Holyrood project and (ii) the evidence to be provided by Her Majesty's Government for the Scottish Office. [131488]

Mrs. McGuire: Scotland Office Ministers and officials have received no invitation to meet Lord Fraser in the context of his inquiry into the Holyrood project.

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the Government intends to allow the Fraser inquiry into the Scottish Parliament building access to information relating to internal advice and decisions made by government on this matter, and in particular information which would normally be subject to Exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. [131490]

Mrs. McGuire: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State made clear to the Scottish Affairs Committee on 17 June, the Government will co-operate fully in providing information requested in connection with the inquiry.

WALES

Euro

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much has been spent in each year by his Department in preparing for United Kingdom entry to the euro; how much his Department plans to spend on preparations for United Kingdom entry to the euro for each year from the current financial year up to and including 2005–06; and what estimates he has made of the total costs to his Department of changeover to the European Single Currency. [131600]

Mr. Touhig: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary to the Treasury gave him at column 142W.

Licensing Fees

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much was paid to Microsoft in licensing fees by his Department in each of the last three years; and how much has been budgeted for (a) 2003–04 and (b) 2004–05. [130676]

Mr. Touhig: IT equipment is currently supplied to the Wales Office by Siemens Business Services under their contract with the National Assembly for Wales. Relevant licences are held by Siemens.

In the coming year, Wales Office IT equipment will be supplied by Liberata under their contract to the Department for Constitutional Affairs DCA. Relevant licences will be held by Liberata.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Asbestos

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland pursuant to his answer of 24 June 2003, Official Report, column 707W, on asbestos, if he will list the buildings which have been identified as containing asbestos. [130950]

Mr. Pearson: Two schedules, one of which lists those buildings within the Northern Ireland Civil Service office estate which contain asbestos, and one of which lists the specialist buildings owned by NICS departments which contain asbestos, have been placed in the Library.

Assembly Elections

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will announce the date of the Northern Ireland Assembly elections which were originally scheduled to take place in May. [129711]

Mr. Spellar: The Government hopes that it will be possible for elections to be held during the autumn. No date has yet been set, nor has a date been set by which an announcement will be made.

Asthma

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many children have been diagnosed with asthma in the past five years; and if he will make a statement. [130269]

Angela Smith: The majority of persons suffering from asthma have their condition diagnosed and treated by a general practitioner and this information is not available centrally. The Department does however fund a project managed by the Department of General Practice at Queens University of Belfast. This project collects data from a representative sample of general practitioners' practices across Northern Ireland.

Provisional figures from this data retrieval project suggest there are approximately 150 cases of asthma diagnosed per 1,000 persons in the population for the under 15 age group. This equates to approximately 1 in 7 children.

The National Asthma Campaign estimate that the prevalence of asthma is on the increase with approximately 1 in 7 children in the UK receiving treatment for it. This reflects a worldwide increase in asthma prevalence.

The primary cause of most cases of asthma is unknown; however, there is evidence that parental smoking exacerbates asthma in children.

Benefit Payments

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to meet representatives of the Northern Ireland Branch of the National Federation of Sub-postmasters to discuss issues arising from the direct payment of pensions and benefits into bank accounts. [131243]

Mr. Spellar: The Social Security Agency and the Post Office have worked closely in developing the Direct Payment programme which is aimed at providing a safer, more convenient, modern and efficient method of paying social security benefits. However, I have no plans to meet representatives of the Northern Ireland Branch of the National Federation of Sub-Postmasters.

Child Care Initiative

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what measures have been introduced by Northern Ireland government departments to support the child care initiative; [128292]

(2) what measures have been introduced by the Northern Ireland Office to support the child care initiative. [131524]

Mr. Pearson: The Government have a significant role as an employer in Northern Ireland and recognise the importance of maintaining and reviewing the measures in place to help civil servants balance their work and family responsibilities. Child care was one of the issues closely examined in the recent NICS dependant care review. This major review was carried out by an Interdepartmental Working Group and consultation with Central Trade Union Side is now due to begin. A number of key recommendations impacting on child care issues have been made and will be taken forward by DFP. At present there are various child care arrangements in place within individual Departments and Agencies.

Chronic Diseases

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made by each local health and social care group in Northern Ireland to encourage the development of systematic and evidence-based approaches to the prevention, identification, management and follow-up of people with chronic disease, with particular reference to (a) coronary heart disease, (b) diabetes and (c) COPD. [130801]

Angela Smith: Local health and social care groups are working closely with all primary care professionals in their areas to encourage the development of systematic and evidence-based approaches to the prevention, identification, management and follow-up of people with chronic disease. In particular, the groups are currently undertaking three coronary heart disease projects, 14 diabetes projects and 9 COPD projects.

Class Sizes

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many primary schools in (a) North Down and (b) Northern Ireland had class sizes of more than 30 pupils in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [129815]

Jane Kennedy: The information requested (which relates to 2002–03) is as follows:

Area	Class size
North Down	5
Northern Ireland	166

Diabetes

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will make it his policy that the Department of Health Services and Public Safety implement the CREST Taskforce Report on Diabetes in full; [129902]

(2) when a regional implementation group, as outlined in the CREST Taskforce Report on Diabetes 2003, will be established; [129903]

(3) what resources will be allocated to take forward the implementation of the CREST Report; and on what timescale. [129904]

Angela Smith: The Department recognises the importance of the need for high quality care and early detection for people with diabetes and the need for prevention, and welcomes the publication of the CREST report. The report contains a wide range of recommendations covering the full spectrum of the condition from screening for people with a higher risk of developing diabetes to the prevention and treatment of the disease.

The prevention of diabetes through the health promotion message of healthy eating, physical activity, not smoking and greater public awareness of diabetes, its symptoms and associated health risks is extremely important. I am confident that existing health strategies such as Investing for Health, the Physical Activity Strategy and Nutrition Strategy will contribute significantly to this. I have also emphasised the need to secure improvements in the management of chronic disease and I have asked local health and social care groups to develop projects within their locality to secure improvements in conditions such as diabetes. I have also made resources available to improve the detection and treatment of diabetes-related eye disease and this is being taken forward by a regional working group. These significant steps underline my desire to improve services for people with diabetes.

My Department is currently considering how it can best address the other recommendations in the CREST report within the current and planned resources available to it.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what cross-border co-operation projects have been planned on improving the quality of life for people with Type II diabetes. [130799]

Angela Smith: The Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety in Northern Ireland and the Department of Health and Children in the Republic of Ireland are to jointly support a project aimed at improving the management and quality of life of Type II diabetic patients through community pharmacies and raising public awareness of the condition.

The project, which is expected to run until December 2005, is to be funded through the INTERREG IIIA Community Initiative.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the progress of each local health and social care group plans in relation to diabetes as outlined in Priorities for Action 2003–04. [130800]

Angela Smith: One of the key actions set out in Priorities for Action 2003–04 was a requirement for each of the 15 local health and social care groups to develop at least one project to increase the capacity of primary care to address chronic diseases such as asthma or diabetes in the primary care setting and reduce pressures in the hospital sector. It is a matter for each group to decide which area of chronic disease management should be targeted in the light of local priorities. In the event, 14 groups are taking forward projects which focus on diabetes. The exact nature of the projects varies from group to group and they are at different stages of development.

Digital Hearing Aids

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of those waiting for digital hearing aids in Northern Ireland have been issued with a digital hearing aid; what action he is taking to increase this figure; and if he will make a statement. [131758]

Angela Smith: Preparatory work for the provision of Digital Hearing Aids (DHAs) is at an advanced stage and introduction, on a phased basis, will commence in early November. An additional £1 million has been allocated for this purpose, to cover the revenue costs of recruiting additional audiologists, training in fitting DHAs, purchasing the new aids and the capital costs of installing computer based testing equipment necessary to support introduction.

It is estimated that there are over 100,000 hearing aid users in Northern Ireland. Evidence based research suggests that DHAs may benefit 80 per cent. of users. It is not possible at this stage to say what numbers of new and existing users might be assessed for DHAs per year. Given that introduction is on a phased basis, it will take a number of years for the entire hearing aid user population to be assessed for digital aids.

Driver and Vehicle Testing Agency

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action (a) has been taken and (b) will be taken in order to reduce waiting times for MOT appointments at the Driver and Vehicle Testing Agency. [131781]

Angela Smith: The principal cause of the present difficulties is a significant increase in demand: applications are up by around 11 per cent. over the previous year. Allied to this is the fact that the Agency's test centres have been closed on a phased basis for the installation of much needed new vehicle test equipment. I regret that despite careful planning it has not been possible to cope as effectively as I would have liked with this additional demand in recent months.

The Agency has taken a number of measures to reduce waiting times. These include increasing productivity, introducing a more efficient booking programme, making maximum possible use of overtime, redeploying staff from non-urgent duties to testing, introducing extended working at a number of centres, recruiting additional staff and postponing non-urgent training. It has also improved the provision of information and guidance to the public and is in the process of extending its new telephone booking service.

These and other measures have brought about a gradual improvement. Average waiting times have dropped from 43 days in early July to around 35 days. The positive trend is expected to continue over the next few months.

Educational Psychology

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many pupils are (a) being attended to by educational psychologists and (b) waiting to be attended to by educational psychologists in each of the education board areas in Northern Ireland; [131777]

(2) how many pupils (a) requested an appointment with an educational psychologist and (b) succeeded in obtaining such an appointmenst in each of the education board areas in Northern Ireland in each of the past five years; [131778]

(3) what the average waiting times for a child to get an appointment with an educational psychologist in each of the Education Board areas in Northern Ireland was in each of the past five years. [131779]

Jane Kennedy: This information is not available from the Education and Library Boards within the time scale. I will write to the hon. Member as soon as it is available.

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many educational psychologists are employed by each of the Education and Library Board areas in Northern Ireland; and how many (a) were employed, (b) retired and (c) recruited in each board area in each of the last five years. [131783]

Jane Kennedy: I have been informed by the Education and Library Boards that the number of Educational Psychologists employed by each Board area, in each of the past five years, is as follows.

	1999	2000	2001	2002	2003
BELB[1]	17.9	21	22	23.5	26
NEELB[1]	17.5	20.5	22	23	23
SEELB[1]	17.5	20	20	22.3	22.6

WELB[1]	13	14.5	20.5	22.5	24.5

[1] Full time equivalent

In the time scale available it is not possible to provide recruitment and retirement data correlating with the data in the table above. I will write to the hon. Member later with these figures once they have been confirmed with the Education and Library Boards.

Energy Efficiency

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent steps he has taken to promote energy efficiency in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [131393]

Mr. Pearson: The Consultation document 'Towards a New Energy Strategy for Northern Ireland', published by DETI in April 2003, highlighted the continued importance of energy efficiency and renewable energy as the primary means of reducing the carbon footprint of the energy sector in Northern Ireland and enhancing sustainability. The final Strategy, which will be published later this year, will further sharpen the focus on energy efficiency and help co-ordinate efforts towards securing further substantial improvements.

Government are committed to promoting energy efficiency and approximately £16 million will be committed this year on energy efficiency programmes sponsored by a number of Government Departments in Northern Ireland.

For example, the Department of Social Development has lead responsibility for energy efficiency in the domestic sector, using the Northern Ireland Housing Executive as a delivery partner, and has secured a 13 per cent. saving in energy consumption since 1996 in occupied stock across all tenures. This level of saving was achieved from a broad range of schemes, such as the Warm Homes Scheme, the Housing Executive's heating replacement programme and renewable energy pilot schemes. The energy efficiency levy, which was increased by the Northern Ireland Assembly to £5 per electricity consumer was used to further underpin household energy efficiency with over 80 per cent. of this benefit being specifically targeted towards disadvantaged householders likely to be at risk of fuel poverty.

Environmental Protection Agency

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will establish an independent environmental protection agency in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [131244]

Angela Smith: In April 1996, the Environment and Heritage Service (EHS) was set up as a Next Steps Agency. The Agency was significantly under-resourced in its initial years. However, following devolution, the Executive accorded environmental protection a high priority, and funding increased significantly.

There are no specific plans at present to establish an independent Environment Protection Agency. However, it is anticipated that the role of Next Steps Agencies, will be examined as part of the proposed Review of Public Administration. The review team are due to consult on their findings shortly.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on cross-departmental policies to tackle (a) gender inequality and (b) racial inequality in Northern Ireland. [128289]

Jane Kennedy: We are committed to bringing forward cross-departmental gender and race equality strategies during 2003. These will strengthen work being done under section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998.

A gender strategy is being developed in consultation with the Equality Commission and voluntary and community sector groups. The first draft of the strategy has been circulated to Departments for comments and a second series of consultation workshops with the Equality Commission and voluntary and community sector groups has been scheduled for early October 2003. The aim is to publish a draft Gender Equality Strategy for consultation by later autumn 2003.

A race strategy, which will be the overarching Government policy document in relation to racial equality in Northern Ireland, was launched for consultation on 25 February 2003. The consultation period which included both public seminars and focused seminars with minority ethnic communities, closed on 31 July 2003. The consultation responses are currently being assessed and the finalised strategy and Action Plan, which will be developed in partnership with the Northern Ireland Race Forum, will be published by the end of the 2003–04 financial year.

Equality Commission

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what reason the Equality Commission has not yet established a consultative council as required by section 74 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998; and if he will make a statement. [130403]

Mr. Spellar: Section 74 of the Northern Ireland Act confers a power on the Commission to establish consultative councils. If this power is exercised, the Commission has a duty to have regard to the advice offered by the council(s).

The Commission's first Corporate Plan included an intention to consider and consult on options on this issue and the report of a pre-consultation exercise was considered by the Commission in 2002. I understand that little interest was expressed on the establishment of a consultative council(s) in this exercise. The Commission decided to defer a decision on a formal consultation until 2003–04 business year and this remains the position.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many fair employment cases the Equality Commission is assisting through the provision of funding; and how many of these also involve discrimination prohibited on other grounds; [131420]

(2) when the Equality Commission produced a strategic plan for investigations following reviews under Article 55 of the Fair Employment and Treatment (Northern Ireland) Order 1998; [131462]

(3) how many employers the Equality Commission has referred to the Fair Employment Tribunal because of a failure to abide by undertakings made as a result of investigations under Article 11 of the Fair Employment and Treatment Order (Northern Ireland) 1998 in each year; [131879]

(4) how many applications for assistance in terms of funding of fair employment cases the Equality Commission received (a) in the last financial year and (b) in this financial year; and how many of these also involved discrimination prohibited on other grounds; [131463]

(5) how many cases the Equality Commission is assisting through the provision of funding; [131421]

(6) how many applications for assistance in terms of funding of cases the Equality Commission has received in the (a) current and (b) last financial year; [131422]

(7) what external research the Equality Commission has commissioned on fair employment since its foundation; [131464]

(8) what (a) external and (b) internal research the Equality Commission has published on fair employment since its foundation; [131470]

(9) how many investigations under Article 11 of the Fair Employment and Treatment (Northern Ireland) Order 1998 have been initiated by the Equality Commission in each year since its foundation; [131460]

(10) if he will confirm when the Equality Commission produced a strategic plan for investigations under Article 11 of the Fair Employment and Treatment (Northern Ireland) Order 1998; [131461]

(11) how many investigations under Article 11 of the Fair Employment and Treatment Order (Northern Ireland) 1998 have been initiated by the Equality Commission in each year since its foundation; and how many of them were against an employer as a result of a finding by the Fair Employment Tribunal against that employer; [131761]

(12) what external research the Equality Commission has published on fair employment since its foundation; [131762]

(13) with how many employers the Equality Commission has agreed undertakings following investigations under Article 11 of the Fair Employment and Treatment Order (Northern Ireland) 1998 in each year since its foundation. [131881]

Mr. Spellar: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Equality Commission for Northern Ireland to write to the hon. Gentleman. A copy of the letter will be placed in the Library.

Food Expenditure

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much was spent on food by his Department and by each agency for which it is responsible in (a) 2001–02 and (b) 2002–03; what proportion of that food by value was produced in the United Kingdom; what guidance he has issued to encourage the procurement of home-grown food; and if he will make a statement. [129379]

Mr. Pearson: Expenditure on food in NICS Departments is generally limited to official hospitality and staff catering subsidies of approximately £700,000 per annum in both 2001–02 and 2002–03. Staff catering services have been contracted out since the early '90s and the purchase of food is therefore the responsibility of the private sector catering service providers.

Departments do not have detailed information to identify what proportion of that food by value was produced in the Untied Kingdom other than statements from catering service providers that, where possible, the majority of fresh food would be sourced in Northern Ireland.

No guidance has been issued encouraging the procurement of home produced food; however, my Department is liasing with the Departments of Environment and Agriculture and Rural Development in Northern Ireland and nationally with the Department of Environment, Food and Rural Affairs in developing policy and best practice guidance on food procurement to ensure quality standards and value for money. This process has also involved consultation with stakeholders including the World Wildlife Fund, Livestock Marketing Commission and Ulster Farmers Union.

Forensic Service

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what funding he intends to make available, following the completion of the evaluation phase, to support the acquisition of new premises for the Forensic Science Agency. [130335]

Mr. Spellar: I await the outcome of the current accommodation review before making decisions on the most appropriate funding and procurement routes to secure necessary facilities for the Agency.

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent steps have been taken (a) to put an adequate maintenance and refurbishment programme in place for and (b) to replace the current premises and facilities of the Forensic Science Agency. [130336]

Mr. Spellar: FSNI continues to service and maintain its facilities. Following the outcome of the current accommodation review, I will be making decisions on the future accommodation requirements of the Agency. Alongside this, consideration will also be given to any further action needed to maintain facilities in the interim.

Foster Carers

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what allowances are made available by local authorities for foster carers in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [131372]

Angela Smith: In Northern Ireland, Health and Social Services (HSS) trusts pay fostering allowances, which are agreed each year in consultation with the four HSS boards. The standard rates known as the 'Model Scheme' in Northern Ireland are currently lower than the average amount paid by local authorities in England. However, boards and trusts have increased allowances within the Model Scheme by 5.5 per cent. for 2003–04. Different rates are payable for children of different ages ranging from £285.88 per four weeks for children aged 0–4 to £513.52 per four weeks for children aged 16+ . The scale of foster care allowances is set out in the following table. Enhanced allowances are also available to cover, for example, expenses incurred at Christmas and birthdays and the cost of school uniforms and educational holidays.

My Department is currently developing a Strategy for Children in Need which will include children in foster care. It is intended that we will work closely with HSS boards, trusts and the fostering network to develop a three-year plan for fostering in Northern Ireland. This will have regard to the issues raised in the Strategy for Foster Care Services in Northern Ireland which has already been developed by the four HSS boards in association with the fostering network, including those which relate to remuneration of foster carers.

Scale of foster care allowances

Age group	Per week	Per four weeks	Per annum
0–4	71.47	285.88	3,716.44
5–10	81.41	325.64	4,233.32
11–15	101.36	405.44	5,270.72
16+	128.38	513.52	6,675.76

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many registered foster carers there were in Northern Ireland in each year since 1997; and if he will make a statement on the recruitment of foster carers in Northern Ireland. [131374]

Angela Smith: The routine collection of data by my Department on the numbers of registered foster carers in Northern Ireland commenced in 2001 and the returns from that date are presented in the following table. In addition a figure is available for 1997 from a fostering inspection report published by the Social Services Inspectorate. This, too, is presented in following table.

There are difficulties with the recruitment and retention of foster carers. Despite numerous recruitment campaigns by Health and Social Services (HSS) Boards and Trusts, problems with the recruitment of foster carers continue to exist.

The success in recruitment and retention of foster carers is dependent on many factors including remuneration, training, the status that foster carers receive and support, particularly in times of crisis. My Department is currently in the process of developing a strategy for all children in need including those in foster care. It is intended that, as part of that strategy, the Department will work in liaison with HSS Boards and Trusts and the Fostering Network to develop a three year costed fostering plan. The plan will, of course, take account of the issues raised in the Strategy for Foster Care Services developed by the four HSS Boards in conjunction with the Fostering Network, which I understand will be published soon.

Further Education

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he plans to allow all children who wish to remain in education until age 19 to do so. [130256]

Jane Kennedy: The Government encourage young people in Northern Ireland to continue in full-time education beyond the compulsory school leaving age of 16 and as far as possible facilitate the decisions of those who wish to do so subject of course to the entrance requirements of the specific institution.

Gransha Road, Dundonald

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on claims made by members of the public in 2002 about tarmac laid on the Gransha Road, Dundonald. [130986]

Mr. Spellar: On 25 July 2002 routine surface dressing work was carried out on behalf of the Department at Gransha Road by its measured term contractor, Tullyraine Quarries Ltd.

On 29 July 2002 reports were received about the failure of the surface dressing and of a substantial number of vehicle damage claims caused by this failure.

The failure was investigated by the Department and these investigations led to the Department referring all the Gransha Road vehicle damage claims then known, approximately 400, to the contractor, Tullyraine Quarries Ltd., in accordance with proper legal and audit practice and procedure.

The Department maintains its position that legal responsibility for the claims lies with its contractor, Tullyraine Quarries Ltd. The contractor has not to date conceded responsibility and the claims remain outstanding.

One of the motorists, who sustained vehicle damage on 29 July 2002, issued legal proceedings on 22 July 2003 against the Department, Tullyraine Quarries Ltd. and Lagan Services Ltd. This on-going court action shall proceed as a test case.

The Department cannot comment any further as the legal issues are now sub judice.

Health Service (Sick Leave)

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the longest time is that an employee has been on sick leave in each of the health trusts in Northern Ireland. [130862]

Angela Smith: The information is not readily available in the format requested. However the following table contains information, which Trusts were able to provide. The entitlement for paid sick leave for any employee is a maximum of 12 months, six months full pay and six months half pay. Employees can remain on the Trust payroll for a number of reasons; these include applications for ill health retirement, where the recovery period is longer or where a member of staff is terminally ill.

Angela Smith: Information on sick absence is not held centrally and not all trusts were able to supply full details in the required format. However, information supplied by individual trusts is set out in the following table.

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many general practitioners in Northern Ireland are on sick leave; and for what length of time each has been on sick leave. [130864]

Angela Smith: As a general practitioner is entitled to his or her full normal remuneration during absence on account of illness, not all GPs report when they are unable to attend work due to sickness. The total number of GPs on sick absence is therefore not known. However it is known that at 31 August 2003, 31 general practitioners have reported absent from their practice on account of sickness.

Bill of Rights

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission has spent on the drafting of a Bill of Rights for Northern Ireland. [128326]

Jane Kennedy: The consultation process on a Bill of Rights for Northern Ireland was launched on 1 April 2000. The total costs to date are £503,800. These costs include advertising (circa 40 per cent.) and publications (also circa 40 per cent.) together with a range of other costs relating to events, conferences, work with children and young people, public opinion surveys and education and training events and materials.

Implementation Group

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which parties comprise the Implementation Group in Northern Ireland. [131578]

Mr. Spellar: The political parties who are invited to the Implementation Group are parties committed to securing the full implementation of the Agreement.

Integrated Education

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many integrated education school places there were in (a) North Down and (b) Northern Ireland in each year since 1997; what action he is taking to increase the number of integrated education places; and if he will make a statement. [131373]

Jane Kennedy: The total approved enrolments for North Down Integrated Schools—Primary and Post-Primary since 1997 are:

1997–98	0
1998–99	856
1999–2000	918
2000–01	934
2001–02	944
2002–03	944
2003–04	944

The total approved enrolment number for all Integrated Schools—Primary and Post-Primary since 1997 are:

School year	Total approved enrolment numbers
1997–98	9,462
1998–99	12,507
1999–2000	13,470
2000–01	14,508
2001–02	15,356

The Department of Education funds the Northern Ireland Council for Integrated Education to promote the development of integrated education and also contributes to the Integrated Education Fund which provides assistance with the capital costs of new schools.

In December 2000 the Department reduced the viability criteria for the establishment of new integrated school to intakes of 15 pupils for primary schools in Belfast and Londonderry and 12 pupils for developments elsewhere in Northern Ireland. Changes to the viability criteria for integrated post primary schools were announced in October 2001. Integrated post primary schools which achieve a year eight intake of 50 pupils a now eligible for recurrent funding from the Department.

New Integrated Primary Schools have recently been announced in Randalstown, Glengormley and Antrim, bringing to 50 the number of integrated schools operating in Northern Ireland.

International Bodies

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all international members of bodies set up in Northern Ireland since 1998 in connection with the Belfast Agreement. [131675]

Mr. Spellar: There are two bodies established or to be established by International Agreement in connection with the Belfast Agreement. The Independent International Commission on Decommissioning was established by International Agreement between the British and Irish Governments in September 1997. Its current members are General John de Chastelain (a Canadian national) and Mr. Andrew Sens (a United States national). The Independent Monitoring Commission will be established by an International Agreement between the British and Irish Governments. The membership will comprise two United Kingdom nationals (Mr. John Grieve and Lord Alderdice); one Irish national (Mr. Joe Brosnan) and one United States national (Mr. Richard Kerr).

Irish Hare

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has received the report on the status of the Irish hare for the review of the Wildlife (Northern Ireland) Order 1985; and if he will make a statement. [131696]

Angela Smith: I refer to the answer I gave my hon. Friend, the Member for Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) on the 16 September 2003, Official Report, column 117W.

Learning Disabilities

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on educational opportunities for those aged 16 and above with (a) severe and (b) moderate learning disability. [130255]

Jane Kennedy: Pupils with special educational needs are assessed by education and library boards (ELBs) on an individual basis.

Pupils with severe learning difficulties, because of the nature and complexity of their special educational needs, generally remain in full-time education in special schools until the end of the term following their nineteenth birthday.

Pupils with moderate learning difficulties, whether placed in an ordinary school, a special unit or a special school, generally leave school at the statutory school leaving age but usually move on to placement in training or further education. In a small number of cases and depending on their special educational needs, they may remain in school beyond statutory school leaving age.

ELBs are required, in conjunction with other relevant agencies, to draw up a transition plan for all pupils with Statements of Special Educational Needs to set out appropriate post-school opportunities, including further education.

The Department for Employment and Learning's (DEL) Careers Service provides impartial advice and guidance to young people with severe and moderate learning disabilities on all available opportunities in education, training and employment. These include the DEL funded Jobskills training programme within further education colleges which provide a range of courses suitable for people over 16 with learning difficulties. DEL also funds a range of support services for these young people to assist in their achievement of qualifications.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will take steps to ensure that a statement provided for a child with special needs in one board area is acceptable in all education and library board areas in Northern Ireland when the child transfers from one board area to another; and if he will make a statement. [131822]

Jane Kennedy: The Department of Education's Code of Practice on the Identification and Assessment of Special Educational Needs gives clear guidance to Education and Library Boards and Schools on meeting the special educational needs (SEN) of all children who require such provision.

When responsibility for a child with a statement of SEN changes from one Board to another, the statement mu be transferred to the new Board, together with any opinion which may have been provided under the Disabled Persons (NI) Act 1989 that the child is disabled. Upon the transfer of the statement, the receiving Board becomes responsible for maintaining the statement, and for providing the special educational provision specif in the statement.

The receiving Board may, on the transfer of the statement, bring forward arrangements for the review of the statement, and may conduct a new statutory assessment regardless of when the previous assessment took place. It must tell the parents, within six weeks of the date of transfer, when it will review the statement, and whether statutory assessment is proposed.

Linguistic Diversity

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many staff are employed in the Linguistic Diversity Branch of the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure; how many have competence in the Irish language; and how many have competence in the Ulster Scots language. [98197]

Angela Smith: Linguistic Diversity Branch of the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure has 10 members of staff comprising 9 permanent employees and one casual. These staff belong to the Northern Ireland Civil Service (NICS) general administrative grades and have been recruited in accordance with NICS competencies and procedures. Expertise in specific languages is not among the core competencies which are required of general service administrative staff in the NICS.

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to which trustees the draft linguistic diversity policy of the National Museums and Galleries of Northern Ireland has been presented; and for what reason. [98199]

Angela Smith: A new Board of Trustees of the National Museums and Galleries of Northern Ireland was appointed in July 2002. The board has not yet seen the draft linguistic diversity policy, but it is hoped that its members will have an opportunity to consider and formally adopt the draft shortly.

One member of the outgoing board was actively involved in the development of the draft policy, through chairing the working group that was established by the board to take the process forward. However, the other members of the outgoing board did not consider the draft before the end of their term of office.

NHS Patients (Private Health Care)

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many patients have been referred by the NHS in Northern Ireland to private healthcare providers (a) in England, (b) in Northern Ireland, (c) in Scotland, (d) in Wales and (e) abroad in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [131744]

Angela Smith: (a)-(e) Information on the number of patients referred to private health care providers across the United Kingdom and abroad is detailed.

Patients may be referred to private health care providers under two schemes

1. Extra Contractual referral scheme (ECR)
2. Waiting List Initiatives

Under the ECR scheme patients are referred to private health care providers, as the specialist treatment they require is not available locally in a NHS hospital.

Patients may also be transferred to private healthcare providers to reduce waiting lists at NHS hospitals.

There are four Health and Social Services Boards in Northern Ireland. Each Board has not been able to provide the data in the same format and in some instances data was not available (n/a). To obtain complete and consistent data would require a manual exercise, the costs of this would be disproportionate.

Table 1 details the number of patients transferred by Eastern, Northern and Southern Health Board Areas under the ECR scheme.

Table 2 details the number of patients transferred by Eastern, Northern and Southern Health Board Areas as part of Waiting List Initiatives.

Table 3 details the number of patients transferred by Western Health Board Area under both ECR schemes and Waiting List Initiatives.

The figures are for patients referred to private health care providers within the acute programme of care. A number of patients from the elderly, learning disability and mental health programmes of care are treated in nursing and residential homes managed by private health care providers.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what criteria is used by the NHS in Northern Ireland to decide when to refer a patient to a private healthcare provider for treatment. [131745]

Angela Smith: The decision to refer a patient to a private healthcare provider for treatment is based on a variety of factors, including the availability of the treatment on the health and social services in Northern Ireland or on the NHS in Great Britain and how long the patient may have to wait for such treatment, as well as the cost. Private health care providers also have to satisfy the appropriate Health and Social Services Board as to the quality of care that will be provided, including arrangements for the provision of any necessary aftercare.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money has been spent by the NHS in Northern Ireland to obtain healthcare from private healthcare providers in (a) in England, (b) in Northern Ireland, (c) in Scotland, (d) in Wales and (e) abroad in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [131746]

Angela Smith: The information requested is not available centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Northern Ireland Assembly

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on progress towards re-establishing the Northern Ireland Assembly. [131480]

Mr. Spellar: As the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland made clear to the House in the debate on the Northern Ireland (Monitoring Commission etc.) Bill, 17 September 2003, Official Report, column 901, we are working hard to rebuild trust and confidence necessary for elections to the Assembly, and the restoration of devolved institutions, as soon as possible.

Pre-school Education

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Pre-school Education Advisory Group's places have been allocated to each nursery school and playschool in the South Eastern Education and Library Board for 2003–04. [129899]

Jane Kennedy: I understand from the Chief Executive of the South Eastern Education and Library Board that the following allocations of PEAG places have been made to voluntary and private sector pre-school centres in the Board area. The process of the PEAG reallocating unused places is still under way. The figures shown below may not, therefore, represent any individual centre's final allocation for the year.

Racial Assaults

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many racial assaults there were in each Northern Ireland parliamentary constituency in each of the last three years, broken down by ethnic group; [128291]

(2) how many racial assaults, broken down by ethnic group, have occurred in each of Northern Ireland's parliamentary constituencies in each of the last three years. [131523]

Jane Kennedy: The following table details the total number of racially motivated assaults recorded in each of the last three years in Northern Ireland. Current recording methods do not break these figures down by parliamentary constituency or ethnic group.

Year	Number of physical assaults
April 2000 to March 2001	58
April 2001 to March 2002	39
April 2002 to March 2003	50

Respite Care

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what provision there is for respite care for adults with special needs in the Northern Health and Social Services Board Area; and what plans there are to increase provision in the constituency of East Antrim. [131038]

Angela Smith: The Northern Health and Social Services Board advises that the provision of respite services to support adults with special needs differs between the two Community Health and Social Services Trusts in its area.

In Causeway Health and Social Services Trust service provision is almost exclusively through the Trust's own family based respite care scheme. In Homefirst Health and Social Services Trust the model of provision is slightly different, drawing mainly on services provided through a family based scheme run by the voluntary sector, while also using a limited amount of statutory sector provision. This year the Northern Health and Social Services Board provided additional resources to increase family based respite, in conjunction with the voluntary sector, in the East Antrim area.

Senior Civil Service

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the implementation of the Senior Civil Service Review. [131878]

Mr. Pearson: The independent review of Appointment and Promotion Procedures for the Senior Civil Service of the Northern Ireland Civil Service was conducted under the chairmanship of Lord Ouseley. The review report was published in 2002 and contained 25 specific recommendations, two of which related to reserved matters.

An action plan was developed to address the recommendations made, and was put out for public consultation. Considerable progress has since been made against its objectives. The consultation also sought views on recommendations on open recruitment and work/life balance, and it is intended that an announcement on these matters will be made later in the autumn.

Teachers

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many qualified teachers were working in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in Northern Ireland in each year since 1997. [129823]

Jane Kennedy: The information requested (expressed as full time equivalents) is as follows:

Qualified teachers working in primary and secondary schools in Northern Ireland in each year since 1997

	Number
(a) Primary Schools
1997–98	9,012
1998–99	8,810
1999–2000	8,751
2000–01	8,741
2001–02	8,780

2001–02	10,809
2002–03	10,840

Telecommunications Industry

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures are in place to support Northern Ireland's existing and new high technology and telecommunications industry and entrepreneurs; and if he will make a statement. [131525]

Mr. Pearson: Invest NI employs a broad range of measures to assist existing companies and entrepreneurs in the hi-technology and telecommunications sectors. The principal form of support available to assist significant new investment proposals (by new or existing businesses) is Selective Financial Assistance, which may contain elements covering capital and revenue grants in addition to loans and equity participation. Invest NI also operates a comprehensive series of schemes and programmes aimed at providing support which can be tailored to the needs of individual companies or entrepreneurs.

These measures assist Invest NI to achieve the objectives set out in its Corporate Plan 2002–05. They therefore focus on promoting innovation and stimulating higher levels of R&D and knowledge transfer; helping companies to achieve higher levels of growth; promoting a more enterprising culture; raising the number of business starts; and attracting new inward investment.

Invest NI has achieved a highly credible performance in its first year of operation. Key Innovation targets have been met or exceeded; Growing Existing Businesses and Business Start-up targets have been substantially achieved; and performance in attracting new inward investment has been encouraging, despite the continuing global downturn in foreign direct investment. In particular, Invest NI has assisted the setting up of 74 new, potentially high growth companies in the hi-tech and telecommunications sectors. Its offer of £14.3 million support towards business proposals by companies in these sectors represents a total investment of £109 million.

Invest NI has also played a key role in establishing the Northern Ireland Science Park and has provided £26 million to support the establishment of 17 Centres of Research Excellence, the majority of which are focused on high technology sectors. In addition, Invest NI has been highly active in drawing up a series of sector strategies aimed at maximising the economic development potential for a range of sectors including hi-technology and telecommunications.

These excellent first year achievements offer a very sound platform on which Invest NI can build in the future. They demonstrate the success of the measures which Invest NI has developed to provide support schemes and programmes which are both comprehensive and sufficiently flexible to meet the needs of existing businesses and entrepreneurs in a wide range of industrial sectors, including hi-technology and telecommunications.

Teletech Redundancies

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures he has implemented to assist those workers at TeleTech in North Belfast made redundant recently. [131575]

Jane Kennedy: The Department for Employment and Learning's North Belfast JobCentre contacted TeleTech immediately after the company's announcement on 3 September that approximately 60 workers would be made redundant. An offer of assistance to help find alternative employment for those workers facing redundancy was made. The company decided not to take up this offer at this time as it is hoping to reduce the numbers to be made redundant by redeploying some of those affected to other contracts within TeleTech.

Television Licences

Mr. Gregory Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, against how many people successful prosecutions have been taken for the non-payment of television licence fees in the past five years. [123999]

Estelle Morris: I have been asked to reply.

The available information for England, Wales and Scotland relates to all offences under the Wireless Telegraphy Acts of 1949 and 1967, though the great majority of these involve licence fee evasion.

Figures for Northern Ireland, provided by TV Licensing, relate specifically to unlicensed use of a television receiver. The number of convictions recorded in the United Kingdom in each of the last five years for which information is available was:

Year	Number of convictions
1997	[1]79,898
1998	78,804
1999	[2]56,929
2000	108,680
2001	86,118

[1] Excludes Northern Ireland, for which figures for 1997 are not available.
[2] 1999 returns for Scotland may be incomplete.

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prosecutions proceeded in relation to TV licensing in 2002 in Northern Ireland, broken down by constituency. [131574]

Estelle Morris: I have been asked to reply.

As I indicated in my reply to the hon. Member on 8 September 2003, Official Report, columns 30–31W, the total number of prosecutions proceeded with by TV Licensing in Northern Ireland in 2002 for installation or use of television without a licence was 1,448. I understand that TV Licensing does not record prosecutions by constituency.

Ulster Hospital

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many patients are awaiting (a) elective admission and (b) out-patient assessment at the Ulster hospital. [130860]

Angela Smith: The most recent waiting list figures available reflect the position at the 30 June 2003.

At 30 June 2003 there were 5,925 patients waiting for in-patient treatment at the Ulster Community and Hospitals Trust. 21,264 patients were awaiting a first out-patient appointment at Ulster Community and Hospitals Trust, at 30 June 2003.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Employers Liability Insurance

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what representations he has received concerning increases in employers' liability compulsory insurance in respect of small companies; and if he will make a statement. [131475]

Mr. Browne: The Department has received a number of representations concerning increases in Employers' Liability Compulsory Insurance (ELCI) from small businesses both directly and via representative organisations such as the Federation of Small Businesses (FSB). The Government continue to work closely with such business representatives and the Small Business Service in the work of the second stage of the ELCI review. Government will report in the autumn on the progress that has been made with the review and further steps we intend to take.

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many consultancies were commissioned by the Department in the last two years for which figures are available; and what the cost of those contracts was. [130890]

Maria Eagle: In the two year period from September 2001 to September 2003 DWP let 824 consultancy assignments with a total value of £248 million.

Euro

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how much has been spent in each year by his Department in preparing for United Kingdom entry to the euro; how much his Department plans to spend on preparations for United Kingdom entry to the euro for each year from the current financial year up to and including 2005–06; and what estimates he has made of the total costs to his Department of changeover to the European Single Currency. [131602]

Mr. Pond: Details of expenditure on changeover planning were included in the third outline National Changeover Plan, published on 9 June 2003. Copies of the document are available in the Library.

It is difficult to estimate with any accuracy how much any changeover would cost. It would depend on the approach taken. In particular, many IT systems will be euro compatible as a result of our modernisation programme, which would reduce the costs of any euro changeover.

Social Fund

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the average time taken to deal with applications to the Social Fund was over the last 12 months, broken down by individual office. [130517]

Mr. Pond [holding answer 17 September 2003]: Information on the average time taken to deal with applications to the Social Fund broken down by individual office is currently unavailable. I will write to my hon. Friend when the data requested becomes available and place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Industrial Injuries

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many industrial injuries disablement benefit appeals have been lodged since 1997; and how many were (a) found in favour of the claimant, (b) found against the claimant and (c) were abandoned due to time constraints. [130858]

Mr. Browne: Appeals are not abandoned due to time constraints. If an Appeal, listed for hearing before a Tribunal, is unable to be heard, or the hearing is unable to be completed because of lack of time, it will be rescheduled for hearing at the next available date.

The available information is in the table.

Year	Lodged at first tier agency	Received by the Appeals Service	Cleared at hearing	Found in favour of appellant	Decided against appellant	Decision upheld
1998	20,030	24,630	13,510	5,140	415	7,420
1999	22,070	17,320	17,305	6,895	450	9,300
2000	21,525	22,390	19,170	7,665	90	10,735
2001	22,885	23,110	17,985	7,300	55	10,150
2002	18,355	18,565	17,170	6,550	45	10,030

Notes:
1. All figures are subject to change as more up to date data becomes available.
Figures for the latest months will rise significantly as information feeds through to the Appeals Service.
2. Figures are rounded to the nearest five.
3. Appeals cleared in one year will not be the same appeals received in that year.
4. An appeal may have more than one clearance in a year and each clearance will be counted. For example, an appellant may not be happy with the outcome of the original hearing and apply to the district chairman for leave to appeal and subsequent hearings may occur as a result.
5. Not all appeals that are received by the Appeals Service continue through the process to reach a hearing or conclusion. For example, an appeal may be invalid or withdrawn prior to hearing.

Ministerial Meetings

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on his meeting with Ros Altmann on 17 September. [131659]

Mr. Andrew Smith: On 9 September I met various people with an interest in the ASW and Dexion pension schemes, including Ros Altmann. During that meeting, I reiterated that I am examining the position and would listen to sensible and constructive suggestions for dealing with compensation, not only for members of the ASW and Dexion pension schemes, but also for others in a similar position. But I also stressed that while I will listen to proposals, I do not wish to provide people with false hope that the Government will step in to help members of defined-benefit pension schemes which have already started to wind-up.

During the meeting on 9 September, I agreed that my officials should meet Ros Altmann to discuss her suggestions. This was the meeting that took place on 17 September, which my hon. Friend the Member for Sittingbourne and Sheppey (Mr. Wyatt) also attended. The meeting focussed on Ros Altmann's proposals for providing assistance and the assumptions on which her proposals are based. No minister attended the meeting on 17 September.

Pension Advice Surgeries

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the locations of the local pension advice surgeries are. [128742]

Malcolm Wicks: The Pension Service provides a wide range of information and support on benefits to older people through our network of local service surgeries.

Local Pension Service surgeries are held on a regular basis across all areas of the country, often in partnership with other organisations such as local authorities and Age Concern. The latest data available indicate that there are currently 2,650 regular drop in and appointment surgeries in place nationally.

Details of the most convenient surgery for individual pensioners and their carers can be obtained by telephoning 0845 60 60 2 65.

The Pension Service wrote to all hon. Members at the end of July providing a full list of surgeries and opening times in individual constituencies; however I am happy to list here the regular surgeries that take place in the Northavon area:

South Gloucestershire Deaf Association
Kingswood Library
Patchway Community Centre
Pucklechurch Sheltered House
Thornbury Library
Yate Library
Frenchay Hospital
Southmead Hospital
Avon Crescent Sheltered Housing
Marshfield Church Hall
Withymead
The Brockridge Centre.

Pension Credit

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions pursuant to his oral briefing to pensioners of 3 September on the pension credit, (a) what the total advertising budget is, (b) how many pensioners will receive pension credit in October, and, of that number, how many will be former minimum income guarantee claimants; and if he will estimate the (i) number of calls that can be dealt with per (A) hour and (B) day by the pension credit telephone application line and (ii) average time to complete an application using the pension credit telephone application line. [131580]

Malcolm Wicks: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Sutton and Cheam (Mr. Burstow) on 17 June 2003, Official Report, column 157W. There are now around 1.9 million pensioner households on our systems being paid pension credit. We intend from November to publish monthly reports on the progress of pension credit take-on, which will include a more detailed breakdown of this figure. Our planning assumes that on a typical weekday the pension credit application line will be handling around 18,000 calls a day, although if necessary the application line has the capacity to answer up to 14,000 calls per hour for a limited time during exceptionally busy periods. The level of resources will ensure that customers who wish to make an application using the application line can do so. The average time to complete a pension credit application for customers using the application line is currently about 20 minutes.

Peter Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many pensioners in The Wrekin he estimates will benefit from the pension credit. [131689]

Malcolm Wicks: The information is not available in the format requested. However, an estimated 350,000 pensioner households are eligible for pension credit in the West Midlands.

Notes:

1. The estimates were calculated for all pensioners using the Department's Policy Simulation Model based on the Family Resource Survey data for 2001–02 projected forward to 2003–04. This shows around 3.6 million households entitled to pension credit.
2. The Policy Simulation Model excludes all pensioners in nursing or residential care homes. This is because the Family Resource Survey data does not contain information on these cases. We estimate that just over 200,000 pensioners in care homes will be entitled to pension credit. This means that the total number of pensioner households eligible for pension credit in 2003–04 is estimated to be about 3.8 million households.

Travel to Work Areas

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will list the top and bottom 100 travel to work areas by average wage; and if he will make a statement. [129159]

Ruth Kelly: I have been asked to reply.

The Information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician who is writing to the hon. Member.

Letter from Colin Mowl to Mr. Adrian Sanders, dated 17 September 2003:

The National Statistician has been asked to reply to your recent question on the top and bottom 100 travel to work areas by average wage. I am replying in his absence.

Information on average weekly earnings for travel to work areas is taken from the New Earnings Survey (NES) for 2002, the latest year for which data are available. Publication criteria for NBS state that all estimates with a sample size less than 30 or a relative standard error greater than 5% must be excluded from published analyses since they are not accurate enough.

A large number of the earnings estimates for travel to work areas have been excluded as a result of these criteria, and there are a total of 150 areas for which estimates can be given. I am placing in the House of Commons library, a single table showing the estimated average weekly earnings for each of these 150 travel to work areas.

CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

Accountancy Services

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what the total cost to the Department was for accountancy services in 2002–03. [109494]

Mr. Lammy: My Department entered into a nine year PFI contract with Liberata UK Ltd., (formerly CSL Group Ltd.) in January 1998. This contract covers a wide range of services including providing accounting systems, making payments, receipting and accounts production. The cost of accountancy services provided to the Department by Liberata under the contract, and from other external firms of accountants or their management consultancy arms where the assignment was connected with financial matters, in 2002–03 was £6.4 million.

Family Law

Mr. Beith: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what aspects of family law continue to be the responsibility of the Department for Constitutional Affairs. [131404]

Mr. Lammy: The schedule lists all areas of family law and family policy which had been the responsibility of the former Lord Chancellor's Department prior to the Machinery of Government changes which were announced on 13 June 2003.

The schedule indicates which responsibilities remain with the Department for Constitutional Affairs, and which have been transferred to the Department for Education and Skills.

Lay Magistrates

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs, if he will take steps to ensure that lay magistrates are not discouraged by advice from their clerks from accepting invitations to accompany police patrols to experience crime and disorder at first hand. [131660]

Mr. Leslie: Successive Lord Chancellors have warned magistrates of the risks of participating in activities which might appear to undermine the independence of the bench. However, one of the strengths of the magistracy is that its members will have a wide range of experience of their local communities. Magistrates are encouraged to keep their knowledge up to date, and visits to areas with particular problems can do much to help. The Lord Chancellor and Secretary of State does not wish to discourage magistrates from seeing at first hand how the police work within the local community. This must, however, be achieved in ways which minimise the risks of their impartiality being called into question.

Mobile Phones

Mr. Flight: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs, what the cost was to his Department and its predecessor of mobile phones supplied to ministers and officials in each year since 1997. [123145]

Mr. Lammy: My Department has spent the following each year on mobile phones supplied to ministers and officials:

1998–99—n/a
1999–2000—n/a
2000–01—n/a
2001–02—£3,632
2002–03—£7,610
2003–04—£4,944 (6 months April 03-September 03)

Figures are not available for the periods 1997–March 2001 without incurring disproportionate costs.

The figures shown above are from April 200land for each subsequent financial year. They inclu.le the cost of equipment, call charges and line rental fees.

Regulatory Bodies

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs, if he will list the (a) number of staff employed by and (b) budget of each regulatory body for which his Department is responsible in each year since 1997. [117779]

Mr. Lammy: Information on regulatory bodies is available in "Public Bodies", a publication produced annually by the Cabinet Office. This publication provides information on the size, spend and membership of public bodies in the UK and includes non-departmental public bodies. The current edition of the publication "Public Bodies 2003" is available in the House of Commons Library.

Written Answers to Questions

PRIME MINISTER

Arcturus House

Q15. Mr. Steen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make an official visit to Arcturus House in Totnes. [132037]

The Prime Minister: I have no current plans to do so.

Departmental Hospitality

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Prime Minister how much was spent on food by his office in (a) 2001–02 and (b) 2002–03; what proportion of that food by value was produced in the United Kingdom; what guidance he has issued to encourage the procurement of home-produced food; and if he will make a statement. [129375]

The Prime Minister: Expenditure on food in the Prime Minister's Office is limited to official entertainment. For the total cost to my office for all official entertainment at 10 Downing Street and Chequers, I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave the hon. Member for Lewes (Norman Baker) on 28 February 2002, Official Report, columns 1444–48W, and the hon. Member for Yeovil (Mr. Laws) on 27 January 2003, Official Report, column 564W. Information on the total cost for 2002–03 is not yet available.

Information on the proportion of food by value produced in the UK is not held and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

The Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs has provided guidance for Government Departments and their agencies on local sourcing and how to remove obstacles to tendering faced by local and UK suppliers. The Government has a policy of achieving value for money in public procurement and ensuring that under European Commission rules, public procurement is fair, transparent and non-discriminatory.

Iraq

Paul Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister pursuant to his answer of 18 September, Official Report, column 870W, on Iraq, whether the (a) chairman and (b) members of the (i) Intelligence and Security Committee, (ii) Defence and (iii) Foreign Affairs Select Committees were invited to comment on the content of the Iraq dossier before it was published. [131915]

The Prime Minister: As I said in my reply to my hon. Friend on 18 September, all three chairmen were briefed on the content of the Iraqi Weapons of Mass Destruction dossier by the chairman of the Joint Intelligence Committee on 19 September 2002, shortly before it was published.

In addition, I invited Ann Taylor to see it in advance of the briefing to the whole Intelligence and Security Committee and to pass comment if she wished.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement about the advice which he received before the conflict on the impact of a military offensive against Iraq on the incidence of terrorism. [131993]

The Prime Minister: The assessment I received was that the greatest terrorist threat to Western interests came from al-Qaeda and related groups, and that this threat would be heightened by military action against Iraq. This assessment informed the Ministry of Defence's planning for military action, as well as the Foreign and Commonwealth Office's consular planning and in the published Travel Advice.

When I took the decision that military action would be required to ensure that Iraq complied with United Nations Security Council Resolutions, I had to weigh all the factors, including the possible short term risk of increased terrorism, against the longer term risks of rogue states developing weapons of mass destruction.

Syria

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment the Government have made of whether Syria (a) possesses and (b) is developing weapons of mass destruction. [131973]

The Prime Minister: The Government are concerned by persistent reports that Syria is pursuing a programme for the development of weapons of mass destruction and believes that the best way to pursue those concerns is in a frank and critical dialogue with the Syrian Government.

We regularly urge all states to sign and ratify all the treaties and conventions covering the development of such weapons.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Patented Medicines

6. Mr. Lazarowicz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on the implementation of the World Trade Organisation's agreement on TRIPS and public health. [132044]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The agreement reached at the WTO will enable poor countries with no, or insufficient pharmaceutical manufacturing capacity to import copies of patented medicines. The agreement is a very significant step which should help to reduce the price in poor countries of patented medicines that come onto the market after 2005.

Sierra Leone

7. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans he has to visit Freetown in 2003 to discuss progress on the Department's aid programmes in Sierra Leone. [132045]

Hilary Benn: Due to commitments arising from my new responsibilities, I have, with regret, had to postpone a visit to Sierra Leone planned for November. I remain closely in touch with developments in Sierra Leone and the progress on our substantial programme there, and discussed the progress being made with President Kabbah when he visited the UK in July.

Iraq

8. Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on his Department's contribution to the post-conflict reconstruction of Iraq. [132046]

Hilary Benn: In my Written Statement to the House yesterday, I announced a total UK commitment towards Iraq's reconstruction of £544 million for the three years from April 2003, including our share of proposed European Community spending. £296 million of this commitment will be for the period from now until March 2006. It will not result in any reduction in DFID's planned expenditure for low income countries.

9. Chris Grayling To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on the post-conflict reconstruction of Iraq. [132047]

Hilary Benn: In my written statement to the House yesterday, I announced a total UK commitment towards Iraq's reconstruction of £544 million for the three years from April 2003, including our share of proposed European Community spending. £296 million of this commitment will be for the period from now until March 2006. It will not result in any reduction in DFID's planned expenditure for low income countries.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on his Department's support for projects in Iraq. [132323]

Hilary Benn: I refer my hon. Friend to the written ministerial statement I made yesterday, 14 October 2003, Official Report, column 9WS and the documents I placed in the Library after my Ministerial Statement of 3 July. The latest information on DFID's work in Iraq can also be found on our website at www.dfid.gov.uk.

India

10. Mr. Pound: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on British aid programmes in India. [132048]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: DFID provided £161 million of bilateral development assistance to India in 2002–03. In the New Delhi Declaration of January 2002 the Prime Minister looked forward to expenditure of over £300 million. We are making progress towards this budget and expect to be able to disburse some £200 million in 2003–04.

Our programme helps government deliver pro-poor policies and services. We are working closely with four focus states committed to poverty reduction, including on their programmes of fiscal and public sector reform, increasing access to basic health, education, and urban services for the poor and empowerment of the marginalised. We also support the efforts of the Union Government and civil society in these areas nationwide.

Our priorities for this year are to:

agree, in consultation with Government of India, a new Country Assistance Plan, confirming the strategic partnership and outlining DFID's programme of support to the 10th National Development Plan; help focus state governments develop social sector investment plans and innovative approaches to livelihoods and empowerment for poor people and women;

help improve governance, especially through public sector reform, civil service reform, increased access to justice, and anti-corruption initiatives; further strengthen our links with key multilateral partners.

Global Fund (AIDS, TB and Malaria)

12. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent contributions his Department has made to the global fund to fight AIDS, TB and malaria. [132050]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: Since the Global Fund (GFATM) was set up in 2001 the UK has committed US$200 million. The UK has recently pledged a further US$80 million, extending our current commitment to a total of US$280 million up to 2008.

Afghanistan

13. Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what measures are in place to reduce the production of heroin in Afghanistan. [132051]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The Afghan Transitional Administration have produced the Afghan National Drug Control Strategy and the UK Government are working in support of that strategy. The UK has committed to provide £70 million over the next three years to target opium poppy cultivation and heroin production. This funding will be used for law enforcement, alternative livelihoods, institution building and research. DFID are providing funding for a range of alternative livelihoods activities designed to provide those involved in opium poppy cultivation with other ways of earning a living.

World Trade Organisation (Cancun)

14. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on the impact on developing countries of the outcome of the fifth ministerial round of the World Trade Organisation meeting at Cancun. [132052]

Hilary Benn: The failure of the WTO ministerial talks in Cancun was a setback for the Doha Development Agenda and a blow to developing and developed countries alike. I believe that this failure will disadvantage the world's poorest countries most. Developing countries stand to get a better deal through multilateral negotiations in the WTO—where developing countries make up two thirds of the membership—than through a multitude of regional and bilateral agreements with bigger economic players.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Arts Council

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the membership of the Steering Group for the Arts Council of Northern Ireland's research project on the Arts of Irish and Ulster-Scots includes equal representation from both cultural communities. [100446]

Angela Smith: In setting up the Steering Group the Arts Council of Northern Ireland invited nominations from Foras na Gaeilge, Iontaobhas Ultach/Ultach Trust and Tha Boord o Ulster Scotch. These are the bodies partnering with the Arts Council in funding the research. A nomination was also invited from the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure as the Arts Council's sponsoring Department.

The Steering Group consists of seven members: three nominees of the Arts Council of Northern Ireland and one nominee from each of the above organisations. The single criterion for appointing members of the Steering Group was status as a funding partner. In this context, ensuring numerically equal representation from both cultural communities has not been a consideration for the Arts Council.

Cross-departmental Policies

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what cross-departmental policies are in place to tackle (a) sex and (b) racial inequality in Northern Ireland. [131522]

Mr. Spellar: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave on 9 September 2003, Official Report, column 298W.

Pre-school Education

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Pre-school Education Advisory Group places have been allocated to each nursery school and playgroup in Newtownards for 2003–04, broken down by electoral ward pupils live in who have been allocated a Pre-school Education Advisory Group place. [129898]

Jane Kennedy: I understand from the Chief Executive of the South Eastern Education & Library Board that the playgroups in Newtownards have received the following allocations of PEAG places for 2003–04.

Ward	Provider	Places allocated 2003–04
Glen	Bees Nees Early Years Centre	18
Loughries/ Carrowdore	Chuckles Playgroup	19
Scrabo	Little Doves Community Playgroup	15
Movilla	Movilla Abbey Playgroup	26
Movilla	Play-a-Way Childcare Centre	20
Central Ards	St. Finian's Playgroup	18
Scrabo/Loughries	The Playcentre at Manor Court	24
Total		140

The final enrolment in voluntary and private sector pre-school centres is still subject to changes as allocated places are sometimes not taken up and have to be reallocated. I will write to the hon. Member once the information on final allocations is available. Details of the electoral wards in which the children live are not currently available but will be collected and included in my reply when the information on final allocations is available.

Only voluntary and private sector pre-school centres are eligible for PEAG places. Statutory nursery schools and units have a standard complement of 26 pupils per class. The four statutory settings have the following capacities:

School name	Total capacity
Abbey Primary School	52
Glenbrook Nursery School	78
Newtownards Nursery School	78
West Winds Primary School	26
Total	234

TRANSPORT

Grosvenor Square (Street Closure)

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what application he made for a street closure order in relation to the event at Grosvenor Square on 11 September 2003; and for what period the street closure was requested. [131410]

Mr. McNulty: None. I understand that the road closure was made under Metropolitan Police powers.

Cycling Safety

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what steps his Department is taking to promote the wearing of helmets by cyclists; [132082]

(2) what representations he has received about making the wearing of helmets by cyclists compulsory; if he will make it his policy to introduce such legislation; and if he will make a statement; [132083]

(3) what assessment he has made of the benefits of cyclists wearing helmets; and if he will make a statement. [132084]

Mr. Jamieson: We have a large body of material on cycle safety aimed at younger children promoting the use of cycle helmets as well as other cycle safety messages. We have also developed a Cycle Sense campaign, aimed at teenagers, that was launched on 21 May this year. The campaign encourages teenagers to wear cycle helmets and consists of posters and a new cycle sense website.

A study commissioned by the Department to look into the effectiveness of cycle helmets, published in November last year, found that overall, the evidence suggests that cycle helmets are effective at reducing the severity of brain and upper facial injuries for all ages, and especially children. This reinforces our view that helmets should be worn by children.

We have had correspondence from members of the public asking for helmets to be made compulsory, as well as The Bicycle Helmet Initiative Trust and Headway, the brain injury association.

When considering compulsion, we have to take wearing rates into consideration. A survey undertaken by the Transport Research Laboratory measuring wearing rate in 2002 found that the rate for all cyclists on built-up major roads was 25 per cent. The wearing rate is continuing to increase, but at this level, making helmets compulsory could cause enforcement difficulties, and without greater public acceptance, could have an effect on levels of cycling. We will continue to monitor wearing rates and review the option of compulsory wearing from time to time.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what recent assessment he has made of the benefits of wearing a bicycle helmet for the prevention of injuries; [132258]

(2) what plans he has to introduce legislation enforcing the wearing of bicycle helmets for those under 16; and if he will make a statement. [132259]

Mr. Jamieson: A study commissioned by the Department to look into the effectiveness of cycle helmets, published in November last year, found that overall, the evidence suggests that cycle helmets are effective at reducing the severity of brain and upper facial injuries for all ages, and especially children. This reinforces our view that helmets should be worn by children.

A survey undertaken by the Transport Research Laboratory measuring wearing rates in 2002 found that the rate for all cyclists on built-up major roads was 25 per cent. The wearing rate is continuing to increase, with the exception of boys under 16, where the rate has reduced from 16 per cent. in 1994 to 12 per cent. in 2002. At these levels, making helmets compulsory would cause enforcement difficulties, and without greater public acceptance, could have an effect on levels of cycling. We are making special efforts to persuade adolescents, and especially boys, to wear helmets. We will continue to monitor wearing rates by all ages and review the option of compulsory wearing from time to time.

Rail Services (Merseyside)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the stations in Merseyside (a) which will receive improvements through the Strategic Rail Authority's MFAS programme and (b) which are expecting improvements via the Local Transport Plan on the Merseytravel Passenger Transport Authority and Executive; and what the nature and cost of the improvements are. [132334]

Mr. McNulty: Merseyside Stations which will receive improvements through the MFAS programme are: Aintree, Aughton Park, Bebington, Birkenhead Central, Bootle New Strand, Bootle Oriel Road, Bromborough, Formby, Freshfield, Green Lane, Hightown, Hillside, Hooton, Moreton, Old Roan, Orrell Park, Sandhills, Spital, Town Green, Waterloo and West Kirby. The improvements are now waiting rooms and Customer Information Systems (CIS) costing £7 million.

At the moment, 40 of the 80 stations are fully accessible. Under the current LTP programme there are plans to upgrade up to 25 more stations, making them fully accessible to all wheelchair users and all other travellers. The plan is then to finish the remaining 15 in the next LTP round. The amount spent on each station depends on the work needed.

Road Deaths

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to his answer of 15 January 2003, Official Report, column 625W, on road deaths, if he will make a statement on (a) the progress in monitoring the experiments in the Netherlands to reduce road deaths and (b) his Department's work with United Kingdom local authorities. [132140]

Mr. Jamieson: The new traffic arrangements at the various sites in north Holland were not, principally, introduced as casualty reduction schemes. The information that has been provided by the Dutch shows that casualty figures at all the revised sites are at the level of one or none per year. We are happy that, in the context that they are being used in Holland, these ideas do not result in increases in casualties.

The Department for Transport is aware of two authorities in this country that have been considering applying some of the measures used in north Holland, but as redevelopment rather than accident reduction measures. From informal discussions with the authorities, it is understood they are now considering more familiar techniques such as 20 mph speed limit zones. We have not been approached by any authorities planning to remove traffic signals.

Strategic Rail Authority

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether additional funding will be made available to the Strategic Rail Authority to support any increase in funding for Network Rail determined by the Rail Regulator. [131362]

Mr. McNulty: The Regulator is due to conclude his Interim Review of Network Rail's track access charges in December 2003. This, along with work that the SRA and my Department are doing on rail financing and output will be considered as part of the Spending Review, the outcome of which will be announced next year.

Transport Infrastructure (Crosby)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much money was spent improving the transport infrastructure in Crosby (a) since 1997 and (b) from 1992 to 1997. [132335]

Mr. McNulty: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given on 11 September 2003, Official Report, column 374W.

I understand Sefton Borough Council are in the process of compiling this information and will supply it to my hon. Friend as soon as it becomes available.

Walking

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action the Government are taking to promote the benefits of walking. [132419]

Dr. Howells: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 14 October 2003, (PQ references 132357, 132358, 132359, 132360).

MINISTER FOR WOMEN

Voice of the Women of Iraq Conference

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister for Women what follow-up action has taken place in the United Kingdom following the Voice of the Women of Iraq conference on 9 July. [132148]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 14 October 2003]: Since the Voice of Women of Iraq conference that I attended in July, the Government have seconded two gender experts to the Coalition Provisional Authority in Baghdad and Basra. They will take forward the work started in May by the secondee from my Women and Equality Unit, in supporting Iraqi women and to help determine a national policy for women. I continue to meet with a group of Iraqi women to listen to their concerns and experiences, as well as discuss ways to support Iraqi women during this critical phase. I have continued to stress the need to ensure substantial women's representation in all strands of the rapidly evolving political and reconstruction process at the highest level.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister for Women if she will make available the recommendations of the conference Voice of the Women of Iraq, which she attended on 9 July. [132253]

Ms Hewitt: I will make the recommendations of the conference Voice of the Women of Iraq available in the Libraries of the House.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Combined Heat and Power

Jonathan Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the benefits of excess combined heat and power being exported between company sites. [131971]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 14 October 2003]: The export of excess good quality combined heat and power between company sites provides benefits to security of supply, carbon emission savings and costs. In 2002, the export of CHP to companies within the same group and to other companies is estimated to have saved up to 1 million tonnes of carbon. The financial benefit provided by exemption from the climate change levy of power outputs for those good quality CHP exports was up to £15 million in 2002.

Pollution

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many applications for pollution prevention and control permits were received by the Environment Agency in each year from 1996 to date; what the average time taken to determine applications was in each such year; and if she will make a statement. [129350]

Margaret Beckett: The following table gives the number of permit applications made to the Environment Agency since 2000 and the average time taken for them to be issued. No applications were received before that date because the Pollution Prevention and Control (England and Wales) Regulations 2000 ('the PPC Regulations') were not then in force.

Permit applications made to the environment agency

Calendar year	Number of applications received	Number of permits issued	Average time to determine permits issued in year[1] (months)
2000	36	0	n/a
2001	285	54	[2]6.4
2002	167	166	10.3
2003	183	141	12.5
Total	671	361

[1] Total time from receipt until permit issue. No allowance has been made for periods waiting for further information required by Schedule 4 Notices.

[2] The 2001 data is not representative because it shows only permits issued in 2001 when the regime was first introduced.

There has been a slight increase to the average determination time in 2003. The process of PPC is complex, and applications have often lacked necessary information which can create substantial delays if further information is sought from the applicant. In such cases a notice is issued to the operator by the regulator and the determination of the application is effectively suspended until such time as further information is received.

The Environment Agency is aiming to reduce delays to permitting; measures include centrally managed "Strategic Permitting Groups" that have been established to focus resources on the effective determination of applications, and the reviewing and simplifying of the regulatory tools that are used to determine applications.

Renewables

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what contribution renewable energy made to energy consumption in England in the last year for which figures are available; and what the levels were in other EU countries. [131081]

Mr. Timms: I have been asked to reply.

The available information is shown in the table and covers renewable energy as a share of total primary energy supply in the United Kingdom and in each of the other EU member states.

Renewable energy as a share of total primary energy supply, 2001

	Total primary energy supply (Mtoe)	Of which renewables (Mtoe)	Share of renewables Percentage
France	265.6	18.6	7.0
Sweden	51.1	15.0	29.4
Italy	172.0	9.6	5.6
Germany	351.1	9.2	2.6
Spain	127.4	8.2	6.5
Finland	33.8	7.6	22.4
Austria	30.7	6.6	21.5
Portugal	24.7	3.4	13.7
United Kingdom	235.2	2.5	1.1
Denmark	19.8	2.1	10.4
Greece	28.7	1.3	4.6
Netherlands	77.2	1.1	1.4
Belgium	59.0	0.6	1.0
Ireland	15.0	0.3	1.7
Luxembourg	3.8	0.1	1.6

Source:
International Energy Agency

The UK percentage is lower than other renewables percentages published for the United Kingdom because it is expressed in primary energy supply terms and includes energy used for heat as well as for electricity in both the denominator and the numerator. The percentage of UK electricity sales in 2001 that was accounted for by renewable sources eligible for the Renewables Obligation was 1.5 per cent. rising to 1.7 per cent. in 2002.

Whaling

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps the Government are taking to encourage Iceland to stop whaling; and if she will make a statement. [131940]

Mr. Bradshaw: While it is certainly most regrettable, Iceland's decision to undertake a programme of lethal scientific research on whales is perfectly legal and our only recourse is thus to diplomatic protest. I met the Icelandic ambassador to London in September and left him in no doubt as to the UK Government's views on Iceland's unjustified and unnecessary plan to kill 38 minke whales this year; (the actual take turned out to be 36). On 10 September the UK Government, represented by the UK ambassador to Iceland, led a demarche of 23 countries urging the Icelandic Government to reconsider its decision to proceed with so-called "scientific" whaling. A demarche on this scale is significant, and I hope that the Icelandic Government will reflect on it before deciding how to take matters forward for next year.

DEFENCE

Iraq

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his written Ministerial Statement of 7 July 2003, Official Report, column 41–42WS, on Iraq, whether the full report on operations in Iraq to which he referred will include estimates of the numbers of British and Iraqi military and civilian casualties resulting from recent military operations in Iraq. [125285]

Mr. Hoon: The full report on operations in Iraq will contain details of British fatal casualties only. We have no viable means of ascertaining the numbers of Iraqis killed or injured during the conflict. As of 10 October, 50 United Kingdom armed forces personnel and one member of the Defence Fire Service had died since the start of coalition military operations against Iraq. 12 of these deaths were non-battle fatalities.

Mr. Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps were taken during the recent conflict in Iraq to encourage mutiny amongst Iraqi armed service personnel. [132291]

Mr. Ingram: In an attempt to keep the conflict short and minimise casualties on both sides, the Coalition encouraged surrender and desertion, though not mutiny, within the Iraqi armed forces. Throughout the conflict daily broadcasts were made and leaflets dropped, peaking on 21–23 March with Iraqi ex-military commanders and clerics making appeals to the Iraqi forces to surrender or desert.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the results of the investigations into the cause of Marine Maddison's death in Iraq on 30 March; and if he will make a statement. [125986]

Mr. Ingram: The Service Police investigation into the death of Marine Maddison is continuing. No conclusions have yet been drawn and it would be inappropriate to comment further at this stage.

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what procedures are in place to ensure safety systems are followed at HM naval bases where private enterprise is involved in the maintenance and repair of nuclear submarines. [131551]

Mr. Ingram: Standards of safety in the maintenance and repair of nuclear submarines are ensured by the appointment of Radiation Protection Supervisors as defined by the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1999 (IRRs99). These Radiation Protection Supervisors ensure that the legally mandated local rules, written by the MOD or site operator as appropriate, are adhered to. The Naval Base Commanders employ Radiation Protection Advisers and Radiation Safety Officers to provide assurance and advice that these safety systems are being observed. In addition, MOD's internal regulatory body provides assurance on nuclear safety to senior functional safety boards and the independent Defence Nuclear Safety Committee. The Health and Safety Executive's Nuclear Installation Inspectorate (NII) also regulates MOD activities under IRRs99.

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether personal monitors of the IPM7 type are mandatory for all nuclear submarine radiation workers; [131547]

(2) what plans he has to improve the safety of workers on nuclear submarines; [131548]

(3) when the equipment used to monitor personnel leaving reactor compartments of nuclear submarines was last updated; and if he will make a statement. [131549]

Mr. Ingram: IPM-7 type detectors are not suitable for use onboard submarines due to space constraints. Alternative procedures are therefore in place to ensure all personnel are thoroughly monitored for contamination on completion of their work before going ashore.

The safety regime for workers on nuclear submarines complies fully with legal requirements. Safety arrangements are regularly audited and inspected by naval base assurance personnel and regulated by both MOD's internal nuclear propulsion programme regulator and the Health and Safety Executive's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate (NII). As a responsible employer the MOD acts immediately on any advice or findings from these audits and inspections. The Department strives to adopt best industry practice and continues to invest in improvements in all forms of personal radiation monitoring equipment in order to ensure that all workers exposures are kept as low as is reasonably practicable.

A programme to replace the existing equipment used to monitor personnel leaving reactor compartments of nuclear submarines is currently under way. It is planned to start issuing the new equipment to submarines from October this year. This adds to the modern monitoring equipment that was introduced by the naval bases during the 1990s.

Qualifications

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what qualifications are required of (a) civilian and (b) Navy radiation safety personnel working on nuclear submarines. [131550]

Mr. Ingram: Both civilian and Royal Navy radiation safety personnel are required to be qualified to at least City and Guilds Stage 1 in Radiation Safety Practice, which is recognised as the required standard by the UK nuclear industry.

Personal Injury Claims

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what sums have been made in settlement of personal injury claims filed concerning Army personnel in each year since 1990. [132178]

Mr. Caplin: The Ministry of Defence does not generally record the details of the settlements of personal injury cases brought by members of HM forces by individual service. This information could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost. However, the information sought in relation to members of HM forces since 1990 is shown as follows. The increase in compensation payments reflects the fact that prior to May 1987, service personnel were prevented from pursuing claims for compensation from the MOD by section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947. The increase in the value of settlements in recent years is mainly attributable to changes in the level of general damages recommended to the courts by the Judicial Studies Board and a change in the multiplier used to calculate future losses as directed by the Lord Chancellor and set out in the Damages Act 1996.

	Value of settlement (£ million)
1990–91	1.67
1991–92	2.39
1992–93	6.52
1993–94	8.29
1994–95	12.0
1995–96	12.6
1996–97	16.2
1997–98	26.8
1998–99	26.7
1999–2000	31.0
2000–01	36.6
2001–02	32.3
2002–03	40.0

Academies

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills for each school which was a city technology college or city college for the technology of the arts on 1 September 2002, whether (a) he has agreed under section 68 of the Education Act 2002 that the institution shall be known as an academy, (b) an application has been made to him that the school be known as an academy and (c) no application has been made to him for the school to be known as an academy; and in the case of (a), when the decision takes effect. [131226]

Mr. Miliband: Section 68 of the Education Act 2002 allows a city technology college (CTC) or city college for the Technology of the Arts (CCTA) to convert into an academy, where the governors agree that the college should take on the characteristics of an academy. To date one CTC, Djanogly in Nottingham, has converted into an academy with effect from August 2003. The Department has also received an expression of interest from Haberdashers CTC in Lewisham to convert into an academy with effect from September 2005. Other CTCs are involved in the academies nine programmes as sponsors or in federation with academies, but have not formally expressed an interest in conversion.

Asbestos

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much has been spent by his Department and its agencies on (a) asbestos surveys and (b) the management and removal of asbestos since 1st January 2001; and what budget is available to (i) commission asbestos surveys and (ii) manage and remove asbestos from buildings in (A) 2003 and (B) 2004. [130913]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: My Department has spent an estimated £40,000 on asbestos surveys since January 2001. Costs for the management and removal of asbestos are not available. There is no set budget for future surveys, asbestos management or associated works. However, any remedial and control activities identified in the future as a requirement under the existing and new Control of Asbestos at Work Regulations will be undertaken. As I have said previously in replies to questions on asbestos from the hon. Gentleman, measures in place already and planned, will result in my Department fully complying with the new regulations by May 2004.

Free School Meals

Mr. Mike Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many (a) boys and (b) girls receiving free school meals reached the required standards in (i) English and (ii) maths at key stage (A) 1, (B) 2, (C) 3 and (D) 4 in each year since 1997, broken down by local education authority. [131466]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

The tables show, for each local education authority, the number and percentage of boys and girls by free school meals eligibility who reached the expected level in English and Maths in each year available since 1997. The figures shown are based on:

Pupils achieving level 2 or above at Key Stage 1
Pupils achieving level 4 or above at Key Stage 2
Pupils achieving level 5 or above at Key Stage 3
Pupils achieving grades A*-G) at GCSE

Special Educational Needs (Small Programmes Fund)

Jonathan Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills which organisations received funding from the two new streams under the SEN Small Programmes Fund 2002–03; and what sums each organisation received. [132203]

Mr. Miliband: The SEN Small Programmes Fund is a small pot of money which we use to fund projects taken forward by voluntary bodies working in the field of SEN.

The following organisations received funding from the two streams of the SEN Small Programmes Fund in 2002–03:

Lead organisation name	Project title	Grant bid (£)
Parents and pupils strand
Kids Southeast	The Same Difference	25,000
Autism Initiatives	Autistic Spectrum Disorder (ASD) Steps to inclusion for pupils, parents and providers	30,000
AiMP and the North East Regional Partnership	AiMP (Amicus interactive Music Project)	30,000
Carousel	MacKeith Unit After Schools Club	25,997
Contact a Family	Contact a Family, SKILL and network 81 Parent information project	26,686
The Deaf(a x Trust	Training deaf pupils and their parents on the use of communications aid technologies	30,000
East Midlands Regional Partnership	Provision of support to parents/carers of pupils with SLD/complex needs who live in geographically/socially isolated locations within the East Midlands	27,100
Harry's Hydro	North Somerset Hydrotherapy and multi-sensory centre	30,000
The Learning Disabilities Federation	Family and supporter for pupils and parents of children with Autism/ Autistic Spectrum and SEN/SSEN	19,400
Leonard Cheshire South West	Exeter LIVE—Living with Independence, Vocation and Education	30,000
Liverpool Institute for Performing Arts	Crossing the Threshold	18,500
Manchester Council for Community Relations	Parents and Inclusive Education	30,000

Gifted Pupils

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills pursuant to his answer of 16 September, Official Report, column 686W, on gifted pupils, how many (a) pupils that took part in the 2003 summer schools and (b) pupils with Academy membership are from schools in the West Sussex area. [131956]

Mr. Miliband: There are currently 23 members of the National Academy for Gifted and Talented Youth from schools in the county of West Sussex. Of those, three went to academy summer schools in 2003, another five took part in an Academy Outreach Course in 2002–03 and one is participating in an e-learning maths course. A further three members are from schools in Brighton and Hove.

Key Stage Science Assessments

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proportion of children who attained level 4 in science Key Stage 2 assessment in 1998 achieved level 5 or above in science Key Stage 3 assessment in 2001; and what proportion of children who attained level 5 in science Key Stage 2 assessment in 1998 achieved level 6 or above in science Key Stage 3 assessment in 2001. [131225]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The information requested is as follows:

Of those pupils who achieved level 4 or above in the 1998 Key Stage 2 Science tests, the proportion who went on to achieve level 5 or above in the 2001 Key Stage 3 Science tests was 85.3 per cent.

Of these pupils who achieved level 5 or above in the 1998 Key Stage 2 Science tests, the proportion who went on to achieve level 6 or above in the 2001 Key Stage 3 Science tests was 85.1 per cent.

Student Loans

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proportion of British undergraduate students used student loan facilities while they have capital sums invested elsewhere in the last year for which figures are available; and what the annual cost is of the interest subsidy on these loans. [129987]

Alan Johnson: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills pursuant to the Answer of 17 September, reference 129731 what credit is given to the Student Loan Company for delays in transmission of repayments by the Inland Revenue; and what plans he has to minimise such delays. [131572]

Alan Johnson: The Student Loans Company (SLC) manages student loan accounts. However, the loans are funded by and repaid to DfES, once Inland Revenue has collected and accounted for the loan repayments. The flow of loan repayments monies does not affect SLC's financial position in any way. Therefore, the question of credit to SLC for any delays in transmission of loan repayments does not arise.

As mentioned in written answer 129731, recovered loan amounts are accounted for annually in arrears (by analogy with tax collections) and there is little scope for current change. However, from 2005/06, Inland Revenue will require electronic deductions records (in respect of 2004/05) from large employers. These developments should enable earlier transmission of repayments in due course.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the value was of student loans outstanding and attributable to persons who had dropped out from their higher education courses in each of the past three years. [131722]

Alan Johnson: The information requested is not available centrally.

Cadet Training Courses

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what guidelines his Department issues to schools on the release of pupils in full-time education for training courses offered by (a) Sea Cadets, (b) Army Cadets and (c) the Air Training Corps. [131811]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: We recognise the positive impact of participation in training courses offered by the Sea Cadets, Army Cadets, Air Training Corps and other out of school activities on pupils' leadership skills, self esteem and motivation. They also significantly reduce the risk of vulnerable young people drifting into crime as well as improving their school attendance, as I observed when I visited Project Outreach run by the Army Cadet Force Association in February.

It is for schools to consider requests to attend such activities. Requests should be considered on an individual basis taking into account the impact on the continuity of the pupil's learning and the guidance in annex A of the Department for Education and Skills' circular 10/99, School Inclusion: Pupil Support.

University Admissions

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what appeal or complaint procedures there are for students refused placements at the University of the West of England on the joint distance learning programme MA in planning; [132138]

(2) what his policy is on whether the administrators of a university registering a student for a joint qualification course may override the decisions of the management board representing all participating universities. [132139]

Alan Johnson: The administration of joint programmes and internal appeals or complaints procedures at universities are matters for the individual institutions, although they should have regard to the Quality Assurance Agency's Code of Practice on these issues. The Secretary of State has no powers to intervene in the internal affairs of higher education institutions.

As both of these questions essentially concern the internal affairs of the University of West of England, I have written to the Vice-Chancellor, Mr. Alfred Morris, asking for a response. I shall send you a copy of his reply and arrange for a copy to be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Andrew Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills when he will reply to the questions of the hon. Member for Edmonton, Refs (a) 120769, (b) 120770, (C) 120771, (d) 120772 and (e) 120773, tabled on 19 June. [125007]

Stephen Twigg: Replies were issued on (a) 23 September, (b) 7 July, (c) 14 July, (d) 14 July and (e) 30 September.

Teenage Pregnancy

Mr. Andrew Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what action is being taken to tackle teenage pregnancy in deprived areas; and if he will make a statement. [120773]

Stephen Twigg: The similar geography of teenage pregnancy and deprivation suggests that whilst there is still much work to do, the encouraging 10 per cent. decline in England's under 18 conception rate from 1998 to 2001 has been largely achieved through targeted work in deprived localities with high numbers of conceptions by:

the allocation of funding to Teenage Pregnancy Partnerships based on teenage pregnancy rates;

the use of research and toolkits to address the needs of vulnerable groups. For example, Teenage Pregnancy and Neighbourhood Renewal: Learning from New Deal for Communities which details good practice in New Deal for Community areas and shares the main learning points from that practice;

New Deal for Communities and other Neighbourhood Renewal pathfinder programmes are given support and guidance in tackling teenage pregnancy as an issue through learning events and written guidance; encouraging local strategies to target wards with a high number of teenage conceptions; and the development of a programme of work to improve our understanding of the relationship between teenage pregnancy and socio-economic factors.

The association between deprivation and teenage pregnancy is well established and reflected in the under 18 conception rates for local authorities across England. To achieve its national targets of halving the under 18 conception rate and reducing the inequality in rates between wards by at least 25 per cent. by 2010, the Teenage Pregnancy Strategy must focus its work on deprived areas with high conception rates.

Student Visas

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills which universities have the largest number of students studying on international student visas. [129426]

Alan Johnson: Information on the number of non-European Union students studying at higher education institutions in England for 2001–02 shows that the largest number of these students are studying at the universities listed in the table below. Information is not collected on the visa status of these students.

Institution	Number

Skills Base

Mr. Barry Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment his Department has made of the effect on the UK skills base of those on low incomes choosing not to seek new employment because of concerns over short term cash flow problems. [129862]

Mr Ivan Lewis: This Department has not made an assessment of the effect on the skills base if those on low incomes choose not to seek new employment. The recent Skills Strategy White Paper sets out a number of measures aimed at ensuring individuals have the skills they need to be employable, and work productively in a flexible labour market. In addition, the Department for Work and Pensions is committed to making work pay for all those who are able to work, and to supporting households, including low-income households, in sustaining employment.

The Department for Work and Pensions believe that most people moving from one job to another will be able to manage until they receive payment from their new job, as wages are paid in arrears. For those in receipt of Working Tax Credit, continuity of payment is maintained when people move from one job to another, as long as the gap between jobs is no more than 7 days. The new Working Tax Credit has been extended to people aged 25 and over without children. If people receive the Child Tax Credit, this continues to be paid direct to the main carer throughout any changes in employment. People in low paid employment may also be entitled to Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit.

People who are unable to manage whilst waiting for payment of wages, leading to a serious risk to their own health or safety or that of their family, may be able to get an interest free Crisis Loan. Repayment of a Crisis Loan does not start until the period of crisis is over and the rate of repayment takes account of a person's income and other commitments to avoid hardship.

University Drop-out Rate

Mr. David Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the drop-out rate was at universities in England and Wales in each year since 1997. [130377]

Alan Johnson: The latest available figures giving non-completion rates for students starting full-time first degree courses in England and in Wales are as follows:

Non-completion for students starting full-time first degree courses in England and Wales

Students starting courses in:	Non completion rate (%)[1]
	England	Wales
1999–2000	16	15
1998–99	16	14
1997–98	16	16

HEFCE Performance Indicators

[1] Non-completion is regarded as those who do not gain a qualification from their original course or from any other course and do not transfer to another institution.

Figures published in 2003 by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) show that the UK as a whole has one of the lowest non-completion rates among OECD countries.

University Places

Mrs. Cheryl Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what proportion of A-level students from (a) the Chesham and Amersham constituency and (b) Buckinghamshire secured a place at university in the last year for which figures are available. [129889]

Alan Johnson: The available information shows that, in 2002, the proportion of 18 year olds resident in Buckinghamshire who obtained two or more A-levels and who were accepted onto a full-time or sandwich undergraduate course in the UK via the Universities and Colleges Admission Service (UCAS) was 65 per cent., compared to the national average of 61 per cent.

Figures are not available at constituency level.

Students (Tynemouth)

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many people resident in Tynemouth constituency are (a) further and (b) higher education students. [130387]

Alan Johnson: Figures are not available at constituency level. The available figures cover North Tyneside LEA.

In 2001–02, 16,445 people resident in North Tyneside LEA attended Further Education (FE) sector colleges.

In 2002–03, 856 people resident in North Tyneside LEA were accepted through the Universities and Colleges Admissions Service (UCAS) onto full-time undergraduate courses.

Higher Education

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many people beginning higher education courses in 2002 had previously attended a fee paying school. [130382]

Alan Johnson: The available information is from the Universities and Colleges Admissions Service (UCAS) and covers full-time undergraduate entrants. Figures are in the table.

Accepted applicants through UCAS to undergraduate courses by previous educational establishment, 2002 entry

Previous Educational Establishment	Numbers	Percentage of known
Maintained school	121,911	46
Independent school	30,293	11

Further and Higher Education

Mrs. Cheryl Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many people in (a) Chesham & Amersham and (b) Buckinghamshire are (i) further and (ii) higher education students. [129891]

Alan Johnson: Figures are not available at constituency level. The available figures cover Buckinghamshire LEA.

In 2001–02, 19,396 people resident in Buckinghamshire LEA attended Further Education (FE) sector colleges.

In 2002–03, 3,316 people resident in Buckinghamshire were accepted through the Universities and Colleges Admissions Service (UCAS) onto full-time undergraduate courses.

Literacy and Numeracy

Mr. Phil Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list the contractual penalties incurred by contractors responsible for the delivery of primary (a) literacy and (b) numeracy strategies for failure to meet targets set by the strategies in the last three years. [131342]

Stephen Twigg: The responsibility for the achievement of the primary literacy and numeracy national targets lies solely with the Department for Education and Skills. The contractor responsible for the delivery of the primary literacy and numeracy strategies, CfBT Education Services, provides educational and operational support under the strategic direction of the Department.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Child Protection

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many specialist child protection officers have been employed in each county police force in each of the last five years. [129333]

Ms Blears [holding answer 11 September 2003]: Specific information relating to the compliance of police forces with the recommendations of the Victoria Climbie Inquiry Report has been analysed by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary, and a summary report of their findings, together with those of Health and Social Services Inspectorates, will be published in October.

Information about the numbers of specialist child protection officers will not be available from this report. The allocation of resources within a force is decided locally by the Chief Constable or, in the case of the Metropolitan Police Service, the Commissioner. Under the National Policing Plan all forces and authorities are expected to review their force policy and local service plans to ensure that child protection is given the appropriate priority.

Communications Data

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prescribed officers will be able to authorise access to communications data under

(a) Schedule 1, columns 1 and 2 and (b) Schedule 2, columns 1 and 2 of the draft Regulation of Investigatory Powers (Communications Data) Order 2003, broken down by organisations authorised to provide access. [131710]

Caroline Flint: This information is not held centrally.

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether a single authorised request for access to communications data can involve all individuals who have contacted an organisation identified in the Schedules of the draft Regulation of Investigatory Powers (Communications Data) Order 2003; and what estimate he has made of the number of people whose communications data will be accessed in a single year. [131712]

Caroline Flint: Under Part I Chapter II of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000, any authorisation granted or notice given requiring the disclosure of communications data must be necessary for a purpose set out in section 22(2). Obtaining the data must also be proportionate to what is sought to be achieved by that taking into account the extent of the intrusiveness of what is proposed and the operational need for that. The imposition of a regulatory framework will enable a clearer assessment of how many people lawful acquisition of communications data impacts upon.

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff the Interception of Communications Commissioner will have to supervise those who are authorised to gain access to Communications Data under the draft Regulation of Investigatory Powers (Communications Data) Order 2003; and if he will make a statement on the current staffing levels of the Commissioner. [131709]

Caroline Flint: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry North East (Bob Ainsworth) on 26 March 2003, Official Report, column 264W.

The Interception of Communications Commissioner is considering the number of staff he will require to undertake his statutory duty and how he might additionally undertake some form of third party prior approval of certain requirements for disclosure of communications data. This was proposed in the consultation paper "Access to communications data—respecting privacy and protecting the public from crime", a summary of responses to which has been published[1].

The Commissioner is satisfied that the staffing level in his office is sufficient to meet his current responsibilities.

[1] http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/docs2/access_comms_data.html

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many authorised requests for access to communications data he has estimated each organisation identified in the Schedules of the draft Regulation of Investigatory Powers (Communications Data) Order 2003 will make in a year. [131711]

Caroline Flint: In the consultation paper 'Access to communications data—respecting privacy and protecting the public from crime' the Government estimated public authorities have approximately half a million requirements for disclosure of communications data annually and, where kept, gave figures for specific public authorities. The imposition of a regulatory regime for acquisition of communications data will require proper record keeping by each public authority exercising powers under Part I Chapter II of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000.

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the police, having gained access to communications data, have the powers to disclose such data to the Inland Revenue for the purposes of collection of tax or duty; and what plans he has to withdraw the draft Regulation of Investigatory Powers (Communications Data) Order 2003 to make specific reference to section 22(2)(f) of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000. [131713]

Caroline Flint: The draft Regulation of Investigatory Powers (Communications Data) Order 2003 makes specific reference to section 22(2)(f) of the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000. It provides that only the Commissioners of Customs and Excise and the Commissioners of Inland Revenue may grant an authorisation or give a notice requiring disclosure of communications data for the purpose of assessing or collecting any tax, duty, levy or other imposition, contribution or charge payable to a Government Department. The police having obtained communications data for another purpose have no power to disclose that data to the Inland Revenue for the purposes of collecting tax or to Customs and Excise for the purposes of collecting duty.

Criminal Cases Review Commission

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps the CCRC is taking to (a) ensure clear communication and (b) promote awareness and understanding among its stakeholders. [128884]

Paul Goggins: The Commission's communications strategy concentrates on promoting awareness and understanding among its stakeholders. It disseminates widely an information pack and other materials that clarify its role and powers. These include press releases and feature articles, an audiotape and videotape ("Open to Question", which has received an international award). It also operates the website http://www.ccrc.gov.uk and a 24-hour media inquiry service. Commission staff frequently give lectures and presentations on the Commission, and visit other agencies in the criminal justice system. A second workshop for selected stakeholders was held in July 2003.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what pieces of new legislation have been stimulated by the CCRC's casework. [128848]

Paul Goggins: To 31 March 2003, the Commission's casework has stimulated only one piece of new legislation: the Criminal Cases Review (Insanity) Act 1999.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken by the CCRC to improve the effectiveness and efficiency of the case review process. [128850]

Paul Goggins: Efforts are continually being made by the Commission to improve the effectiveness and efficiency of the case review process, without compromising its commitment to reviewing each case thoroughly. For case review, as for any of its processes, the Commission's goals must satisfy five distinct criteria. They must be:

specific, i.e. define a precise process modification to be made, or numerical performance standard to be reached;

payoff-oriented, i.e. be defined to achieve improvements in effectiveness, efficiency and/or economy;

intrinsically rewarding, otherwise staff will not be motivated to achieve them; realistic, otherwise staff are likely to be demotivated by them; and observable, i.e. it must be possible to determine unambiguously whether or not they have been achieved.

These are stringent requirements, and imply that the necessary planning, resource allocation and monitoring processes are implemented to achieve and observe them. Much of the Commission's routine managerial effort is directed to continuous improvement of its processes by the definition and implementation of process goals. Whenever special process review seems appropriate, the Chairman convenes an internal Process Improvement Group (PIG), which may then set up specific Process Improvement Projects (PIPs).

Criminal Justice and Public Order Act

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many stops and searches have been carried out by each police force under section 60 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 in each year since 1998–99, broken down by ethnic origin of those stopped and searched; and how many of these involved the searching of vehicles. [131587]

Ms Blears: The information requested on stop and searches of persons under Section 60 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 that has been published in "Statistics on Race and the Criminal Justice System" is given in the tables for each financial year from 1998–99 to 2001–02 inclusive. Also included in the tables which have been placed in the Library, is information on the number of vehicles searched. This information is not routinely published. Data are not yet available for the 2002–03 financial year.

Dr. Ali Dizaei

Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons Section 8 warrants were applied for in relation to Dr Ali Dizaei. [131365]

Ms Blears: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informs me that the reasons for the 12 warrants applied for and issued under Section 8 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 on 15 January 2001 were to allow officers to search for documents and correspondence which may have shown a criminal relationship between Ali Dizaei and two named individuals and computer and electronic storage devices on which such documents and correspondence may have been created and stored.

The section 8 warrant applied for and issued on 20 January 2001 was to allow officers to search for documents and correspondence.

Forensic Science Laboratory (Chorley)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which police forces in England and Wales contract work to the Forensic Science Laboratory in Chorley; how many staff are employed at the Chorley site; and what representations he has received in response to his statement of 17 July 2003, Official Report, column 61WS, from (a) the workforces, (b) trade unions, (c) police forces, (d) hon. Members and (e) other bodies. [131497]

Ms Blears: Chorley Forensic Science Laboratory provides services to the police forces in its North West region, which are Cumbria, Lancashire, Merseyside, Greater Manchester, Cheshire, and North Wales. The Laboratory also provides services to police forces in Nottinghamshire and Staffordshire.

These services are based on Service Level Agreements and not legally binding contracts.

At 31 August, there were 228 individuals employed at Chorley Forensic Laboratory.

To date, representations in response to my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary's statement of 17 July about the future of the Forensic Science Service have been received from (a) two FSS employees, (b) two trade unions, Prospect and PCS, and from Brendan Barber, General Secretary of the TUC, (c) no police forces or police authorities, (d) 89 hon. Members and (e) no other bodies.

Jamaican Prisoners

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce alternatives to prosecutions for drugs mules from Jamaica. [132416]

John Healey: I have been asked to reply.

None. All those detected attempting to smuggle drugs into the UK should expect to face prosecution in the UK. However, HM Customs and Excise has seen a 75 per cent. reduction in the number of cocaine couriers from Jamaica arrested in the UK since they began to provide support to the Jamaican authorities in June 2002 to intercept couriers prior to boarding planes in Jamaica.

Terrorism Act

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions police officers used powers provided by the Terrorism Act 2000 during protests at (a) RAF Fairford and (b) the Mining Bomb Store at Welford, Berkshire. [130344]

Ms Blears: Gloucestershire Police inform me that, during the period 6 March to 27 April 2003, the stop and search powers conferred by authorisations under section 44 of the Terrorism Act 2000 were used on a total of 2,132 occasions in the vicinity of RAF Fairford. The police also used their powers under section 45(2) to seize articles from 28 of those who were stopped. One arrest was made under section 41 of the Act. I understand that none of the other powers in Part V of the Act were used.

Thames Valley Police inform me that during the period 1 March to 22 April 2003, the stop and search powers conferred by authorisations under section 44 of the Act were used on 41 occasions in the vicinity of the Mining Bomb Store at Welford, Berkshire. One arrest was made under section 41 of the Act. I understand that none of the other powers in Part V of the Act were used.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many notices under section 44 of the Terrorism Act 2000 he has signed this year relating to (a) London and (b) the rest of England; and if he will make a statement. [131300]

Mr. Blunkett: So far this year the use of section 44 powers has been confirmed on 20 occasions within London. The power has been confirmed on 125 occasions for the rest of England.

This is an important power and the Government are adamant it must be used appropriately and proportionately.

National Probation Directorate

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons (a) are employed and (b) act as consultants for the National Probation Directorate. [131165]

Paul Goggins: The information requested is as follows:

Collected Staff in Post figures indicate that as of August 2003 there were 430 staff in post within the National Probation Directorate.

Of these staff currently, there are 42 consultants in post.

Police Identification

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the statutory basis is for the requirement that police officers must display an identifying number on their uniform. [131655]

Ms Blears: There is no statutory requirement for police officers to display an identifying number on their uniform.

Police Internal Investigations

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers are subject to (a) internal investigations and (b) disciplinary proceedings. [131766]

Ms Blears: Information concerning the numbers of police officers subject to (a) internal investigations and (b) disciplinary proceedings is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Policing

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what (a) proportion and (b) total amount of (i) total Government spending and (ii) gross domestic product was spent on policing in each of the last five years; and what the projected proportion of total Government spending is in the next two years. [121967]

Ms Blears: The information available for the United Kingdom is set out in the table.

Prison Population

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his projection is for the prison population for mid-year 2006; and what the (a) highest and (b) lowest estimated figures are. [124854]

Paul Goggins [holding answer 10 July 2003]: The most recent projections of the prison population are presented in the April 2003 Prison Population Monthly Brief issued in September 2003. These present four scenarios (scenarios a—d) for the short term projection (up to March 2005) and two scenarios (central scenarios b and c) for the long term projection (up to 2009). There are no new higher and lower scenarios for these most recent long term projections.

The projections cover a range of possible trends in sentencing and court workloads and include estimates for policy initiatives.

The two central scenarios would lead to prison populations of between 87,200 and 88,000 by mid-year 2006.

Probation Services

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the completion rates were for offenders commencing Probation Service accredited programmes in (a) 2001–02 and (b) 2002–03, broken down by programme type. [131167]

Paul Goggins: In 2001–02 the percentage of offenders completing Probation Service accredited programmes, as a proportion of starts, was 37 per cent. This figure reached 48 per cent. in 2002–03. The proportion of starts to completions, as a percentage, per programme type is shown in the final two columns of the table. These are national figures and are subject to variation from area to area.

It should be noted that the nature of programmes and the delivery structure means that offenders who start a programme in a given year do not necessarily complete the programme in that year. 2001 was the first year of implementation of programmes, and the rollout of programmes is continuing through 2003–04.

Accredited programme completion rates 2001–02 and 2002–03

Project Reflex

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) arrests and (b) convictions have resulted from the work of Project Reflex in each month since its inception. [131763]

Beverley Hughes: Between April 2001 and April 2002, Reflex launched 82 operations and disrupted 14 organised crime groups. 67 facilitators were arrested, resulting in 21 convictions. Between June 2002 and April 2003, there were 98 arrests. The total number of convictions to date is not yet available, as some cases are continuing.

Arrests and convictions in this Reflex year, since April 2003, are as follows.

	Arrests	Convictions to date
April	4	1
May	5	0
June	16	3
July	22	20
August	10	3
September	—	—
October	10	—
Total	67	27

Note:
Arrests and convictions are not necessarily related to each other.

In addition, under the first phase of Maxim, a joint operation between the Metropolitan police and Immigration Services, there were 47 arrests including possessing false documents. In the second phase of Maxim, there were 23 arrests, including those holding false documents.

Publicity and Advertising

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much (a) his Department and (b) each agency and non-departmental public body sponsored by his Department spent on (i) publicity and (ii) advertising in each year from 1995–96 to 2002–03 (estimated); and if he will make a statement. [92228]

Fiona Mactaggart: Home Office expenditure, and expenditure by its sponsored bodies on advertising and publicity is made in accordance with departmental guidance.

Details of expenditure are set out in the table.

Under-age Drinkers

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what advice has been given to the police regarding the confiscation of unopened containers of alcohol from underage drinkers following the reintroduction of regulations under the Licensing Act 2003; [131561]

(2) how police should dispose of unopened containers of alcohol confiscated from underage drinkers, following re-introduction of regulations under the Licensing Act 2003. [131691]

Ms Blears: Section 155 of the Licensing Act 2003 came into force on 10 September 2003. It extended existing police powers relating to the confiscation of alcohol from people who are drinking and causing nuisance in public places, allowing for the confiscation of sealed containers in addition to opened containers, in defined circumstances.

Home Office Circular 45/2003 issued to police forces on 10 September 2003 sets out the details of how they should apply the new powers. The Circular updates Home Office Circular 38/1997 which explains that a constable can dispose of any alcoholic drink surrendered to him in such a manner as he considers appropriate. In most instances, this is likely to involve immediately pouring the drink away. In some cases it may be more appropriate to remove the drink from the scene and dispose of it later.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iraq

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his Answer of 20 January 2003, Official Report, column 85W, on Iraq, what the outcome has been of the vigorous investigations into United Kingdom companies named in Iraq's declaration to the United Nations; and if he will make a statement. [131698]

Mr. MacShane: The analysis of the Iraqi declaration showed that there was no new information on British companies that merited action being taken against them. All the British companies that were named in the declaration were already known to the relevant authorities, and their activities had already been investigated. Where appropriate, legal proceedings were pursued at the time.

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library copies of each memorandum he sent to the Prime Minister, on the situation in respect of Iraq, between 16 and 19 March this year. [131109]

Mr. Rammell: Any such material is withheld in accordance with the Code of Practice on access to Government Information, Part II paragraphs l(a), l(b) and 2.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to visit Iraq. [131803]

Mr. Rammell: The Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no plans to visit Iraq at present, but will keep the situation under review.

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his policy on the role of the United Nations in Iraq. [132237]

Mr. Rammell: UNSCR 1483 unanimously adopted on 22 May welcomes the appointment of the UN Special Representative on Iraq and resolves that the United Nations should play a vital role in humanitarian relief, the reconstruction of Iraq and the restoration and establishment of national and local institutions for representative governance.

The Government would support an increased UN role and the Security Council is currently considering a draft resolution which would encourage further participation by the UN and the international community including in the political processes leading to the formation of a representative government.

Conflict Prevention

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many copies have been printed of the booklet entitled, "A joint UK Government approach to reducing conflict"; and what the costs were of its production and printing. [131870]

Mr. Rammell: 10,000 copies of this booklet on the Global Conflict Prevention Pool (GCPP) have been printed. Each booklet cost approximately £2.45 to produce (production and printing).

It is important to publicise the Global Pool, particularly to NGOs, international organisations and others who might act as project deliverers, or with whom we might be able to join forces in this important field. Copies have been sent to all UK Embassies and High Commissions overseas for this purpose. Members of the public have also shown an interest in conflict prevention issues, and HMG has a duty to inform the public on how we are using public funds to improve UK efforts on conflict prevention.

The booklet has been well received since its launch on 9 September, and the Conflict Prevention Unit has received significant new interest in the GCPP since this time.

A copy of the booklet has been placed on the FCO website (www.fco.gov.uk) accessible under Global Issues-International Organisations-UN-Conflict Prevention, which should help minimise the requirement for hard copies.

Bribery

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library the guidance issued by his Department to the diplomatic posts with regard to what action they should take if they suspect bribery by a UK company to be taking place, or receive an allegation that such bribery is taking place; and what measures they should take to prevent bribery by UK companies. [132368]

Mr. MacShane: The FCO issued internal guidance on this issue to all posts shortly before the Anti-Terrorism Crime and Security Act (ATCSA) came into force and this has been regularly refreshed. The guidance includes advice to posts about their responsibilities under the Act and instructions on how to report bribery allegations. Posts have also been asked to circulate the guidance to representatives of other government departments within their region.

Guidance on reporting bribery allegations is included in training courses for all Commercial Officers going on overseas postings. The FCO has also provided speakers to reinforce the message at seminars for British businesses in the UK and overseas. An information leaflet produced in conjunction with the Home Office and the Department of Trade and Industry is distributed at these events. Copies of this leaflet will be deposited in the Library of the House.

This specific guidance following the passage of the ATCSA complements that provided to all Crown Servants in the "Giving Evidence or Information about Suspected Crimes—A Guide for Crown Servants". This report was placed in the Library of the House on 20 March 1997 under reference dep/3/4876. It can also be accessed at website http://www.cabinet-office.gov.uk/../../central/2001/crownser.pdf

Departmental Budget

Tony Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of his Department's budget for the current financial year is spent on (a) information technology systems, (b) its estate and (c) staff salaries and allowances; and what the percentage was in 2000–01. [131093]

Mr. Rammell: During the year 2000–01, the FCO spent the following proportion of its budget on information technology systems, the estate and staff salaries and allowances:

	Percentage
IT systems	2.9
Estate (capital)	7.0
Staff salaries and allowances	31.0

Including costs for locally engaged staff in overseas posts

For 2003–04, the FCO has allocated the following proportions of its budget to the same areas of expenditure:

	Percentage
IT Systems	2.2
Staff salaries and allowances	24.0

The figures for estate comprise capital spending only. Responsibility for non-capital maintenance spending on the overseas estate is devolved to posts. Details of the proportion of post budgets allocated to estate maintenance are not held centrally. Gathering this information from all 230 posts could only be done with considerable effort. Total expenditure can only be determined once the financial year is over and post budget information is consolidated with other FCO expenditure.

Guinea-Bissau

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of the coup in Guinea-Bissau on 14 September; what recent discussions representatives of the UK have had with representatives of (a) the former regime and (b) the new regime; and if he will make a statement. [131532]

Mr. Mullin: We condemn any assumption of power by unconstitutional means, and support a swift return to constitutional rule in Guinea-Bissau. We welcomed the quick and peaceful handover of power to the Transitional Council, and the positive role played by the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) in this process. There are plans to hold legislative elections by March 2004, and presidential elections by the following year. It will be important to address Guinea-Bissau's deep economic and social problems as part of wider effort to restore stability.

We have held discussions with EU and UN partners, the UNSG's Special Representative and ECOWAS about the coup. We have had no recent discussions with representatives of either the old or new regimes in Guinea-Bissau.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions (a) he and (b) members of his Department have had with representatives of (i) the Government of Portugal, (ii) the Governments of other EU member states, (iii) the US Government, (iv) the Government of South Africa, (v) the United Nations and (vi) the Organisation of West African States since 14 September concerning developments in Guinea-Bissau. [131533]

Mr. Mullin: Following the 14 September coup in Guinea Bissau, officials held discussions with the Portuguese, with other EU partners, and with Security Council partners and other United Nations officials. We supported the statements issued by the UN Security Council on 15 September and by the EU on 18 September. Neither my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary nor officials have held separate talks on Guinea Bissau with the US Government or with the South African Government. Officials have been briefed on developments by the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS).

Immigration and Asylum

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent consultation he has had with the new EU states about immigration and asylum. [132238]

Mr. MacShane: My right hon. Friends the Foreign Secretary and the Home Secretary (who has lead responsibility for asylum and immigration matters), and other Government Ministers have regular discussions with their counterparts in the new member states on issues of asylum and immigration. These discussions take place within formal bilaterals as well as in the margins of other meetings.

Sri Lanka

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many UK citizens are residing in Sri Lanka. [131834]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There are currently 856 British Citizens and their families registered with the British High Commission in Colombo as resident in Sri Lanka.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans were implemented by his Department since 1997 to resolve the conflict in Sri Lanka through negotiations between the Government of Sri Lanka and the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam; and if he will make a statement. [131889]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We support the Sri Lankan peace process both politically and practically, and welcome the remarkable progress that has been made since February 2002 when the current ceasefire came into effect.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office, DFID and MOD work together to promote peace under a "Peace Building and Reconciliation Strategy", which aims to strengthen the incentives for peace and reconciliation through an integrated programme of activities by all three departments. Funding for this strategy is in part provided from the Global Conflict Prevention Pool (jointly administered by FCO/DFID/MOD).

While we do not have a formal role in the peace process, we are working with the Tokyo Donors' Conference co-chairs (Japan, Norway, EU and US) to implement the conference's recommendations. The peace process is first and foremost an internal affair for the Sri Lankan people to resolve. We hope that the LTTE will shortly be tabling proposals that will enable all parties to return to the negotiating table.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when representatives of his Department raised the conflict in Sri Lanka in (a) the EU Council of Ministers and (b) the United Nations since 1997; what the outcome of discussions was; and if he will make a statement. [131890]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: At the November 2002 meeting of the General Affairs and External Relations Council (GAERC—the foreign affairs sub-council of the EU Council), the Council reiterated its support for the Sri Lankan peace process and said that any EU engagement would be closely co-ordinated with other international efforts. In June, the EU co-chaired the Tokyo Conference on Reconstruction and Development in Sri Lanka.

Foreign and Commonwealth Officials meet regularly with the Heads of the UN agencies and their representatives. Most recently the Head of DFID Colombo met with the UN Acting Resident Co-ordinator on 6 October in Colombo.

UN Bodies (Membership)

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the countries that have in the past 30 years been voted out of (a) the United Nations Economic and Social Council's Human Rights Commission and (b) the UN Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions; and if he will make a statement. [131628]

Mr. Rammell: The membership of these UN bodies is decided on the basis of regular elections that are contested by member states. States serve for three years and must stand in elections if they wish to be re-appointed. There is no procedure to vote countries out.

Over the last 30 years, many member states have been unsuccessful in their bids for election or re-election to UN bodies. I would refer the hon. Member to a list of member states' tenures on the Commission on Human Rights and on the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions over the past 30 years copies of which will be deposited in the Library of the House.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Competitive Sports

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what proportion of schoolchildren undertake competitive sports. [132301]

Mr. Caborn: Data collected from School Sport Co-ordinator partnerships during the autumn term 2002 indicated that one pupil in five in their schools was involved in inter-school competitions and events and one pupil in two in intra-school competitions and events.

Lottery Funds

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make a statement on (a) the action she is taking to ensure the equitable allocation of good cause Lottery money and (b) the use of Lottery funds for sport-related activities. [131939]

Estelle Morris: The Government are keen to see all areas and groups receive a fair share of Lottery money. Reforms introduced under the 1998 National Lottery Act, the revised policy directions issued to distributors in the same year, and the introduction of targeted programmes such as the Fair Share initiative were designed to help ensure the equitable allocation of Lottery funding. The National Lottery Funding Decision Document, published in July of this year, contained further proposals to make it easier for communities to access funding.

Lottery investment in sport aims both to foster World Class achievers and promote physical activity at all levels. It does so by providing funds directly to elite athletes and to Sports Governing bodies, and also by giving funding for equipment, coaching and facilities infrastructure in communities across the UK.

HEALTH

Cancer Patients (Fertility Services)

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what services are available to newly diagnosed cancer patients of reproductive age to preserve their reproductive options, with particular reference to (a) advice and information, (b) sperm storage and (c) egg storage, in each cancer network in England and Wales; [126963]

(2) what fertility services are provided to patients of reproductive age suffering from fertility problems following treatment for cancer in each primary care trust; [126964]

(3) what funding arrangement he makes to provide fertility services for cancer patients; [126965]

(4) what plans he has to develop guidelines for newly diagnosed cancer patients of reproductive age to preserve their reproductive options. [126966]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Information on the provision of infertility services and treatments to national health service patients by primary care trusts (PCTs) is not held centrally. It is for PCTs, in partnership with strategic health authorities, to determine how best to use their funds to meet national and local priorities. The Government's overall approach is to devolve greater freedom to frontline staff and organisations to give them the freedom to innovate and improve care for patients, based on local needs and circumstances.

The National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) is expecting to issue clinical guidelines on NHS fertility treatment services in February 2004. NICE has also been asked to produce service guidance on cancers affecting children and adolescents. The scope of this guidance includes specialist follow-up for late effects of treatment including fertility. NICE is expected to consult on the first draft of this guidance in summer 2004. It is anticipated that this guidance will inform decisions about adults who may experience infertility through treatment for cancer.

Cervical Screening

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients in Hull and the East Riding in (a) 2002 and (b) 2003 have had smear tests; and for how long they waited. [132397]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Coverage of the target age group, aged 25–64, for cervical screening in the East Riding was 85.2 per cent. in 2001–02. Figures for 2002–03 have not yet been published.

Across the whole of the Northern and Yorkshire region, 48 per cent. of women received the results of their test within six weeks in 2001–02.

Non-smoking Areas

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of (a) public houses and (b) restaurants (i) are smoking free and (ii) have an area set aside for non-smokers. [132212]

Miss Melanie Johnson: This information is not held centrally.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Carer's Allowance

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people in Milton Keynes are in receipt of carer's allowance. [131427]

Maria Eagle: The numbers of people entitled to Carers Allowance in Milton Keynes are set out in the table. Figures have been given for all people with an entitlement to Carers Allowance and for people with Carers Allowance in payment. Those with entitlement only, are not in receipt of payment because of overlapping benefit rules.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on the reasons for (a) taking into consideration tax credit payments for absent parents and (b) not taking into consideration tax credit payments to the parents with care when assessing maintenance payments through the Child Support Agency. [131409]

Mr. Pond: The Government has sought, as far as possible, for the rules providing for the treatment of tax credits in child support to be consistent, simple to understand and to operate fairly for (a) non-resident parents (b) parents with care. The arrangements carried forward into the new child support scheme in relation to new tax credits continue the principles first introduced under Family Credit.

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will phase in assessments under the new Child Support Agency system for those who have closed cases with continuing payment obligations under the old system. [131425]

Mr. Pond: No. The phasing arrangements apply to cases which are converted directly from the old scheme to the new scheme. They do not apply to outstanding payments from cases which have previously been closed. Where a fresh application is made and there are such outstanding payments, the Child Support Agency is willing to discuss how the arrears are to be paid.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will estimate the (a) cost and (b) number of beneficiaries of increasing the upper age limit on claiming disability living allowance to (i) 70, (ii) 75 and (iii) 80 years; and what take-up assumptions are made in this calculation. [132377]

Maria Eagle: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Helen Clark) on 15 May 2003, Official Report, column 407–08W. The figures cannot reliably be broken down further by age groups because of the increased uncertainty of modelling entitlement from smaller sample sizes in the available survey data.

Motability Scheme

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what assessment he has made of the need for people disabled after their 65th birthday to benefit from the Motability scheme. [132374]

Maria Eagle: The Motability scheme helps severely disabled people who are physically unable, or virtually unable, to walk to obtain vehicles on favourable terms by using their payments of the Disability Living Allowance higher rate mobility component, or a War Pensioners Mobility Supplement paid by the Veterans Agency of the Ministry of Defence, to service a leasing or hire-purchase agreement.

The vast majority of people can expect to have some restrictions on their mobility as they get older and it is reasonable to expect them to make provision for this. However, disability is more financially disruptive, in terms of lost opportunity to earn and save, for people who have the very considerable disadvantage of being severely disabled relatively early in life. This is why the Disability Living Allowance mobility component is available only to severely disabled people who claim help with their disability-related extra costs before age 65.

The Government believe that these arrangements are fair and sensible and, in particular, that it is right to give the most help to those who are severely disabled early in life and who may face limited opportunities to work and save. We therefore have no plans to change the upper age limit for claims to Disability Living Allowance.

Specialised Vehicles Fund

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (a) how many grants and (b) how much grant was given to people aged (i) under 65 years and (ii) 65 years and over from the Specialised Disability Fund in the last 12 months; and what plans he has to enable people disabled after the age of 65 years to receive money under the fund. [132375]

Maria Eagle: There is no Specialised Disability Fund. However, the Department for Work and Pensions sponsors the Specialised Vehicles Funds and the Independent Living Funds.

The charity Motability administers the Specialised Vehicles Funds on behalf of the Department. The funds provide grants towards the cost of specially adapted vehicles for disabled people who are eligible to apply to the Motability Scheme. The information requested is in Table 1.

The two Independent Living Funds make cash payments directly to severely disabled people for the purchase of personal assistance or help with domestic duties to enable them to continue to live in the community. The Extension Fund is a closed fund. However, the 1993 Fund, which applies to all new claims made since April 1993, makes payments to people aged 65 or under at the date of claim. The information requested is in Table 2.

There are no plans to extend any of the funds beyond their current provision.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Affordable Housing

Ms Oona King: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what measures he is taking to ensure that affordable housing made available through planning gain is family-sized accommodation. [132086]

Keith Hill: Planning policies for affordable housing are set out in Planning Policy Guidance note 3, "Housing", and in Circular 6/98, "Planning and Affordable Housing". This sets out how local authorities should plan to meet the housing requirements of the whole community, including those in need of affordable housing and family-sized accommodation. These requirements can be met through several routes, including planning obligations.

On 17 July, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister published for consultation "Influencing the size, type and affordability of housing", which set out proposed changes to the current policies on planning for affordable housing. The aim of these updates is to improve the match between the housing planned and the needs of the community. The consultation period closes on 31 October.

Draw-down Funding

Jonathan Shaw: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when his Department will advise Medway Council about the arrangements for drawing down the funding which he announced on 30 July. [132205]

Keith Hill: Officials from the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister wrote to the Chief Executive of Medway Council, on 7 October setting out detailed arrangements on the next steps for implementing the programme of projects agreed in principle on 30 July.

English Partnerships

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what estimate he has made of the impact of English Partnerships decision to focus their resources on housing renewal pathfinder areas and large strategic projects on the regeneration of Luneside East, Lancaster; [131622]

(2) what estimate he has made of the impact on the Government's regeneration and anti-poverty strategies of English Partnership's decision to focus their resources on house renewal pathfinder areas and large strategic projects; [131623]

(3) what discussions he has had with English Partnerships about their decision to focus their resources on housing renewal pathfinder areas and large strategic projects. [131624]

Keith Hill: I understand that my Hon. Friend the Member for Lancaster and Wyre recently met the Chief Executive of English Partnerships, along with representatives of Lancaster City Council and the North West Development Agency, to discuss regeneration needs in both Lancaster and Morecambe. English Partnerships is committed to helping the Council secure the regeneration of the most deprived parts of the City. At the Luneside site, the public sector partners will now be working together to draw up revised plans encompassing the acquisition and remediation of the site, and considering at the same time how private sector developers can be drawn into the equation, so that the development strategy can take their aspirations into account. In addition, EP has agreed to fund an initial study focussed on the needs of the West End of Morecambe. It would also be prepared in principle to work with the City Council in supporting a local management team whose aim would be to renew the area through the demolition or upgrading of derelict and vacant housing.

Neighbourhood Renewal Fund

Vera Baird: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what criteria were used to allocate the recent Neighbourhood Renewal Fund monies to local authorities with high levels of deprivation. [131221]

Yvette Cooper: The residual Neighbourhood Renewal Fund (NRF) resources of £175 million will be allocated to 26 of the existing 88 local authority areas currently receiving NRF resources. These 26 areas have been selected because they are ranked in the lowest 10 areas against two or more indicators that act as a proxy for the achievement of key national floor targets, i.e. they have the furthest distance to travel in order to meet these floor targets. The eligible areas are listed as follows with their allocations for 2004–05 and 2005–06.

Vera Baird: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister by what criteria the Borough of Redcar and Cleveland was excluded from the new allocation of monies from the Neighbourhood Renewal Fund. [131222]

Yvette Cooper: The Borough of Redcar and Cleveland is not among those 26 of the existing 88 Neighbourhood Renewal Fund (NRF) areas that will receive allocations from the residual NRF resources of £175 million for 2004–05 and 2005–06. This is because Redcar and Cleveland is not ranked in the lowest 10 areas against two or more indicators that act as a proxy for the achievement of key national floor targets, i.e. the Borough is not one of the 26 areas that have the furthest distance to travel to meet these floor targets and tackle multiple deprivation.

Vera Baird: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when there will next be an allocation of funds from the Neighbourhood Renewal Fund to local authorities with high levels of deprivation. [131223]

Yvette Cooper: The £175 million of residual Neighbourhood Renewal Fund (NRF) resources announced on 16 September 2003 is the final part of the £975 million provided for by Spending Review 2002 (SR2002) for 2004–05 and 2005–06.

The provision of any new funding will be a matter for consideration as part of Spending Review 2004 (SR2004).

Regeneration (Liverpool)

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much funding was allocated for regeneration in Liverpool in each of the last six years; and how much funding he expects will be allocated in the 2003–04 financial year. [131295]

Yvette Cooper: Liverpool has received funding allocations from the following regeneration programmes (all sums rounded to £000).

Note:
European Regional Development Fund, the funding allocation is calculated by calendar year, figures for 2003–04 are not available.

Liverpool has also benefited during this period from City Challenge as well as the Estate Action and Merseyside Development Corporation programmes. It has not been possible to obtain information for these programmes in the available time.

Social Housing

Mr. Best: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what steps the Government is taking to assist in increasing the provision of social housing in Leeds North West. [132232]

Keith Hill: The Sustainable Communities plan, published earlier this year, set out our plans for increasing investment in housing up to 2005–06. It also identified the actions that we will take to improve the availability and quality of social housing, including the establishment of Regional Housing Boards with responsibility for the production of Regional Housing Strategies and to advise Ministers on the allocation of resources to meet regional priorities.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is currently considering the Regional Housing Strategy for Yorkshire and the Humber, and its accompanying Investment Framework, and hope to make an announcement later this month. The provision of sufficient new homes, creating mixed income and sustainable communities is one of its objectives. This is reflected in the Investment Framework, which in addition to meeting Housing Corporation commitments and pre-allocations, proposes commissioning a £51 million two-year programme from the Housing Corporation, in which one of the priorities is affordable housing in the 'Golden Triangle' of Leeds, Harrogate and York. There is also a further £10 million for the board to commission 'transformational proposals' relating to all the strategy priorities in 2005–06 from sub-regional partnerships.

Teacher Salaries

Mr. Michael Foster: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he last assessed the level of teacher salaries paid by local authorities; and if he will make a statement. [131369]

Mr. Miliband: I have been asked to reply.

The salaries of school teachers, including those of unattached teachers, are set in the School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Document, following the recommendations of the independent School Teachers' Review Body (STRB). It is for LEAs to determine which provisions of the document should apply to unattached teachers. The STRB is currently considering a range of evidence on unattached teachers.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Small Businesses

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to reduce regulatory burdens on small businesses. [131298]

Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 14 October 2003]: The number of regulations passed by Parliament has fallen by nearly 800, we have cut form-filling and red tape for 700,000 small businesses with the new flat rate VAT scheme; we have abolished automatic penalties for late filing of VAT and we now have the best VAT threshold in Europe for business.

The recent OECD review of EU countries shows the UK has almost the lowest administration cost and few regulations for entrepreneurs than any other EU country.

We are seeking further improvements through Regulatory Impact Assessments, 'Think Small First' and Small Business Europe which promotes better regulation.

Alsthom

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations she has made to the (a) French authorities and (b) European Commission on French state aids in the case of Alsthom. [131968]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 14 October 2003]: None. The European Commission has announced that it is launching a formal investigation into France's proposals. The Commission will in due course provide member states arid third parties with an opportunity to comment. We will consider the position further when the Commission has published full details.

Coal-fired Power Stations

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry at what load factor each coal-fired power station operated in each year from 1997 to 2003. [132403]

Mr. Timms: Information for each power station is not readily available. In total coal fired power stations in the United Kingdom owned by major power producers together operated at the following load factors:

	Percentage
1999	43.8
2000	50.8
2001	55.9

Customs and Excise

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much money has been recovered by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise over the last six years for the costs associated with seizing and storing imported goods for inspection (a) from importers subsequently found to be legitimately importing genuine goods and (b) from businesses which are subsequently found to be importing counterfeit and illegal goods. [129387]

John Healey: I have been asked to reply. Customs have not recovered any money in either case. However, the relevant port authorities may levy such charges.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much debt owing to the UK has been written-off by the Export Credits Guarantee Department in the last five years; and if she will list the countries for which the written-off debt was due, and the amounts written off for each country. [130912]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: During the period from 1 April 1998 to 31 August 2003, ECGD has written off a total of £848 million debt. The amounts written off are broken down by financial year and by market in the following table.

Everything But Arms Agreement

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant to her answer of 25 September 2003, question ref 130694, what plans she has to make an assessment of the impact of the Everything But Arms agreement on the number of people who have lived or are predicted to live on $1 a day between 1990 and 2015 in sub-Saharan Africa. [132282]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Since the Everything But Arms (EBA) agreement came into effect in February 2001, there has been a rise in exports from countries in sub-Saharan Africa. This increase in export opportunities should help the growth of these countries and lead to a reduction in poverty. It is however, difficult to quantify the actual effect EBA will have on poverty, given the many factors that can influence changes in poverty levels.

Modern Languages

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant to her answer of 25 September 2003, question number 130710, what her plans are to commission specific research on the commercial effects of the decline in uptake of modern languages; and what representations she has received on this subject from United Kingdom businesses with foreign market interests. [132283]

Ms Hewitt: The DTI do not at present have any plans to commission specific research on the commercial effects of a decline in the uptake of modern languages; and we have received no formal representations from business on this matter. The DfES are working with a range of partners, including ourselves, the Sector Skills Development Agency and the Learning Skills Council to monitor this issue and to develop strategies to deal with it should it appear to become a significant problem.

TREASURY

Census 2001

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions the Office for National Statistics has had with (a) the local authority and (b) the Primary Care Trust in Milton Keynes on the reliability of the 2001 Census results for Milton Keynes. [132172]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Dr. Phyllis Starkey, dated 15 October 2003:

As National Statistician and Registrar General for England and Wales, I have been asked to reply to your recent question asking about what discussions the Office for National Statistics (ONS) has had with (a) the local authority and (b) the Primary Care Trust in Milton Keynes on the reliability of the 2001 Census results for Milton Keynes. (132172)

To date we have not had any face to face discussions with Milton Keynes Council or the Primary Care Trust concerning the results for Milton Keynes; but during the period 9 May to 16 September there has been extensive correspondence with these organisations. We have also corresponded with the Thames Valley Strategic Health Authority.

In our detailed responses we have covered all the points raised and we have also explained that a further analysis suggested by Milton Keynes local authority would be considered in the work that ONS is planning to take forward following the review report "A demographic statistics service for the 21st Century" published on 9 July.

ONS are willing to meet representatives from Milton Keynes Council and the Primary Care Trust to discuss their concerns and explain the One Number Census methodology to aid their understanding of how their Census estimates were derived.

Cigarettes

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of (a) the scale of tobacco smuggling into Britain and (b) the success of the law enforcement agencies in tackling it; what plans he has for further measures to tackle tobacco smuggling; and if he will make a statement. [132137]

John Healey: Estimates of the scale of tobacco smuggling into the UK, and details of the successful strategy being applied to combat it are contained in "Tackling Tobacco Smuggling" (March 2000), "Tackling Indirect Tax Fraud" (November 2001) and "Protecting Indirect Tax Fraud" (November 2002), copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Details of progress in 2002–03 will be reported around the time of the pre Budget Report.

Employment Statistics

David Davis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people were unemployed in Haltemprice and Howden in (a) the last month for which figures are available and (b) each of the preceding 12 months. [132327]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to David Davis, dated 15 October 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question regarding the number of people who were unemployed in Haltemprice and Howden in the last month for which figures are available and each of the preceding 12 months. (132327)

The Office for National Statistics (ONS) compiles statistics of unemployment from the Labour Force Survey (LFS) following the internationally standard International Labour Organisation definition. However the survey sample size is too small to provide estimates for the Haltemprice & Howden Parliamentary Constituency. ONS also compiles statistics of those claiming Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA) for Parliamentary Constituencies.

Attached is a table which gives the number of JSA claimants in the Haltemprice and Howden Parliamentary Constituency for the period August 2002 to August 2003. The data are not seasonally adjusted. Claimant count statistics for September 2003 will be released on the 15th October 2003.

Firearms

Mr. Gray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer of 14 July 2003, Official Report, column 133W, how many firearms were detected by HM customs officers in the possession of passengers disembarking from aircraft at Farnborough, Hampshire (a) in 1999, (b) in November 1999 and (c) on 30 November 1999. [132184]

John Healey: There were no attempts to smuggle firearms detected by Customs at Farnborough Airport in 1999. In the same year Customs controlled four importations of firearms which were properly declared. In respect of these I refer the hon. Gentleman to my earlier answer.

Inland Revenue Officers

Mr. Gray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the destination offices were of Inland Revenue officers posted from International Division, Business Tax Group, in the year ended 31 March 2001. [132185]

Dawn Primarolo: Between 1 April 2000 and 31 March 2001, 11 Inland Revenue employees were transferred from International Division to a variety of other business units, including other Head Office Divisions and local offices.

Investment Fund

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the implications of the Futurebuilders Investment Fund for voluntary organisations. [131355]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 14 October 2003]: The Futurebuilders Fund will provide resources for voluntary and community organisations and social enterprises in England, to increase the scale and scope of their delivery of public services. It will enable individual organisations to invest for the future, through modernising their operations and undertaking research and development. Most importantly, it will lead to improved services for users and show how that success can be replicated.

Ministerial Visits

David Davis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the (a) foreign and (b) UK visits made by the Chief Secretary to the Treasury since 1 April 2003; what the cost was to public funds of each trip; who he met; and what gifts were received. [126887]

Mr. Boateng: The Government publish the overall costs of all Ministerial overseas travel and a list of all visits overseas by Cabinet Ministers costing in excess of £500 on an annual basis. For the period up to 31 March 2003 I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the answer given by the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Warwick and Leamington on 16 July 2003, Official Report, column 327W. The next list, for the period 1 April 2003 to 31 March 2004, will be published at the end of the financial year.

In respect of gifts received, I refer the right hon. Member to the answer given by the Prime Minister on 17 July 2003, Official Report, column 445W.

In the UK: the Chief Secretary visited Oxford University in April at no cost; the Baptist Assembly, Cardiff in May at no cost; Social Services, Cambridge in May at no cost; Cambridge University in May at no cost; ICSB World Conference, Northern Ireland in June at a cost of £262.30; CPYU Ministerial Listening Tour, Bristol in June at a cost of £145.00; Festival of Science, Leicester in June at no cost; Sieff Conference, Windsor in September at no cost; Council Congress Dinner, Brighton in September at a cost of £21.10; and the Pensions and Savings Summit, Edinburgh in September at a cost of £318.90.

All ministerial travel is undertaken in accordance with the Ministerial Code and Travel by Ministers, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Motability Scheme

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many cars receive road tax exemption through the Motability scheme; how much this exemption costs; what the financial value is of this exemption; how many of the exempted cars are registered to people aged 65 years and over; what plans he has to extend the exemptions to adapted cars brought by people disabled after their 65th birthday; and if he will estimate the cost of extending the exemptions. [132373]

John Healey: This exemption cost the Exchequer an estimated £111 million in 2001–02.

At the end of September 2003 there were 371,000 agreements for Motability cars (either contract hire or hire purchase). 26 per cent. of these were in the 65+ age group.

The Chancellor keeps all taxation policy under review and any changes are announced in the context of his Budget statement after considering relevant economic, social and environmental factors.

Pricing and Dissemination Policies

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what assessment he has made of the extent to which the recommendations of the Cross-Cutting Review of the Knowledge Economy published in December 2000 have been implemented; and if he will make a statement; [132168]

(2) what steps he has taken to implement Recommendation 15 of the Cross-Cutting Review of the Knowledge Economy published in December 2000; and if he will make a statement; [132169]

(3) what representations he has received on the economics of information pricing within the public sector. [132170]

John Healey: Recommendations relating to the pricing and dissemination policies of Government Departments, agencies and trading funds have been implemented via the application of the following new policy guidance from HM Treasury to public bodies:

Selling into Wider Markets: A Policy Note for Public Bodies, December 2002; and Charging for Information: When and How—Guidance for Government Departments and other Crown bodies, July 2001.

Recommendations relating to the development of a new class licence for facilitating the re-use of Crown copyright material with the minimum of administration have been implemented and the Click-Use Licence was launched in April 2001. The Government consulted on an enhanced role for Her Majesty's Stationery Office as the regulatory authority for Government information, working closely with the private sector, and subsequently a new Information Fair Trader Scheme was launched last year. The first accreditation of a trading fund member of the Scheme was announced in May 2003.

The new Advisory Panel on Crown Copyright, a non-departmental public body, was established on 14 April 2003 by the Cabinet Office. Its role is:

to advise Ministers on how to encourage and create opportunities in the information industry for greater re-use of Government information; to advise the Controller of Her Majesty's Stationery Office about changes and opportunities in the information industry, so that the licensing of Crown copyright information is aligned with current and emerging developments; and to advise on the impact of the complaints procedures under the Information Fair Trader Scheme.

Botswana

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many applications for export credit guarantees were received by her Department in each year since 1997 with regard to Botswana; how many were successful; and if she will make a statement. [131626]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: ECGD has received the following inquiries relating to applications for export credit guarantees with regards to Botswana:

Year	Number of Inquiries
1997	2
1999	0
2000	4
2003	1

None of these have led to the issue of an ECGD guarantee.

Broadband

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much Government funding has been allocated for broadband rollout in each year since 2000, broken down by English region. [131845]

Mr. Timms: Government funding for broadband to each English region falls under three main areas:

(a) £30 million UK Broadband Fund:

£ million

Region	Total	2000–01	2001–02	2002–03	2003–04
East Midlands	2.090	—	0.315	0.800	0.975
Yorks and Humber	3.100	—	0.465	1.300	1.335
South East	2.900	—	0.025	1.975	0.900
West Midlands	2.082	—	0.312	0.910	0.860
East England	3.220	—	0.483	1.200	1.537
North East	1.460	—	0.220	0.615	0.625
South West	3.780	—	0.567	1.600	1.613
North West	2.679	—	0.210	0.299	2.170
London	0.113	—	0.019	0.045	0.049
Total	21.424	0	2.616	8.744	10.064

(b) RDA Single Pot funding

The latest available figures indicate that each RDA has allocated the following amounts to a range of broadband projects from their single pot budgets:

£ million

Region	Total	2000–01	2001–02	2002–03	2003–04	2004/05/06
East Midlands	0.560			0.200	0.360
Yorks and Humber	2.132		0.296	0.478	0.658	0.700
South East	6.300			1.300	5.000
West Midlands	21.149			1.145	8.252	11.752
East England	12.530			4.300	3.350	4.880
North East	48.165	2.000	2.780	3.385	40.000
South West	0.370				0.370
North West	142.777			1.777	141.000
London	1.700				1.700
Total	235.683	2.000	3.076	12.585	218.022

(c) Public Sector Aggregation

The Government intend to spend £1 billion on broadband connectivity for its own needs over the next three years. The Broadband Aggregation Project will set up nine Regional Aggregation Bodies (RABs), which will be publicly owned companies and which will aggregate and procure public sector demand for broadband. In so doing they will obtain better prices through bulk buying, and thus better value for money, and also encourage broadband service providers to invest in creating more broadband infrastructure which they can use to provide a service to the public. Figures on the breakdown by region of this funding are not available.

Coal-fired Power Stations

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions she has had with (a) the UK mined coal industry and (b) trades unions about the likely impact of the Large Combustion Plants Directive implementation options proposed in the current consultation. [132408]

Mr. Timms: This issue has been among the topics I have discussed in recent meetings with the Coal Authority and UK Coal Ltd. These and other bodies and organisations with an interest in UK coal mining have also responded formally to the Government's recent consultation paper on implementation. The Government will take a decision on the most appropriate approach after considering the responses to the consultation.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many allegations of corruption have been reported to the head of internal audit at ECGD; how many of these allegations have been passed on to NCIS; and whether these are in relation to contracts that have already received support from the ECGD, or to contracts on which the ECGD is being asked for support. [132372]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: ECGD has signed a Memorandum of Understanding with NCIS, relating to the Anti-Terrorism, Crime and Security Act 2001. This Act came into force in February 2002. Since that time the Head of Internal Audit and Assurance has dealt with five allegations of corruption, all of which have been referred to NCIS.

It would not be appropriate for me to provide any information in relation to the cases concerned as there is a risk that this may encourage speculation or allow the identification of individual cases, which may prejudice any possible action by the relevant investigatory agencies.

Independent Schools Price Fixing

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the investigation into price fixing of fees in independent schools. [132061]

Mr. Sutcliffe: No. This is a matter for the OFT.

Post Office Card Account

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the take-up of the Post Office card account in (a) Suffolk, (b) Norfolk and (c) Essex; and what the UK national average take-up is. [131840]

Mr. Timms: None. However, the Department for Work and Pensions regularly place data on Direct Payment of benefits and pensions in the Libraries of the House. This includes figures on how many people have said they want to open a Post Office card account.

I understand from the Department for Work and Pensions that as of 3 October 2003, 1.25 million customers had requested a Post Office card account. I understand from the Post Office that some 787,000 Post Office card accounts had been opened by that same date.

Information is not available in the format requested.

Royal Mail

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when she last met the Chairman of the Royal Mail. [131720]

Mr. Timms: As shareholder of Royal Mail Holdings plc, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry meets the chairman several times a year. Her last meeting with Allan Leighton was on 4 September 2003.

Store Cards

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the effects of the interest rates charged by store cards on consumers. [131357]

Mr. Sutcliffe [holding answer 14 October 2003]: The Department has had no specific discussions regarding the interest rates levied on, or the terms and conditions associated with, store cards.

However, the DTI is reaching the conclusion of its review of the Consumer Credit Act 1974. Government proposals in this area will be set out in a White Paper planned for publication in the autumn. This will address issues such as the transparency of credit products including how they are sold to consumers, advertising and the form and content of credit agreements.

Through discussions and focus groups, we have been particularly careful to involve key stakeholders from consumer groups, business and enforcement agencies at all stages of the review.

In terms of consumer protection, the objective is to increase transparency and understanding throughout the UK credit market, empowering consumers to make informed financial decisions.

You may also be aware that the Department of Trade and Industry recently appeared to give evidence at a Treasury Committee inquiry into the transparency of credit charges.

Timeshares

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps the Government is taking to protect timeshare owners where their facilities provider was transferred from one company to another following a change in their management contract. [132321]

Mr. Sutcliffe: There are currently no plans to amend domestic or European timeshare legislation to cover timeshare facility providers transferring clients from one company to another.

The Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations can provide protection for timeshare owners but it depends on the circumstances of the case.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Abandoned Cars

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many abandoned cars each local authority in England and Wales stated they had removed in their submissions to the most recent municipal waste survey. [131286]

Mr. Morley: The question on how many abandoned vehicles removed by local authorities in England and Wales was most recently asked in the 2001–02 Municipal Waste Management Surveys for England and Wales. Data recorded by district show that 320 local authorities out of a total of 376, responded to the abandoned vehicles question. The authorities and the numbers of abandoned vehicles removed and destroyed reported are listed as follows:

Animal Welfare (Greyhounds)

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will include provisions to increase protection for greyhounds within the greyhound racing industry in the Animal Welfare Bill. [132231]

Mr. Bradshaw: Yes. Defra officials are discussing possible measures to improve welfare with the racing industry and welfare organisations.

Biodiversity

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs who will represent the Department at the 7 Meeting of the Conference of the Parties to the Convention on Biological Diversity in Kuala Lumpur, in February 2004. [131978]

Mr. Morley: The composition of the delegation has yet to be decided. It will be determined in the light of the agenda. I am planning to attend the High Level Segment from 18 to 19 February 2004.

Climate Change

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much carbon dioxide was produced per person in the UK in 2002. [131063]

Mr. Morley: The average production of carbon dioxide per person in the UK, due to activities such as electricity generation and use, travel and industrial production, is estimated to have been almost 10 tonnes in 2001, the year for which latest published data on greenhouse gas emissions is available.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps she is taking to reduce the emissions of carbon dioxide from industry into the atmosphere. [131079]

Mr. Morley: Reductions in emissions of carbon dioxide from industry are being achieved through the Climate Change Levy, Climate Change Agreements the UK and EU Emissions Trading Schemes and the Integrated Pollution Prevention and Control (IPPC) regime.

The Climate Change Levy applies to energy used in the non-domestic sector. Revenues are recycled to levy payers via a 0.3 percentage point cut in employers' National Insurance Contributions, and receipts from the levy, administered by the Carbon Trust, provides additional support for energy saving measures.

Climate Change Agreements enable energy intensive business sectors to receive an 80 per cent. discount on the climate change levy in return for agreeing to meet challenging targets for improving energy efficiency or reducing greenhouse gas emissions. 44 sectors have signed agreements with the Government, including major energy intensive sectors like steel, chemicals, paper and non-ferrous metals.

The UK Emissions Trading Scheme (ETS) enables target holders in this voluntary participation scheme to meet their emissions reductions targets through their own efforts, by buying surplus emissions allowances from those who have found it cheaper to reduce emissions, or if they over achieve, by selling their surplus allowances. 32 organisations are committed to delivering reductions of 1.1 MtC by the final (fifth) year of the scheme. Climate Change Agreement holders are also able to use the UK ETS to achieve their targets.

An EU Emissions Trading Scheme is due to start in January 2005 and will be mandatory for certain industrial sectors.

The Integrated Pollution Prevention and Control (IPPC) regime introduced by a 1996 EC Directive, and which is being phased-in through regulations produced under the Pollution Prevention and Control Act 1999, applies an integrated environmental approach to the regulation of certain industrial activities. In determining the conditions of an IPPC permit the designated regulator must take energy efficiency into account, which in turn contributes to reducing carbon dioxide emissions.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the research being undertaken on the effects of carbon dioxide on environmental sustainability. [131090]

Mr. Morley: Carbon dioxide emissions threaten environmental sustainability since they are the main cause of climate change. Defra funds a significant programme of research on climate change worth approx. £12.7 million in 2002–03. This figure includes £8.4 million for the Climate Prediction Programme at the internationally leading Hadley Centre, which underpins the UK's research on assessment of the potential impacts of climate change on the UK, partly through the provision of a consistent set of climate change scenarios published in April 2002.

Research on the effects of climate change is also commissioned by the Department, other Government Departments and the Research Councils. Defra provides a focus for such research in the UK through the ground-breaking UK Climate Impacts Programme, which provides a link between researchers and stakeholders in industry and the public sector to enable them to assess the risks to their activities from climate change and to develop adaptation strategies to minimize such risks.

Defra also funds research on the global effects of climate change and is developing a programme to assess the effects of different levels of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere. This will help us to contribute to the debate on identifying levels which avoids dangerous anthropogenic change and thereby contribute to environmental sustainability.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the Government's plans to tackle climate change. [131066]

Mr. Morley: Tackling climate change is a high priority for the Government which will continue to show international leadership by taking effective action to reduce emissions of greenhouse gases.

Policies outlined in the UK Climate Change Programme (CCP) will ensure that the Government are on course to meet its Kyoto commitment to reduce greenhouse gas emissions by 12.5 per cent. below base year levels by 2008–12 and move towards the domestic goal of reducing carbon dioxide emissions by 20 per cent. below 1990 levels by 2010. The Government are committed to monitoring the effectiveness of the policies and measures in the CCP and will be reviewing it formally in 2004. In addition, as announced in the Energy White Paper, the UK is putting itself on a path to cut its carbon dioxide emissions by some 60 per cent. by 2050, with real progress by 2020.

The UK works closely with international partners to ensure that effective efforts to combat climate change are taken by all Parties to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change and that the Kyoto Protocol enters into force as soon as possible.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the average temperature in England was in (a) August 1993 and (b) August 2003. [131067]

Mr. Morley: Observations analysed by the Met Office show that the average Central England temperature was 14.6°C in August 1993, and 18.0°C in August 2003. The average Central England temperature in August during the period 1971–2000 was 16.2°C and over that period the average trend in August temperatures has been a rise of about 0.3°C per decade.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs by how much she aims to cut greenhouse gas emission by 2010. [131091]

Mr. Morley: The UK's commitment under the Kyoto Protocol is to reduce emissions of a basket of six greenhouse gases by 12.5 per cent. below base year levels by 2008–12. Base year levels are 1990 for carbon dioxide, methane and nitrous oxide, and 1995 for the F-gases (hydrofluorocarbons, perflorocarbons and sulphur hexafluoride).

The UK has also set itself a domestic goal to reduce carbon dioxide emissions by 20 per cent. below 1990 levels by 2010.

Data for emissions of the basket of six greenhouse gases for 2001, submitted to the United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC) in April 2003, show that emissions fell by 12.3 per cent. between the base year and 2001. Provisional data for 2002 shows that emissions fell by around 14 to 15 per cent. between the base year and 2002.

Flooding

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the number of homes damaged by flooding between January and June; what measures are in place to prevent flooding; and if she will make a statement on her objectives for flood defence. [131061]

Mr. Morley: I understand that 1,209 properties have been flooded in the period between January and June 2003 based on Environment Agency figures. In the most serious flooding incident in the Thames Valley over the new year, it is estimated that some 400 properties were protected from flooding and disruption to a further 1,000 properties was prevented by the Jubilee River flood alleviation scheme. In other areas of the country, flood defences have of course also reduced flooding.

The Department's policy is to reduce risks to people, property and the environment from flooding and coastal erosion through the provision of defences, flood forecasting and warning systems, increased flood resilience of property, beneficial land management changes and discouragement of further development on the floodplain. The Government invests significant sums of money each year to reduce risk and this investment profile is rising steeply with plans to spend approximately £1.5 billion between 2003–04 and 2005–06.

Defra has agreed Service Delivery Agreement (SDA) targets with Treasury to implement the outcome of the Funding Review and reduce risk to houses, infrastructure and environmental assets from the Department's capital programme over the spending review 2002 period. Delivery plans for these targets are available from the Defra website: http://www.defra.gov.uk/environ/fcd/policy/aim.htm. We are also developing a new Strategy for Flood Management and Coastal Protection which will be a cross-Government update to our 1993 Strategy. A Stakeholder Forum is being established, partly to inform this Strategy work.

Defra's flood management programme includes High Level Targets for operating authorities, encouragement of Shoreline Management Plans and Coastal Groups, a joint research and development programme with the Environment Agency and funding of the Agency's flood plain maps, Catchment Flood Management Plans, Public Awareness Campaigns and the National Flood and Coastal Defence Database and associated risk assessment methodology.

GM Crops

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the locations of current GM crop trials in Shropshire. [132303]

Mr. Morley: There are currently no GM crop trials in the UK.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Totnes concerning genetically-modified food dated 3 July 2003, Defra ref: 183640. [131544]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 14 October 2003]: My officials wrote to the hon. Member on 18 July 2003, stating that the letter had been transferred to Food Standards Agency (FSA) for reply.

The FSA report to Parliament through Health Ministers, and I understand that my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary for Public Health (Miss Melanie Johnson) wrote to the hon. Member on 21 September 2003.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the future of GM-free zones; and what plans she has to allow GM crops to be planted alongside conventional crops. [132116]

Mr. Morley: We will consider the terms on which GM and non-GM crops might co-exist when we have received a report on this subject from the Agriculture and Environment Biotechnology Commission. This is due shortly. We are also considering our broader policy on GM crops in the light of all the available information, including the report of the GM public debate. It is not clear how compulsory GM-free zones would be consistent with European Union law. However, the European Commission has suggested that voluntary GM-free areas might be acceptable in circumstances where, for practical reasons, it is very difficult to achieve satisfactory co-existence arrangements.

Bear Products

Mr. Challen: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the restrictions on importation and sale of products derived from farmed bears. [131418]

Mr. Morley: Under animal health controls the importation into England of products derived from bears is only permitted on the basis of a valid import licence issued by Defra. Each application for a licence is assessed on its own merits and in deciding whether or not a licence should be issued consideration is given to any animal health risk the product may present. In addition, the international trade in all bear species and their parts and derivatives is regulated by the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species (CITES). The Government implements strict policies on trade to conserve endangered species and maintains a precautionary approach banning all commercial trade in bear bile or gall bladders irrespective of whether or not they come from captive bred specimens, on the grounds that this trade is likely to be detrimental to the species. International trade in other products derived from farmed bears listed in the Appendices to CITES is subject to regulation to ensure that it stays below the level at which species might become endangered.

International Whaling Commission

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent assessment she has made of the effectiveness of the International Whaling Commission; and if she will make a statement. [131941]

Mr. Bradshaw: The IWC has to operate within the terms of its parent treaty (the International Convention on the Regulation of Whaling), which dates from 1946. Within the very real constraints of that treaty (which aims to facilitate the orderly development of the whaling industry and which also provides for unregulated whaling under "Special Permit" for scientific purposes), the IWC has done well to introduce and maintain, for almost 20 years, a moratorium on commercial whaling, to which all members, except Norway, subscribe. Changes to the terms of the parent treaty require the unanimous agreement of all; there is thus no prospect of securing desirable change while keeping pro-whaling countries within the ambit of the treaty.

Junk Mail

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate she has made of the proportion of junk mail which can be recycled; what estimate she has made of the proportion of paper waste represented by junk mail in the last year for which figures are available; and what steps the Government are taking to reduce the volume of junk mail. [131104]

Mr. Morley: Between 500,000 and 600,000 tonnes of paper was used in direct mail and promotions in the UK in 2002. In terms of total tonnage, this is a relatively small proportion of the overall paper waste stream. For example, the paper packaging waste flowing into the waste stream in 2002 was 3.7 million tonnes. However, junk mail is largely disposed of in the household waste and it should be possible to collect much of this paper for recycling.

The current level of recycling of junk mail is estimated to be some 13 per cent. We have, therefore, recently agreed a voluntary producer responsibility scheme with the industry to increase recycling of junk mail. Under this Agreement, the Direct Marketing Association (DMA) has undertaken to meet specific targets for the recycling of junk mail in the UK. The targets are:

30 per cent. by the end of 2005;

55 per cent. by the end of 2009; and

70 per cent. by the end of 2013.

The Agreement also requires the DMA and its members to continue to contribute to waste minimization by improving the targeting of distribution of direct mail and by making full use of, and publicizing, available services that allow householders to opt out of being sent direct mail, such as the Mailing Preference Service.

We believe that this Agreement will both increase the recycling of junk mail and reduce the amount of direct mail sent to homes.

Living Places Consultation

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she intends to publish proposals for action arising from the "Living Places" consultation document and responses. [131535]

Mr. Morley: We are at present considering the various legislative options available. However, we will make an announcement regarding our plans at the earliest opportunity.

Pollution

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether she plans to increase penalties for environmental pollution to create a greater incentive for companies to improve environmental performance. [129032]

Mr. Morley: There are currently stiff penalties available under the Environmental Protection Act 1990. These offences on summary conviction can carry the statutory maximum, and on conviction on indictment, a prison sentence of up to two years or a fine or both. Defra is currently considering whether to introduce a sliding scale of penalties under section 33 to reflect the seriousness of fly-tipping offences. If magistrates do not consider their maximum fine to be high enough, a case can be referred to the Crown Court, who have unlimited powers. Penalties for environmental pollution can therefore be awarded to any level under the current system.

Several steps have been taken with regard to sentencing and penalties. At the end of 2002, the Magistrates Association, in association with Defra, issued a guidance pack entitled "Costing the Earth" to all its members, highlighting the seriousness and costs of environmental crime.

Defra also increased the amount for fixed penalty notices for litter and dog fouling offences to £50 on 1 April 2002, and through the Anti-social Behaviour Bill, proposes similar fixed penalty notices for minor offences of graffiti and fly-posting. We are also considering a possible role for the use of fixed penalty notices to help enforce duty of care legislation.

Defra is also funding research looking at sentencing in environmental cases. This research should provide a robust basis with which to inform future discussion and policy-making.

Quarries

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the implications of the new licensing arrangements on long-term investment and job security at quarries in the Vale of York. [132269]

Mr. Morley: There has not been a specific assessment on the new licensing arrangements on long-term investment and job security at quarries in the Vale of York.

The Environment Agency has a duty to consider social and economic, as well as environmental aspects of sustainable development in its licensing policies. As part of the Environment Agency's assessment of any new licence application, it will take into account any relevant considerations. Quarry and mine operators will have the same opportunities as other abstractors to submit a business case to the Environment Agency in support of their licence applications, which can address any social or economic issues including long-term investment needs and effects on employment.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will take steps to allow (a) a quarrying abstraction licence to be tied to the life of the planning permission for a quarry and (b) a right of appeal and compensation where a licence is refused or curtailed. [131977]

Mr. Morley: It is not appropriate for the length of abstraction licences to be tied to the life of planning permissions, as consideration of each address very different issues. The Environment Agency will determine the length of an abstraction licence on a case-by-case basis, using guidance that it has developed and taking into account relevant considerations.

If a licence application is refused or curtailed, there is a right of appeal to the Secretary of State under the Water Resources Act 1991.

If a licence is varied or revoked during its term, there are provisions under the Water Resources Act 1991 to pay compensation for any loss or damage.

In addition, the Water Bill provides that there can be compensation for loss or damage where a licence cannot be granted to any previously exempt abstraction, such as quarry dewatering, when it becomes subject to licensing.

Ragwort

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement about the spread of American ragwort; what measures are being employed to check the spread; what incidents of damage to livestock have been reported to her Department in the past 12 months; and what research has been conducted into the possible passage of ragwort toxins into the food chain. [131871]

Alun Michael: We have not been able to find a reference to American Ragwort in the literature, and without the Latin name, cannot identify the plant species concerned. Research on possible human exposure to ragwort toxins through the contamination of milk and honey was conducted by the then Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in the 1990s. Further, in 1994 the MAFF Working Party on Naturally Occurring Toxicants in Food considered the evidence for human exposure to ragwort toxins through contamination of food and concluded that exposure via these routes is unlikely to pose a risk to health.

Recycling

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to increase the number of kerbside collection recycling schemes. [131082]

Mr. Morley: The Government has set statutory targets for local authorities to increase the recycling and composting of waste. Some local authorities have chosen to introduce doorstep collection of recyclates to help meet those targets. In 2001–02 58 per cent. of households in England were served doorstep collection schemes. This had increased from 51 per cent. in 2000–01.

The Government is also supporting the Household Waste Recycling Bill introduced by my hon. Friend, the member for Lewisham. The Bill provides, with some exceptions, that all local authorities in England must offer doorstep collection of at least two recyclates by 2010.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much household waste was recycled in 2002; and whether the Government are on track to achieve their 2005 target of recycling 25 per cent.of household waste. [131084]

Mr. Morley: The Defra Municipal Waste Management Survey records that in 2001–2, England achieved a household waste recycling rate of 12.4 per cent., in line with average annual increases of 1 per cent. This makes targets for 2003–04 and 2005–06 look challenging. However, there is evidence that measures the Government is taking are having an impact, with Local Authority projections suggesting the 2003–04 target of 17 per cent. will be met. We plan to continue this momentum towards 2005–06.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the incentives given to the UK population to recycle household waste. [131085]

Mr. Morley: The Government and Devolved Administrations fund waste awareness and education programmes to inform the population about the environmental benefits of recycling. There are no financial incentives for the population to recycle household waste.

In its response to the Strategy Unit Report 'Waste Not, Want Not' recommendation that local authorities in England should be able to take forward incentive schemes to reduce waste and increase recycling if they wish to do so, Government undertook to work with stakeholders to consider the practicalities of operating such schemes and how the potential disadvantages might be overcome.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the sources of household waste included in local authority recycling schemes. [131086]

Mr. Morley: The Municipal Waste Management Survey for 2001–02 showed the following tonnages of materials collected for recycling and composting from household sources by local authorities:

Material	Thousand tonnes	Percentage
Paper and card	959	31
Glass	428	14
Compost[1]	940	30
Scrap matal/white goods	370	12
Textiles	42	1
Cans	26	1
Plastics	8	0
Co-mingled	217	7
Other (including oils, batteries etc.)	150	5

[1] Includes organic materials (kitchen and garden waste); not home composting

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs for what reasons home-composted garden waste is not included in the Government's recycling targets. [131087]

Mr. Morley: Home-composted garden waste is not included in the local authority Best Value Performance Indicators due to the difficulty in accurately measuring the amount of waste that is composted by householders. However, the use of home composting is a key tool in reducing the amount of waste that local authorities collect and so is reflected indirectly in the Performance Indicators.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the effects of changes in the type of ink used by newspaper producers on the recycling of newspapers; and if she will make a statement. [131105]

Mr. Morley: About 10 per cent. of the UK's newsprint is printed using flexographic presses which, at this level, is not sufficient to compromise the quality of recycled pulp produced for newsprint manufacture. We are aware that with current reprocessing technologies, a significant increase in these printing processes would have the potential to compromise the quality of recycled paper, and we have held discussions with the industry on this issue.

The Waste and Resources Action Programme will be taking forward work to assess the technical issues associated with the de-inking of flexographic inks.

Sewerage

Paddy Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the (a) individuals and (b) organisations who responded to the consultation paper, "Review of Existing Private Sewers and Drains in England and Wales"; and if she will place a summary of the responses in the Library. [131214]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 14 October 2003]: The consultation period of the paper, published on 1 July, extends until 26 September. We will place responses from organisations or individuals, that are not marked confidential, in the Library and a summary of responses when ready.

Timber Procurement

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on how the Government's (a) sustainable development, (b) fair trade and (c) environmental objectives are being pursued in timber procurement. [131569]

Mr. Morley: The Government's timber procurement policy is actively to seek to buy timber and timber products from sustainable and legal sources. This policy encapsulates environmental and social objectives that are relevant to sustainable forest management.

Fair trade as a concept is not specifically addressed by this policy. There is no Government-wide approach to the procurement of Fairtrade products. Each Government Department is responsible for making its own decisions on such products, against the background of the Government's value for money policy, the EC procurement rules and the Department's objectives. However, the Government are committed to supporting ethical trading wherever possible and provide significant support to the Fairtrade Foundation's efforts in promoting the supply and marketing of Fairtrade products.

Central Government Departments and their agencies have been provided with a model contract clause that sets out the Government's specific requirements for legal and sustainable timber. This includes a demand for independent verification of the claims made by suppliers for the source of the timber acquired. For existing contracts Departments are discussing the policy with their contractors to raise awareness and identify opportunities for obtaining timber from assured sources wherever feasible and mutually acceptable.

Central Departments are required to report annually on their timber purchases and a summary is published in the annual report Sustainable Development in Government—http://www.sustainable-development.gov.uk/sdig/reports.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the guidance given to government officials on legal and sustainable timber procurement and on the regulatory framework. [131631]

Mr. Morley: Guidance on timber procurement and on the regulatory framework is available on the Government's website for sustainable development in Government—http://www.sustainable-development.gov.uk/sdig/improving/contextf.htm

Central Government departments and their agencies have been provided with a model contract clause that sets out the Government's specific requirements for legal and sustainable timber. The text of this clause and covering information note issued by the Office of Government Commerce in December 2002 is annexed to this reply.

The Government intends to create a central point of expertise on timber procurement (CPET) to help public sector buyers specify their requirements with more clarity and assess the credibility of supplier's claims for the sources of their timber. The CPET is planned to begin its work later this year.

Waste Management

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what her policy is on alternatives to landfill and incineration for waste disposal. [131614]

Mr. Morley: Government's policy for waste is set out in Waste Strategy 2000[1]. This is underpinned by the waste hierarchy which sets out the order in which options for waste management should be considered, based on their presumed environmental impact. This prioritises waste minimisation in the first instance, followed by re-use, followed by recycling, composting and energy from waste. Disposal by incineration and landfill are at the bottom of the hierarchy. These should only be used when all of the other options have been considered.

The Strategy, together with Government's response to the Strategy Unit report, "Waste Not Want Not", which reviewed progress in its implementation, have led to the introduction of a wide range of measures to move waste management up the waste hierarchy. These include significant increases in the Landfill Tax, from 2005–06; the introduction of Best Value Performance Standards (or statutory targets) for recycling and composting for local authorities; and the creation of the Waste and Resources Action Programme, which was launched in November 2000 to create stable and efficient markets for recycled materials and products, and to remove the barriers to waste minimisation, re-use and recycling.

The Waste and Emissions Trading Bill, currently going through Parliament, proposes a system of tradable allowances, reducing year on year, for the amount of biodegradable municipal waste local authorities may landfill. This system would enable local authorities to meet their targets for reducing the amount of biodegradable municipal waste going to landfill in the most cost effective way taking account of their local circumstances.

http://www.defra.gov.uk/environment/waste/strategy/cm4693/index.htm

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what investigations she has undertaken on the installation of anaerobic digestion systems for waste disposal; and if she will make a statement. [131615]

Mr. Morley: None. However, Government will shortly be issuing a consultation paper on how anaerobic digestion can be treated as a contributor to both composting and energy recovery for the purpose of Government indicators. This follows representations to Government from the waste management industry and local authorities regarding anaerobic digestion, which is currently classified by Government as a form of energy recovery from waste. Changing the classification should make it a more attractive waste management option for local authorities.

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many anaerobic digestion systems for waste disposal there are in the UK; how many have been (a) built and (b) closed in each of the past five years for which figures are available; how many are planned to be built in the (i) current financial year and (ii) following year; and if she will make a statement. [131616]

Mr. Morley: These figures are not available. My Department is aware that anaerobic digestion is employed for a number of commercial and industrial waste streams and that some local authorities are considering pilot plants for the treatment of biodegradable municipal waste. Later this year we expect to launch a programme which will support authorities investing in new waste processing technologies and which will provide impartial advice and funding for demonstrations of new and innovative processes. Some aspects of anaerobic digestion may be eligible.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what measures have been put in place to deal with changes in levels of household waste since 1996–97; [131073]

(2) what target was set for household waste recycling in England and Wales in the Government's 2000 Waste Strategy. [131083]

Mr. Morley: The Government has put a number of measures in place to deal with the problems of the on average 3 per cent. per year increase in household waste. "Waste Strategy 2000: England and Wales"[1] was published in May 2000, and sets out the Government's strategy for managing waste and resources better and the changes needed to deliver more sustainable development.

The strategy included targets for increasing levels of recycling and composting of household waste to 17 per cent. by 2003–04 and 25 per cent. by 2005–06. Progress towards achieving these targets can be found in this year's Departmental Report[2].

In November 2002 government published the Strategy Unit report "Waste Not, Want Not", which reviewed progress in implementing government obligations mainly on municipal waste and recommended a range of measures to drive up performance. The Government response[3] sets out a package of strategic measures that will help to boost the minimisation, re-use and recycling of municipal waste, and move waste management up the waste hierarchy.

[3] Government response to Strategy Unit report "Waste Not, Want Not"—Defra, May 2003 http://www.defra.gov.uk/environment/waste/review/index.htm

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on waste minimisation projects. [131060]

Mr. Morley: The Government have announced, in response to the SU report, that WRAP (Waste & Resources Action Programme) would be taking forward the following four waste minimisation initiatives:

a national home composting programme, following established best practice in other countries, using sustained training and communication methods to establish greater household participation. The programme, which is currently under development, is likely to be delivered through local authorities in a bidding process, linked to the provision of other support services (on waste awareness and kerbside best practice); development of re-useable nappy services, with a programme of support for SMEs and new entrants to business for start-up support for new nappy laundering businesses;

a retailers initiative, seeking to work with major retailers—both challenging them and supporting them to play their part in waste minimisation;

a waste minimisation innovation fund to provide resources to support innovation by retailers and others—in areas such as minimising material use in consumer products, design for minimum material use and maximum recyclability.

WRAP (the Waste & Resources Action Programme) has recently undertaken an extensive dialogue on the waste minimisation initiatives with local authorities, NGOs, businesses, academics, community organisations and others. The results of this exercise are now being used to finalise how best these new programme areas should be delivered.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the use of anaerobic digestion of waste. [131074]

Mr. Morley: Anaerobic digestion is currently classified by Government as a form of energy recovery from waste. Energy recovery is a less desirable option than recycling and composting in the Government's hierarchy of waste management options. However, following representations from the industry and local authorities, we have agreed that anaerobic digestion should be treated as a contributor to both composting and energy recovery. We will shortly be issuing a consultation paper on how this could be done.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much funding local authorities received for sustainable waste managing schemes in the last year for which figures are available. [131075]

Mr. Morley: The information is as follows:

EPCS

The main source of funding for local authority waste services is through the Environmental, Protective and Cultural Services (EPCS) Standard Spending Assessment (SSA).

The EPCS SSA provides for a wide range of local authority services including libraries, local transport and flood defence, as well as waste. In total, the provision for the block is:

EPCS SSA

2002–03	8,961
2003–04	9,435

Provision for waste services is not separately identified within the total.

Waste Minimisation and Recycling Fund

We have provided £50 million additional funding for 2002–03 and £90 million for 2003–04 through a £140 million Waste Minimisation and Recycling Fund to encourage local authorities to expand recycling operations in their area.

Information on the final totals for all financial claims made under round 1 (2002–03) of the National Waste Minimisation and Recycling Fund including the separate arrangement for London is as follows:

Waste Minimisation and Recycling Fund

Capital Spend Allocated 2002–03 (£ million)	38.58
Actual Capital Spend 2002–03 (£ million)	30.74
Proportion Spent (%)	80
Revenue Spend Allocated 2002–03 (£ million)	11.42
Actual Revenue Spend 2002–03 (£ million)	10.47
Proportion Spent (%)	92

The underspend on the capital budget is due mainly to delays in the procurement of capital items such as vehicles and boxes. The Department is seeking end-year flexibility to carry forward the remaining capital budget (7.8 million) so it can be spent by Local Authorities in 2003–04.

The Waste Private Finance Initiative (PFI)

Waste PFI funding is allocated on a project specific basis. Since the introduction of the September 2000 criteria recycling has been at the forefront of all schemes approved by the department.

In the last 12 months six projects have been approved at outline stage and another three at final stage, which are now signed and operational. The following table shows the allocations for each scheme:

Authority	Financial Year Project signed	Approval stage	PFI Credit allocation (m)
ELWA	2002–03	Final	47
East Sussex, Brighton and Hove	2002–03	Final	49
Leicester City	2003–04	Final	30.8
Central Berkshire	N/A	Outline	37
West Sussex	N/A	Outline	25
Gloucestershire	N/A	Outline	25.105
West Berkshire	N/A	Outline	23.74
Cornwall	N/A	Outline	25
Nottinghamshire	N/A	Outline	31.93

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what measures the Government will put in place to achieve the 2005 target to reduce industrial and commercial waste sent to landfill to 85 per cent. less than in 1998. [131076]

Mr. Morley: Waste Strategy 2000: England and Wales[1] was published in May 2000, and sets out the government's strategy for managing waste and resources better and the changes needed to deliver more sustainable development.

The Strategy set a target to reduce the amount of industrial and commercial waste sent to landfill to 85 per cent. of the 1998 level by 2005.

In November 2002 government published the Strategy Unit report 'Waste Not, Want Not', which reviewed progress in implementing government obligations and recommended a range of measures to drive up performance including some related to industrial and commercial waste. The government response[2] identifies a package of strategic measures to take forward these recommendations, and move waste management up the waste hierarchy.

Water Pricing

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the Water Price Review 2004. [131071]

Mr. Morley: The Director General of Water Services (Ofwat) is responsible for setting water price limits.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State made a statement to the House on 21 January 2003, Official Report, column 5WS, this year when publishing her Initial Guidance on the periodic review to the Director General. A joint statement, explaining what the review is, setting out how and when decisions will be taken, and inviting views, was issued in August by Government and the environmental and quality regulators and Defra was a signatory.

The Secretary of State's Principal Guidance to the Director General will be published in early 2004 and she will make a further Ministerial Statement to the House at that time.

Water Quality

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the quality of UK (a) inland and (b) coastal water; and what research she has conducted on levels in other EU countries. [131070]

Mr. Morley: Monitoring and assessment of inland and coastal waters in Scotland and Northern Ireland, and with respect to the devolved functions in Wales are matters for the Scottish Executive, the Northern Ireland Executive and the National Assembly for Wales.

In England, in 2002, the Environment Agency surveyed about 7,000 freshwater sites, representing 35,000 kilometres of rivers and canals, for their chemical quality and around 2,000 of these for biological quality. The results of this most recent assessment of inland water quality can be found on the Agency's website www.environment-agency.gov.uk from Tuesday 23 September 2003.

Our national monitoring programme provides regular data on the environmental quality of the marine environment, including coastal waters. A National Marine Monitoring Programme, consisting of 109 stations monitored by six agencies, has been set up to detect long-term trends in physical, biological and chemical variables at selected estuarine and coastal sites. In 2000, the OSPAR Commission for the Protection of the Marine Environment of the North-East Atlantic produced a set of Quality Status Reports for the region, which evaluated the effectiveness of measures taken, planned for the protection of the marine environment and set priorities for the region. This was agreed by all the contracting parties, including the UK. Other regional seas programmes have produced similar assessments for other European waters.

The UK participates fully in the activities of the European Environment Agency, which compiles and disseminates information for Europe on a wide range of environmental topics, including inland and coastal water quality, through its website, its Environmental Signals reports and other publications.

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the five (a) best and (b) worst performing regions of England in chemical quality of water were in the last year for which figures are available. [131072]

Mr. Morley: The following table shows results from the Environment Agency's 2002 General Quality Assessment of rivers and canals in each of the Agency's seven regions. These were published by DEFRA on 23 December 2003 on their website (http://www.defra.gov.uk/environment/statistics/index.htm).

Chemical quality is one of a range of indicators of the overall quality of a water body and is affected by human activity, natural geography and weather.

The table is presented in order of the percentage of river lengths which are of 'Good and Fair' chemical quality, however this is an arbitrary choice and the order would vary if it was based on a different range of grades.

Percentage of river lengths by grade for each region, 2002

	Grade
EA region	Good (Grades A + B)	Fair (Grades C + D)	Poor (Grade E)	Bad (Grade F)	Good and Fair (Grades A + B + C + D)
South West	83.2	14.0	2.6	0.2	97.2
Thames	67.8	27.7	4.5	0.0	95.5
Midlands	63.0	31.1	5.5	0.3	94.2
North East	67.6	25.6	6.1	0.8	93.1
Southern	43.5	48.4	8.1	0.0	91.9
Anglian	54.5	37.2	8.3	0.0	91.7
North West	62.0	29.4	7.7	0.7	91.5
England	65.5	28.3	5.8	0.4	93.8

Note:
The regions shown are Environment Agency regions. The Midlands and the North West regions cross the Welsh political border, however the overall England results do reflect the English political boundary.

LEADER OF THE HOUSE

Video-conferencing

Huw Irranca-Davies: To ask the Leader of the House what assessment he has made of the (a) demand and (b) capacity for video-conferencing and web-cameras for honourable Members' use. [132117]

Mr. Hain: I am aware that some hon. Members would like to see additional provision for video-conferencing and web-cameras. I suggest that my hon. Friend approach the Speaker's Advisory Panel on this. The Information Committee has also taken an interest in this.

TREASURY

Private Sector Health Care

15. Mr. Love: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received regarding the provision of a subsidy through the tax system towards the cost of health care in the private sector. [132070]

Dawn Primarolo: We receive many representations regarding many issues of tax policy.

I remain unconvinced that reducing the NHS budget by £1 billion to subsidise the private health insurance payments of those who already can afford it is an effective use of taxpayers money funds.

Economic Growth

16. Mr. Hunter To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the projections for United Kingdom growth made by (a) the Treasury and (b) independent forecasters at the time of the (i) 2002 and (ii) 2003 budget. [132071]

Ruth Kelly: Between the 2002 and 2003 Budgets, both the Government and independent forecasters revised down their GDP growth forecasts for 2003, reflecting a fragile global economic environment and heightened international uncertainties.

At the time of the 2003 Budget, the average of independent forecasts for GDP growth in 2003 was consistent with the Budget forecast, with over 70 per cent. of forecasters included in HM Treasury's 'Comparison of independent forecasts' either within of above the Budget forecast range.

Financial Mutual Organisations

17. Mr. Bailey To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his policy is on support for financial mutual organisations; and if he will make a statement. [132072]

Ruth Kelly: The Government welcomes the contribution of the mutual sector to providing greater choice and diversity in the market and in tackling financial exclusion. The Government will continue to work closely with the sector.

Tax Allowances

18. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to index-link personal tax allowances at least in line with inflation. [132073]

Dawn Primarolo: The level of personal allowance for 2004–5 will be announced, as usual, at the Pre Budget report.

Budget Forecasts

19. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next plans to meet the new Governor of the Bank of England to discuss the Chancellor's Budget forecasts on the public sector deficit for 2004–05. [132074]

Ruth Kelly: The Chancellor meets the Governor of the Bank of England regularly to discuss various issues concerning the British economy, including the public finances. In addition, a representative from HM Treasury attends each of the monthly meetings of the Monetary Policy Committee.

Eurozone

20. Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the recent change in the budget deficits (a) in Germany, (b) in France and (c) on average in the eurozone. [132075]

Ruth Kelly: In 2002, the general Government deficit reached 3.1 per cent. of GDP in France, 3.5 per cent. of GDP in Germany and 2.3 per cent. of GDP in the euro area.

Youth Unemployment

21. Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of the level of youth unemployment on the economy; and if he will make a statement. [132076]

Ruth Kelly: Youth unemployment is particularly detrimental to the long-term health of the economy.

That is why this Government have made a priority of reducing it. With the help of the New Deal for Young People, we have reduced long-term youth unemployment by 133,000 or three-quarters since 1997.

Climate Change Levy

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the receipts were to the Exchequer in 2002–03 under the climate change levy. [132054]

John Healey: In 2002–03, the climate change levy raised £829 million for the Exchequer. This figure was published by the Office for National Statistics in "Financial Statistics" (Table 2.1 D) in August 2003.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a monthly estimate of the costs incurred by the Government as a result of its presence in Iraq. [131995]

Mr. Boateng: I refer the hon. Member to my answer I gave the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Llew Smith) on 14 October 2003, Official Report, column 144W.

Pensions

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what amount in taxation he has levied from pension funds in the last five years. [132077]

Ruth Kelly: Approved pension funds do not normally pay tax on their investments. The only exceptions are where a pension fund is involved in an activity outside the terms of its tax approval or makes a taxable payment to a scheme employer or member. The amount of tax paid by pension funds under these circumstances in the last five years is not held centrally.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

British Branding Overseas

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate she has made of the cost of promoting British branding and identity in culture, media and sport overseas in the last year for which figures are available; and what element of this expenditure promotes (a) Welsh, (b) Scottish and (c) Irish branding and identity as a distinct component of that of the United Kingdom as a whole. [131945]

Mr. Caborn: There are a number of Government Departments which promote British branding abroad. DCMS provides £35.5 million per annum to VisitBritain (formerly the British Tourist Authority) to promote Britain overseas as a tourist destination. In 2002–03 an additional £20 million was provided from the Reserve in order to help tourism recover from the impact of the foot and mouth outbreak and the terrorist attacks of 11 September 2001. Funds are not allocated for individual regions of Britain. Britain is promoted as a whole in a way which maximises the impact of VisitBritain's campaigns in individual markets overseas. Tourism is a devolved matter and is the responsibility of the respective administrations in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Childhood Obesity

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment she has made of the impact of advertising on childhood obesity; and if she will make a statement. [131937]

Estelle Morris: The Department has a responsibility only in relation to broadcast advertising. It has made no separate assessment of the impact of advertising on childhood obesity but will participate in consideration of the Food Standards Agency's recent report on the promotion of foods to children. The Department is fully supportive of Government initiatives to tackle the problem of child obesity, and is working closely with the Department of Health and the Department for Education and Skills on these as well as developing its own health initiatives relating to increased physical activity, particularly in children.

Euro Entry

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much has been spent in each year by her Department in preparing for UK entry to the euro; how much her Department plans to spend on preparations for UK entry to the euro for each year from the current financial year up to and including 2005–06; and what estimates she has made of the total costs to her Department of changeover to the European Single Currency. [131591]

Mr. Caborn: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary to the Treasury on 14 October 2003, Official Report, column 142W.

Ministerial Events Attendence

Nick Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will list the (a) sports events, (b) arts events, (c) broadcasting events, (d) tourism events and (e) museums and galleries she has attended since 1 November 2002. [118007]

Tessa Jowell: The number of events attended since 1 November 2002, is given in the following list:

Sporting:

8 December 2002 BBC Sports Personality of the Year

1 January 2003 Arsenal v Chelsea @ Highbury

12 February 2003 England v Australia @ Upton Park

16 March 2003 World Indoor Athletics Championships

13 April 2003 London Marathon Opening

Arts:

19 November 2002: A Streetcar Named Desire

10 November 2002: Twelfth Night @ Donmar Warehouse

15 December 2002: Mahler 2 @ Royal Festival Hall

21 December 2002: The Wind in the Willows @ Linbury Studio

23 December 2002: The Merry Wives of Windsor @ RSC Swan Theatre

28 January 2003: The Rite of Spring @ Treptow Arena

10 February 2003: The Vortex @ Donmar Warehouse

15 May 2003: Henry V @ National Theatre

20 May 2003: Winters Tale @ Roundhouse

28 June 2003: The Lady from the Sea @ The Almeida Theatre

Broadcasting:

6 February 2003: Launch of BBC 3

23 February 2003: BAFTAS

13 May 2003: Thirty Club Dinner

16 May 2003: Cannes Film Festival: Calendar Girls

Tourism:

7 November 2002: Tourism Forum @ Tate Modern

4 February 2003: Cumbria: CBI Dinner

5 February 2003: BTA Breakfast

22 May 2003: Tourism Breakfast @ Claridges

Museums and Galleries:

17 December 2002: The [illegible] of the Homeless @ Museum of London

3 February 2003: Constable to Lacroix @ Tate Britain

17 March 2003: Durer Exh. @ British Museum

25 March 2003: Titian Exhibition @ The National Gallery

17 March 2003: Roundhouse Theatre Event

3 April 2003: British Empire and Commonwealth Museum

28 April 2003: Built Heritage Foundation, Shoreditch

28 April 2003: Elizabeth @ National Maritime Museum.

The list includes events attended up to the start of the summer parliamentary recess 2003.

Tourism

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make a statement on (a) the domestic tourist industry and (b) the measures she is taking to encourage in-bound tourism. [131938]

Mr. Caborn: England's tourism industry is worth £62 billion a year. £52 billion of which is generated by domestic tourism. In 2002 British residents took 135 million tourism trips in England. Statistics for this summer will be available by the end of November. Early indications from the industry are that it was a strong season. In April this year, VisitBritain launched a £4 million 'Enjoy England' campaign to promote domestic tourism in England. Following a consultation exercise over the summer, VisitBritain will shortly be publishing its three-year domestic marketing strategy for England.

VisitBritain receives £35.5 million a year to promote Britain overseas as a tourist destination. It has 27 offices overseas and it runs on-going campaigns using advertising, PR, direct mail, the internet and other marketing tools. Major campaigns this year have included partnership campaigns with the industry in the United States and, in Europe, a £4 million "City Breaks" campaign to promote short breaks in Britain.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Civil Emergency

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to hold an exercise in a major United Kingdom city to test the preparedness of the relevant services in the event of a biological terrorist attack. [131656]

Mr. Blunkett: My Department has plans for, or involvement in, a number of exercises over the coming months as part of a regular programme of counter-terrorism exercises. The programme has been in place well before 11 September 2001.

Other Departments such as the Department of Health as well as local government and local emergency services also run exercises to test procedures and equipment across agencies. Some are based in cities such as the recent exercise at Bank Station, others are planned for areas where procedures can be practised with minimal disruption to the public, as well as through tabletop exercises.

As I announced in July 2003, we are embarking on a broader programme of exercises, and, where in the past such exercises were usually conducted in private, we aim to put as much information in the public domain as we can without providing information that may be useful to terrorists. Further information about counter-terrorism exercises is available on the Home Office website at www.homeoffice.gov.uk/terrorism/govprotect/resilience/counterterr.html.

It is important to note that the Government, emergency services and others regularly train and practise their responses to all kinds of major incidents, including natural disasters and accidents, not just those caused by terrorist acts, in order to increase national resilience to a range of threats.

Crime (Merseyside)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many young offenders were successfully prosecuted in April 2003; and what the average sentence (a) given and (b) served was in (i) England and Wales and (ii) Crosby. [129476]

Paul Goggins: Statistics of court proceedings for 2003 will be published in the autumn of 2004.

Illegal Firearms

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the number of illegal firearms in circulation in each year since 1997 in (a) the UK, (b) Suffolk, (c) Norfolk, (d) Essex, (e) Cambridgeshire and (f) Bury St Edmunds. [131843]

Caroline Flint: There are no reliable estimates of the number of firearms held illegally either on a national basis or in particular areas. The overall level of crime involving guns is low but we are developing a range of measures in conjunction with all interested parties to address the recent unacceptable rise in firearms offences.

Passports

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the United Kingdom will meet the 1 October 2004 deadline imposed by the United States which requires biometric technology to be embedded in United Kingdom passports so that the bearers do not need to apply for a visa. [128662]

Beverley Hughes: As we have previously said, biometrics on UK passports will begin to be implemented in 2005.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is organising representations to the United States Government with the aim of ensuring UK passport holders retain visa waiver status, on the basis that realistic programme and implementation plans will be in place by the US deadline.

Terrorist Munitions

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what measures have been taken to prevent terrorist munitions being smuggled into the UK via container traffic; [128659]

(2) what measures have been taken to prevent weapons of mass destruction being smuggled into the United Kingdom. [128660]

Mr. Blunkett: Since the terrorist attacks in the United States on 11 September 2001, the Government have conducted a thorough and comprehensive review of all preventative measures to counter terrorism to better protect this country from the threat from international terrorism.

We have taken major steps to enhance the security of the UK's borders. There are extensive powers for counter-terrorist policing at our ports and our border agencies work closely together in sharing intelligence and operations.

We are also working closely with our international colleagues to implement a range of measures to improve port security and reduce the likelihood of the illicit movement of materials.

The Home Office leads on countering the potential threat from CBRN material. I refer the hon. Gentleman to my statement of 3 July 2003 in which I spoke about the introduction of routine screening of port traffic for the illicit movement of radiological materials (to reduce the threat from nuclear or radiological attack). This technology will greatly improve our existing capacity to detect and prevent the illicit importation of material into the UK. This is a significant part of the £330 million additional counter terrorism money announced in the Budget.

It has never been government policy to release details of our contingency plans for security reasons but, as I told the House on 20 March 2003, we have taken precautionary measures to deal with the events we can anticipate. We cannot guarantee 100 per cent. security but we deal rapidly with change and will keep all aspects of our planning under review and will keep Parliament, and the public, informed of any significant developments.

DEFENCE

Council Tax

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many armed service personnel serving abroad in the last 12 months for which figures are available paid council tax contributions; [132305]

(2) what the average council tax contribution paid by armed services personnel was while serving abroad in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [132306]

Mr. Caplin: Service personnel living in service accommodation pay a contribution in lieu of council tax (CILOCT) in circumstances where they are liable for payment of an accommodation charge. As at 1 April 2003, of those serving abroad some 11,500 service personnel were paying CIEOCT for service families accommodation, and some 6,000 for single living accommodation. Armed service personnel serving abroad may also be liable for council tax on their own property within Great Britain. No information is held on the number of people who fall into this category.

The average daily contribution in lieu of council tax (CILOCT) paid overseas by service personnel, based on 2003–04 charges for the most commonly occupied service accommodation as at 1 April 2003 are:

£3.27—Officers Service Families' Accommodation

£2.56—Other Ranks Service Families' Accommodation

£0.21—Officers Single Living Accommodation, and £0.06—Other Ranks Single Living Accommodation.

Iraq

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 24 September on deployment of military personnel in Iraq, reference 129882, how much the logistical help provided in Multinational Division South East will cost. [132415]

Mr. Ingram: The Ministry of Defence identifies the costs of operations in terms of the net additional costs it has incurred. The costs which the MOD would have incurred had the operation not been undertaken—expenditure on wages and salaries or on conducting training exercises, for example—are deducted from the total costs of the operation.

For the most part, the costs incurred will be those arising from the deployment and activities of the United Kingdom's force elements in Iraq. The same principle will apply to other nations contributing forces. There may be occasions when other nations draw food or fuel from UK sources. On such occasions, those drawing the supplies will be charged at an appropriate rate to recover UK's costs. Therefore the provision of this service will not incur additional cost. There may be other occasions where other nations make use of UK transport facilities where spare capacity exists. In such circumstances, a charge will not be levied. These are all reciprocal arrangements intended to make the most effective use of resources while not disadvantaging any of the troop contributing nations. Any attempt to apportion costs for this arrangement would be impractical.

It is too early to estimate the costs likely to arise from UK military operations in Iraq in 2003–04. Once these are known, additional funding will be sought in the normal way through Supplementary Estimates.

War Pensioner's Mobility Supplement

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people (a) of all ages and (b) aged over 65 years are in receipt of war pensioner's mobility supplement. [132376]

Mr. Caplin: As at 30 June 2003, the total number of war pensioners of all ages in receipt of war pensioners mobility supplement was 18,340. Information is not available for those aged over 65 years and could be provided only at disproportionate costs.

Afghanistan

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the United Kingdom's military operations in Afghanistan. [132127]

Mr. Ingram: The United Kingdom's military operations in Afghanistan are focused primarily upon the International Security Assistance Force in Kabul. We also lead the Provincial Reconstruction Team in Mazar-e Sharif and provide staff officers to support the coalition headquarters at Bagram.

Army Personnel (Self-harm)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) pursuant to his answer of 16 September, Official Report, column 703W, on Army personnel (self-harm), if he will place the information in the Library as soon as it becomes available; [131935]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 16 September 2003, Official Report, column 703W, on self-harm, if he will place the information in the Library when it becomes available. [132488]

Mr. Caplin: The work to trial the collection and analysis of the existing information on incidents of deliberate self harm in the Army has only just begun. The purpose of the work is to develop the Department's understanding of the scale of the problem and to inform the development of policies and practices within the armed forces. There is no current intention to place this information in the Library of the House.

Defence Attaches

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the cost was of (a) defence attachés and (b) the Defence Export Services Organisation in each financial year since 1997–98. [132153]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 14 October 2003]: Costs readily available for Defence Attachés in each financial year since 1997–98 are as follows:

Financial year	Costs identified (£ million)
1997–98	30.6
1998–99	31.7
1999–2000	32.4
2000–01	34
2001–02	37.2
2002–03	37.1

Operating costs for DESO in each year since financial year 1997–98 are as follows:

£ million

Financial year	Expenditure	Receipts	Net operation costs
1997–98	—[1]	—[1]	14.380
1998–99	45.359	-29.342	16.017
1999–2000	46.473	-34.977	11.496
2000–01	55.81	-41.430	14.380
2001–02	48.930	-37.853	11.077
2002–03	56.944	-44.407	12.537

[1] Full details of costs in this year are no longer available.

The net operating costs are more than offset by benefits to the Defence budget arising from DESO's activities. Main sources of offsetting income from DESO are three Government-to-Government project offices, where the customer country pays Ministry of Defence costs, and the Disposal Services Agency, where costs are met from revenue.

Defence Spending

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence by how much he plans to increase defence spending over the next five years. [132157]

Mr. Ingram: Plans for defence spending in 2004–05 and 2005–06 are set out in the Government's Expenditure Plans for the Ministry of Defence, a copy of which can be found in the Library of the House. Plans for defence spending beyond 2005–06 will be set in the 2004 and 2006 Spending Reviews.

Depleted Uranium

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department will phase out the use of depleted uranium. [132312]

Mr. Ingram: United Kingdom forces have two types of depleted uranium (DU) ammunition: 20 mm rounds used by the Royal Navy's Phalanx Close-in Weapon System (a missile defence system); and 120 mm anti-tank rounds (CHARM 3), fired by the Army's Challenger II (CR2) tanks.

The Royal Navy's Close-in Weapon System does not require anti-armour properties and in recent years, a new tungsten round has been developed for it. Since 1996, all replacement ammunition for the Phalanx system has been of the tungsten variety. Some ships still carry the 20 mm DU round, however, and would fire it should the operational need arise.

There is currently no plan to replace the DU penetrator in the CR2 Main Armament Weapon System although a programme is being commissioned over the next three years to determine the most cost-effective means of maintaining CR2's capability. This will investigate the replacement of the rifled barrel with a smoothbore barrel, which in turn, may offer alternative munitions. DU replacement is not the primary aim of this programme.

To date, DU has consistently outperformed all equivalents as a kinetic penetrator when employed in anti-armour weapon systems: its use, therefore, currently offers the best operational effectiveness in this role.

Service Personnel (Debt Management)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what special assistance is given to (a) service and (b) ex-service personnel who are facing financial difficulties; and if he will make a statement. [121520]

Mr. Caplin: Service personnel are expected to manage their financial affairs responsibly. However, individuals facing financial difficulties can be assisted by way of advice at unit level within the chain of command. Commanders, along with others in the unit, including administrative and welfare staffs and chaplaincy services, can provide help and assistance in dealing with individual financial difficulties and will facilitate liaison between the individual and credit organisations.

Each service produces self-help publications on debt and debt management, and RAF personnel receive instruction on the need for integrity in their personal and financial affairs, with recruits instructed on basic money matters, including how to operate a bank account, balance a cheque book and use a credit card. Personnel are also made aware of the support available through the Citizens' Advice Bureau, SSAFA-Forces Help, professional credit advice organisations and respective benevolent funds.

At the Veterans Agency there is a Veterans Advice Unit which aims to provide 'one-stop-shop' guidance to former armed forces personnel or their families on where to seek professional help on a wide range of issues including financial difficulties.

Ex-service Personnel

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to encourage ex-service personnel to rejoin the armed forces; and if he will make a statement on the value of ex-service personnel to the armed forces. [121521]

Mr. Caplin: Ex-Service personnel are routinely encouraged to consider rejoining the armed forces. All three services ensure that regular contact is maintained with former service personnel from the moment of discharge (and in many instances in the weeks leading up to the discharge date), when their continued value to the armed forces is fully explained to them, and for a period of time thereafter. Such has been the nature of these initiatives that in financial year 2002–03, a total of 762 ex-service personnel rejoined the armed forces and for the first five months of 2003–04 a further 345 former service personnel have rejoined.

The armed forces greatly value ex-service personnel. Those who rejoin the regular forces bring their past experience and expertise with them which is particularly useful when individuals join branches or trades currently experiencing a shortfall. Many who rejoin do not have to repeat the full re-selection process and many of those formerly on the trained strength do not have to repeat initial training. This is a considerable saving on time and resources.

Ex-regular personnel have played, and continue to play, a vital role in recent operations in both Afghanistan and Iraq.

Firearms

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what rules govern the handling of firearms in a made ready condition; and in what circumstances made ready firearms may be carried inside an Army barracks. [131985]

Mr. Ingram: For the purposes of answering this question, it has been assumed that the hon. Member is referring to the non-operational use of firearms by Army personnel. The relevant rules maintain that unless an individual is ordered to make the weapon ready, or he/she is about to fire, the weapon is always to be made safe; that is no live round is to be carried in the breech, and, in the case of automatic weapons, the working parts are to be forward.

Under normal circumstances, a soldier would only carry a made ready weapon inside the barrack area when they are ordered to do so; for instance when training on a range, or if there was an imminent threat to life.

HMS Bulwark

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the original in-service date was for landing platform dock Bulwark; what the current in-service date is; what the reasons are for the changes; and if he will make a statement. [131933]

Mr. Ingram: The original in-service date for the landing platform dock Bulwark was March 2003. The current planned in-service date is March 2005. There have been a number of manufacturing, project management and productivity difficulties experienced at the BAe Systems Barrow shipyard which caused slippage to HMS Bulwark's sister ship, HMS Albion. Resources were concentrated in HMS Albion in order to minimise the delays. This caused a consequential delay to HMS Bulwark programme.

There are opportunities to improve upon the ISD of March 2005 and the Ministry of Defence will continue to work hard with BAe Systems with the aim of accelerating the programme and achieving ISD some weeks earlier than currently forecast.

Colombia (Military Aid)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to stop giving military aid to Colombia; and if he will make a statement. [132079]

Mr. Ingram: British military assistance to Colombia is focused primarily on Explosive Ordnance Disposal training, and provision of British military education. We believe that it provides clear benefits to the Colombian Armed Forces, and the country as a whole, by reducing the number of deaths (civilian and military) from explosive devices, and by introducing Colombian military personnel to British defence concepts in key areas such as the democratic and accountable control of the armed forces and Rules of Engagement. As a matter of policy, we therefore do not intend to cease providing military assistance to Colombia.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the benefits of giving British military aid to Colombia; and if he will make a statement. [132080]

Mr. Ingram: British military aid to Colombia is focused on providing assistance primarily in the fields of Explosive Ordnance Disposal (EOD) and military education and training. Mines and other explosive devices are responsible for a significant proportion of deaths among the Colombian armed forces, and also have a devastating effect on the civilian population. Provision of British military training and education is designed to help Colombia develop more professional armed forces, and to introduce personnel to British defence concepts, including the importance of accountable and democratic control of the armed forces, and the use of Rules of Engagement.

The nature of other aspects of military advice and assistance provided to Colombia is confidential between Governments, and I am withholding details under Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, which covers information where disclosure would be harmful to national security, defence or international relations.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much military aid Britain has given to Colombia in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [132175]

Mr. Ingram: Details of military assistance to Colombia from January 2000 onwards are in the list. Information on assistance before this date is not held centrally, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The nature of other aspects of military advice and assistance provided to Colombia is confidential between Governments, and I am withholding details under Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, which covers information where disclosure would be harmful to national security, defence or international relations.

18–28 January 2000: One officer visited Colombia to discuss with the Colombian armed forces the disposal of terrorist explosive devices and to advise on the maintenance and replacement of EOD equipment. The total cost of this visit was £3,252.08.

2–14 September 2000: One officer visited Colombia to advise the Colombian authorities on improving the protection of police stations against terrorist attack. The total cost of this visit was £3,480.00.

26 March-6 April 2001: A team of five UK military personnel visited Colombia to provide EOD training support to the Colombian authorities. I am afraid that we have been unable to locate records of the cost of this visit.

28 January-2 February 2002: One officer visited Colombia on a remit to scope further aspects of EOD training required by Colombia. The total cost of this visit was £893.61, exclusive of flight costs. In the event, the planned further training did not take place due to UK resource constraints.

19–24 March 2003: Two EOD personnel participated in a counter terrorist seminar in Colombia organised by the Metropolitan police, at a total cost of £7,225.

30 August-5 September 2003: Three EOD personnel visited Colombia on a scoping visit. Final costs associated with this visit are not yet available.

2003–04: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office's Human Rights Project Fund is supporting a project to raise awareness in the Colombian armed forces on their role in prevention and protection of the rights of internally displaced people, at a cost of £14,723.54.

In addition, Britain has funded the following UK-based military training and education courses:

A Colombian officer attended the MSc in Global Security course (August 2002-August 2003), at an approximate cost of £26,760.

A Colombian officer attended the Royal College of Defence Studies course from January 2002-January 2003, at an approximate cost of £48,296.

A Colombian officer is attending the Advanced Command and Staff College, which began in September 2003, at a projected cost of £77,934.

Two Colombians are currently attending the CT Bomb Disposal Course at the Army School of Ammunition at a total projected cost of £15,220.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to ensure that military aid to Colombia is not being used by (a) the Colombian army and (b) paramilitary death squads against civilians; and if he will make a statement. [132176]

Mr. Ingram: When considering bilateral military assistance to Colombia, the UK takes account of the need to avoid funds being used in any way which would not be compliant with United Nations human rights recommendations. Mechanisms are in place to check that, at the time military assistance is given, the military units involved are not implicated in human rights violations, internal repression, or collusion with paramilitary organisations.

Personal Injury Claims (Army)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many personal injury claims concerning Army personnel have been lodged in each year since 1990; and how many and what percentage were (a) settled out of court, (b) dismissed and (c) found against the Department. [132177]

Mr. Caplin: The Ministry of Defence does not generally record the details of personal injury cases brought by members of HM forces by individual Service. This information could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost. The vast majority of cases are settled amicably. Three per cent. of cases proceed to trial. The information contained in the following table is in relation to personal injury claims received from members of HM forces since 1990. There is no direct correlation between the numbers of claims received in-year and claims settled and repudiated in the same year because of the time lapsed between receipt and investigation of the claim.

Financial year	Claims received	Claims settled	Claims repudiated
1990–91	582	126	144
1991–92	672	136	135
1992–93	750	195	356
1993–94	1,004	210	230
1994–95	1,312	314	227
1995–96	1,014	235	125
1996–97	924	344	224
1997–98	1,038	391	211
1998–99	738	412	165
1999–2000	752	504	344
2000–01	924	948	397
2001–02	819	351	253
2002–03	666	733	322

Sea King Helicopters

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on Sea King replacement at RNAS Yeovilton. [132400]

Mr. Ingram: The support amphibious and battlefield rotorcraft programme is designed to replace the capability provided by the Sea King Mk4 early in the next decade. The project is in its early stages and we have yet to decide how the capability requirement will best be met.

Absence Without Leave

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many soldiers went AWOL in the past 12 months. [132181]

Mr. Caplin: The total number of soldiers reported AWOL during the period 1 October 2002 to 30 September 2003 inclusive was 1,69[illegible]

Terrorism (Israel)

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has held with the Israeli Government on the defence of Israeli citizens from terrorist attacks; and what advice he gave. [132120]

Mr. Hoon: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister met with Israeli Prime Minister Sharon on 14 July 2003 and discussed the current situation in Israel and the Occupied Territories, including terrorism and security issues. Officials also met with last month their Israeli counterparts on matters of mutual interest. I am withholding the content of these talks under Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

September 11

Jim Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many tri-Service personnel have been activitated in response to the 11 September terrorist attacks. [132272]

Mr. Ingram: No members of the United Kingdom armed forces were engaged in the immediate response to the events of 11 September 2001 in New York, Washington and Pennsylvania. Since that date, however, a large number of Service personnel have been involved in a variety of military operations designed to counter the threat from international terrorism.

UK Military Hospitals

Jim Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many military hospitals there are in the UK. [132271]

Mr. Caplin: There is now only one military hospital in the United Kingdom, the Duchess of Kent's Psychiatric Hospital at Catterick, which is expected to close by 31 March 2004 when alternative facilities are in place.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Iraq

Andrew Selous: To ask the Secretary of State, Department for International Development, by when he expects electricity will be fully available throughout the British occupied sector of Iraq [132049].

Hilary Benn: Power supplies in the South of Iraq have shown progressive improvements in recent weeks due to a steady increase in generating and transmission capacity combined with lower demand as a result of cooler weather.

The average person in Basra now has access to electricity for about 20 hours per day, although grid failures can lead to longer local outages. Outside Basra the situation is more variable. In other urban areas power is now available for an average of four hours out of six. Some isolated communities remain without access to power, as they were before the conflict.

The provision of full electricity supply will require significant additional investment in the medium to long term. [132049]

Kazakhstan

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much the Department contributed to multilateral organisations active in Kazakhstan in 2002–03; how much is allocated for 2003–04; and if he will make a statement. [131646]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The information is not readily available for the years 2002–03 and 2003–04. The most recent available figure is for calendar year 2000 where the UK's attributed share of multilateral assistance to Kazakhstan was £1.47 million broken down as EC £0.86, UN £0.25 million and other £0.36 million.

Turkmenistan

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much the Department contributed to multilateral organisations in Turkmenistan in 2002–03; how much has been allocated for 2003–04; and if he will make a statement. [131798]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The information is not readily available for the years 2002–03 and 2003–04. The most recent available figure is for calendar year 2001 where the UK's attributed share of multilateral assistance to Turkmenistan was £0.64 million broken down by EC £0.42 million and UN £0.22 million.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Means-tested Benefits

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions pursuant to his answer of 15 September 2003, Official Report, column 556W, on means-tested benefits, what percentage of the population aged 60 years and over was in receipt of income support in each year between 1993 and 2002. [131951]

Malcolm Wicks: The answer is in the table.

Income Support Pensioner Beneficiaries aged 60 or over as a percentage of the population: Great Britain—May 1993 to May 2002

	Income Support MIG Beneficiaries aged 60 and over (000s)	Percentage of the population aged 60 and over
1993	1,967	16.8
1994	1,998	17.1
1995	1,980	16.9
1996	1,957	16.7
1997	1,903	16.2
1998	1,830	15.5
1999	1,789	15.1
2000	1,784	15.0
2001	1,907	16.0
2002	1,945	16.2

Notes:

1. Jobseeker's allowance replaced income support for the unemployed from October 1996, therefore to enable comparisons to be made, figures prior to May 1997 exclude the unemployed.

2. Beneficiaries of a benefit unit are the sum of claimants and their partners.

3. Percentage for population has been calculated using the revised ONS population estimates for age group 60 and over, for 1993 to 2002.

4. Figures are based on a 5 per cent. sample and therefore subject to sampling variation.

5. Claimant figures have been rounded to the nearest hundred and quoted in thousands, percentage population figures to one decimal place.

Pensions

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions pursuant to his answer of 9 September, Official Report, column 303W, on pensions, what percentage of stakeholder pension sales went to working individuals earning between (a) £10,000 and £20,000, (b) £20,000 and £30,000, (c) £30,000 and £40,000, (d) £40,000 and £50,000 and (e) £50,000 and £60,000; and if he will make a statement. [131953]

Malcolm Wicks: The information requested is in the following table giving a breakdown of stakeholder pension sales for the 2001–02 tax year by earnings of policyholders:

Annual earnings of stakeholder pension policy holders	Percentage of total stakeholder pension sales
Under £10,000	24
£10,000 to £20,000	40
£20,000 to £30,000	19
£30,000 to £40,000	5
£40,000 to £50,000	2
£50,000 to £60,000	1
£60,000 and above	2

Notes:

7 per cent. of sales were to people not in work (e.g. children, spouses, the unemployed and pensioners).

Earned income data are derived from the Survey of Personal Incomes (SPI) and consists of all income chargeable under Schedule E (mainly pay, private and occupational pensions, retirement annuities and state retirement pensions) Schedule D Cases I and II (self-employment income), and miscellaneous other earnings.

The SPI is a representative sample of nearly 200,000 individuals, drawn from the Revenue's Self Assessment, Pay As You Earn and Claims systems. Where we have been able to match these individuals to the SPI, primarily those with earned income, the totals in the tables are based on this sample.

Around two-thirds of stakeholder pensions taken out in their first year on the market have been by people on moderate incomes (earning under £20,000 a year). This demonstrates the encouraging start that stakeholder pensions have made in offering people, particularly modest earners, a new opportunity to save for their retirement.

Source:

Inland Revenue data for 2001–02 tax year

Mr. Michael Jabez Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the percentage increase was in the basic state retirement pension between April 1997 and April 2003; and what the increase in the Retail Price Index is that would have applied under the previous formula. [132326]

Malcolm Wicks: The information is in the table.

	Percentage increase in basic state pension on previous year	Retail prices index (percentage in September of previous year)
1997–98	2.1	2.1
1998–99	3.6	3.6
1999–2000	3.2	3.2
2000–01	1.1	1.1
2001–02	7.4	3.3
2002–03	4.1	1.7
2003–04	2.6	1.7

Section 150 of the Social Security Administration Act 1992 provides for the Secretary of State to review the amount payable in respect of pensions and to increase them in line with the general level of prices.

Over the last three years basic state pension has been increased by more than the Retail Prices Index (RPI). We have announced that we will increase the basic State Pension by 2.5 per cent. or RPI, whichever is the higher, for the remainder of this Parliament.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Asbestos

Dr. Cable: To ask the Solicitor-General pursuant to her answer of 17 July 2003, Official Report, column 589W, on asbestos, how many Crown Prosecution Service buildings have been identified as containing asbestos; if she will place copies of the asbestos registers for each building in the Library; and what steps she has taken to compile a central register. [130942]

The Solicitor-General: The Crown Prosecution Service have approved the appointment of an asbestos inspector via an Office of Government Commerce call off contract. A programme of inspection surveys has been agreed. The inspections and all the written survey reports are to be returned to the Crown Prosecution Service prior to the 21 May 2004 in compliance with Regulation 4 of the Control of Asbestos at Work Regulation 2002.

A central asbestos register on the surveys will be held and managed by the Crown Prosecution Service and the asbestos register will be placed in the Library.

Departmental Hospitality

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Solicitor-General how much was spent on food by the Department and by each agency for which it is responsible in (a) 2001–02 and (b) 2002–03; what proportion of that food by value was produced in the United Kingdom; what guidance she has issued to encourage the procurement of home-grown food; and if she will make a statement. [129385]

The Solicitor-General: Expenditure on food in the Crown Prosecution Service is generally limited to official hospitality provided by the Crown Prosecution Service and a canteen subsidy. Records of spend on food provided at some external conferences and like events are not kept centrally and so cannot be included.

In 2001–02 the Crown Prosecution Service recorded expenditure of £23,000 on hospitality and £110,000 on a canteen subsidy. The figures for 2002–03 were £20,000 and £83,000 respectively.

Information made available by the canteen service providers indicates that on average 30 per cent. of the food they procure is produced in the United Kingdom. It is not possible to assume a monetary value of UK food supplied to the Crown Prosecution Service indirectly through the subsidy because the subsidy contributes to items other than food.

Expenditure on food by HM Crown Prosecution Service Inspectorate is generally limited to official hospitality and meeting refreshments. HMCPSI does not provide any canteen facilities.

HMCPSI did not purchase any unprepared food supplies during 2001–02 or 2002–03. Expenditure on meeting refreshments and meals, supplied by external caterers, was £1,600 in 2001–02 and £1,700 in 2002–03. There was additional relevant expenditure in financial year 2002–03 attributable to a reception to launch the HMCPSI Annual Report and two seminars hosted by the Inspectorate.

HMCPSI does not record what proportion of its food supplies are UK produced.

Expenditure on food by the Serious Fraud Office is generally limited to official hospitality and meeting refreshments. The SFO does not provide any canteen facilities. Total expenditure within these categories for each of the two years was £19,000 in 2001–02 and £20,000 in 2002–03. The further breakdown to amounts spent on food and its place of production is not available.

Expenditure on food in the Treasury Solicitor's Department and the Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers is limited solely to hospitality. There is no staff canteen. There is, therefore, no regular purchase of food.

The amounts spent in 2001–02 and 2002–03 on hospitality were less than £10,000 in both years.

Microsoft (Licensing Fees)

Norman Lamb: To ask the Solicitor-General how much was paid to Microsoft in licensing fees by the Law Officer's Department and its agencies in each of the last three years; and how much has been budgeted for (a) 2003–04 and (b) 2004–05. [130673]

The Solicitor-General: CPS Headquarters spent the following on Microsoft licences (approximately):

2000–01—£2.5 million

2001–02—£1.2 million

2002–03—nil

The CPS has no specific budget for Microsoft licences for 2003–04 and 2004–05.

Since 2002, all IT services have been outsourced to LogicaCMG who purchase and manage Microsoft licences on behalf of the Crown Prosecution Service.

There may have been some expenditure on Microsoft licences by the Crown Prosecution Service locally, however figures could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Although HMCPSI is not a part of the CPS, it benefits from being part of the CPS IT network. Information relating to payments to Microsoft for licensing fees in that context is subsumed in that relating to the CPS return.

HMCPSI also has a very small number of its own PCs. Expenditure on Microsoft fees for these machines in the last three years is as follows:

2000–01—nil

2001–02—nil

2002–03—£773

HMCPSI has no budget for Microsoft fees in 2003–04. The budget for 2004–05 has not been agreed, but it will not include a specific budget for Microsoft fees.

The Serious Fraud Office spend on Microsoft licenses is as follows:

2000–01—£3,000

2001–02—£16,000

2002–03—£20,000

2003–04—£250,000 est.

Expenditure by the Treasury Solicitor's Department on Microsoft licenses since 2001–02 has been:

2000–01—£36,000

2001–02—£37,000

2002–03—£71,000

2003–04—£113,000 (Forecast outturn)

2004–05—£52,000 (Budget).

These payments have been made to OGC preferred suppliers under the Microsoft Select Agreement.

The accounts kept by the Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers do not provide separate costs for the purchase of Microsoft licences. However, LSLO usually acquires licences through the purchase of new computers with software already installed and licensed.

Roger Sylvester Case

Harry Cohen: To ask the Solicitor-General when she expects the judicial review of the Crown Prosecution Service's decision not to prosecute officers involved in the Roger Sylvester case to be concluded; and if she will make a statement. [131789]

The Solicitor-General: The judicial review into the Crown Prosecution Service's decision was adjourned on 21 May 2001 at the direction of Lord Chief Justice Woolf so that the inquest could proceed. The inquest concluded on 3 October 2003 and the jury returned a verdict that Mr. Sylvester was unlawfully killed. The Crown Prosecution Service will now conduct a further review of all the available evidence, including the evidence given at the inquest.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Child Care (Redcar)

Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what budgetary provision has been made for children's centres in the Borough of Redcar and Cleveland. [132422]

Margaret Hodge: The indicative funding allocations from April 2004 to March 2006 to develop children's centres in the local authority area of Redcar and Cleveland are: Revenue £623,253 which includes £192,213 for rural wards, and Capital £2,258,185 which includes £700,000 for rural wards. The monies are to create 231 new full day care places and give 3,457 pre-school children access to integrated services in the area. This is building on their four Sure Start local programmes, 14 Neighbourhood Nursery projects, maintained nursery schools, and other existing early years provision.

Child Employment

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will place in the Library a copy of the report of the review of Child Employment Procedures carried out in response to the Private Member's Bill proposed by the hon. Member for Gravesham in February 1998. [129055]

Margaret Hodge: The report of the Review of Child Employment Law was completed in 1999. Since that time we have taken action to address issues raised by the Review and in the light of these changes, and with the passage of time, it would no longer be appropriate to publish the report. However, the Better Regulation Task Force has announced that it is to undertake a study into the regulation of the employment of children and their findings will be published on completion. The Task Force hopes to make recommendations on the regulation of the employment of children that will:

help to protect children from exploitation;

assist employers to meet their obligations; and encourage proportionate enforcement.

I am pleased to sponsor this study.

Consultancy Contracts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many consultancies were commissioned by his Department in the last two years for which figures are available; and what the cost of those contracts was. [130896]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: This information could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

OECD Indicators

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment he has made of the Education at a Glance 2003: OECD Indicators finding that (a) the calculated high rates of return to tertiary education in the United Kingdom are to an important extent due to relatively short standard university studies and (b) tertiary graduation rates are higher in the United Kingdom that in France and Germany; and what implications these findings will have on reform of the 14 to 19 curriculum. [131955]

Alan Johnson: Relatively short duration university studies represent good value for money. Shorter tertiary courses reduce both the direct and indirect costs of the course because, other things being equal, the individual will need to spend less on tuition and their foregone earnings will be lower. Individuals enter the labour market sooner and so have more time to recoup the costs of their investment through higher earnings.

Alongside course duration, the other main cause of high rates of return is the higher graduate premium, ie the high (relative to other countries) pre-tax earnings of UK graduates.

Question addresses two separate OECD indicators, in both of which the UK position is encouraging:

> Concerning the ratio of graduates to the population at the typical age of graduation, the UK is towards the upper end at 37.4 per cent. (well above the OECD average of 30.1 per cent.).
> Concerning the proportion of UK students who complete their tertiary course, at 83 per cent. the UK has one of the best completion rates among OECD countries.

The Working Group on 14–19 Reform, which is due to report in 2004, is taking account in its work of available international comparative information.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH

Burma

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the UK Government will raise the plight of ethnic minorities in Burma at the United Nations Security Council. [132252]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Government are encouraging all the appropriate bodies of the UN to tackle the issue of helping bring about national reconciliation, respect for human rights and democracy in Burma. Should Burma feature on the Security Council agenda, the Government would ensure that the plight of Burma's ethnic groups was taken fully into account.

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government is making to the Burmese regime about the treatment of Aung San Suu Kyi. [132250]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The UK has made numerous representations to the Burmese authorities about the detention of Daw Aung San Suu Kyi. I spoke to the Burmese ambassador to the UK on 1 September to register the UK's grave concern about the continued detention and treatment of Aung San Suu Kyi. We have also discussed this issue with ASEAN and other countries and encouraged them to raise the treatment of Aung San Suu Kyi with the Burmese Junta. While Aung San Suu Kyi's release from detention to home arrest on 26 September was a step in the right direction, the regime must go much further and fully release her and her NLD colleagues and engage in genuine dialogue to reach national reconciliation.

China

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the Government policy is on selling military equipment and armaments to China. [132223]

Mr. Rammell: The sale of military equipment and armaments to China is covered by the EU embargo on the sale of arms to China. The Government's policy is based on the UK interpretation of this embargo. No sale can take place without an export licence. All export licence applications are assessed on a case by case basis against the consolidated EU and UK arms export licensing criteria.

We would not approve the export of equipment where there is a clear risk it might be used for international aggression or which might be used for internal repression.

Antarctic (Pollution)

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what actions the UK Government is taking to combat pollution in the Antarctic. [132242]

Mr. Rammell: The UK meets its obligations under the Marine Pollution Convention (MARPOL 73/78) and the Environmental Protocol to the Antarctic Treaty through strict enforcement of the Antarctic Act 1994, the Antarctic Regulations 1995 and merchant shipping legislation. This ensures that pollution in Antarctica is minimised and that waste is removed from the region for safe disposal elsewhere. The British Antarctic Survey (BAS), as the principal UK presence in Antarctica, is one of the leaders in environmental and waste management in the region. BAS has introduced stringent waste management and recycling policies and has already undertaken major clean-up and removal of its former bases. It has introduced oil spill response plans, installed a sewage treatment plant at Rothera research station and is also implementing over the next five years a sustainable energy strategy. This will reduce consumption of hydrocarbon fuels and their emissions. Furthermore, HMG ensures that all other British activities in Antarctica are appropriately permitted. Such permits set pollution and waste disposal conditions for all British vessels, aircraft and expeditions operating in the area. The UK is also in the lead among Antarctic Treaty parties pressing for the adoption of stricter guidelines for the increasing numbers of large cruise ships entering Antarctic waters.

European Agencies

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals were presented to (a) the European Commission and (b) other EU member governments to locate the (i) European and Asylum and Migration Observatory, (ii) European Agency for Security of Communications Networks, (iii) European Food Authority, (iv) European Maritime Safety Agency, (v) European Aviation Safety Agency and (vi) European Rail Safety and Interoperability Agency in the United Kingdom; what discussions he had on locating each in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [131647]

Mr. MacShane: We have proposed that only one of the EU agencies be located in the UK and that is the European Maritime Safety Agency (EMSA). We have suggested to our EU partners that it should be located in Glasgow. It is currently unclear as to when a decision will be made on the location of this Agency, along with several others, including those mentioned by the hon. Member. A number of other countries have bid for the site of the EMSA and other agencies. The last substantive discussion of the sites in general was at the Laeken European Council in December 2001.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals were (a) presented to the European Commission and (b) presented to other EU member governments to place (i) the European Agency for Civil Protection, (ii) Eurojust, (iii) the European Police College, (iv) the Community Agency for Information Exchange on Visas, (v) the European Bureau of External Border Surveillance and (vi) the European Monitoring Centre for Drugs and Drug Addiction in (A) England, (B) Scotland, (C) Wales and (D) Northern Ireland; what discussions were held to secure its location in Scotland; and if he will make a statement. [131795]

Mr. MacShane: We have proposed that only one of the EU agencies cited by the hon. Member be located in the UK, namely the European Police College Secretariat (ECS). We have suggested to our EU partners that this should be located at Bramshill. I also refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him today.

Iraq

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what British interests were harmed by the bomb that exploded outside the United Nations headquarters in Baghdad in August. [132129]

Mr. Rammell: The despicable terrorist bombing of the UN HQ in Baghdad on 19 August was an attack on the interests of the UN, the Iraqi people, and the international community. 23 people were killed, of whom one was a British citizen, and over a hundred injured. The coalition has made clear that it will not be deterred by terrorist attacks of this nature.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how often he receives briefings from the Commander of British Forces in Iraq. [132131]

Mr. Rammell: The Ministry of Defence provides several briefings every week to my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary and FCO officials on the situation in Iraq, which take full account of the views of the Commander of British Forces in Iraq.

Israel

Clare Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reason the UK abstained in the UN Security Council vote on Israel on 16 September. [131886]

Mr. Rammell: The draft resolution before the UN Security Council on 16 September was unbalanced and therefore unhelpful to the implementation of the roadmap. As our Permanent Representative to the UN said at the time, we regret that the Security Council was unable to pass a balanced resolution. But the resolution's sponsors would not accommodate UK amendments intended to achieve a better balance, and the UK therefore abstained. A resolution on the situation of President Arafat was subsequently put to an Emergency Special Session of the UN General Assembly. European Union proposals for a more balanced text were then accepted and the UK, with our EU Partners, voted for the resolution.

My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has made clear the Government's view that expelling or harming President Arafat would be wrong and counterproductive. Israel should not allow its justified anger at the continuing violence to lead to actions that would undermine both the peace process and its own interests.

Sri Lanka

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) when he last had discussions with representatives of the government of Sri Lanka; where these discussions took place; what topics were addressed; and if he will make a statement; [131831]

(2) when he last had discussions with representatives of the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam; where these discussions took place; what topics were addressed; and if he will make a statement; [131832]

(3) when he last had discussions with (a) representatives of the US Government, (b) representatives of the governments of the EU member states, (c) representatives of the EU Commission, (d) representatives of the UN, (e) representatives of non-governmental organisations, (f) representatives of the government of Sri Lanka and (g) representatives of the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam concerning the resumption of negotiations between the government of Sri Lanka and the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam; and if he will make a statement. [131833]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: During my visit to Colombo in January this year, I met with a wide range of interlocutors including representatives of a number of the governments, multi-lateral and non-governmental organisations listed. In London in September I met Professor G. L. Peiris, Sri Lankan Minister for Constitutional Affairs and Government Chief Negotiator; prior to that I met him in March. I also met with Milinda Moragoda, Sri Lankan Minister for Economic Reform, Science and Technology in June. I discussed the peace process with both ministers.

I have not met with representatives of the LTTE.

Sudan

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the UK's relationship with Sudan. [132243]

Mr. Mullin: The UK has full diplomatic relations with Sudan. Through our Embassy in Sudan we are also in close touch with non-governmental groups from the north and south of the country. The UK Government pursues political, cultural, human rights and development issues. In 2002–03 we committed around £15 million to support both humanitarian work and the peace process. Peace is crucial to the future development of Sudan and regional stability. The UK plays an active role in the peace process, including through the UK Special Representative for Sudan and the Sudan Unit, jointly staffed by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Department for International Development.

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Sudanese Government about human rights abuses in Sudan. [132244]

Mr. Mullin: We monitor the human rights situation in Sudan closely. The Embassy regularly lobbies the Government of Sudan on human rights issues. In September, the Head of the FCO's Human Rights Policy Department visited Sudan to meet government officials, representatives of non-governmental organisations, academics and others, including political prisoners. We will maintain pressure on the Government of Sudan to improve its record and will continue to raise human rights violations at every opportunity both bilaterally and as part of the EU/Sudan dialogue.

Thailand

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Thai authorities about conditions for displaced Burmese minorities resident in refugee camps in Thailand. [132251]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Thai authorities have a long record of providing safe haven for those fleeing persecution by the Burmese regime. The British embassy in Bangkok and EU colleagues are in regular contact with the United Nations High Commission for Refugees, and the Thai authorities, to encourage them to ensure Burmese refugees are treated with compassion. I discussed Burma in broad terms with Thai Foreign Minister Dr. Surakiart Sathirathai when he visited London at the beginning of July and again on the way to the Bali ASEM conference of the same month. We have been in regular telephone contact since. In March 2003, my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State at the Department for International Development (Sally Keeble) visited the refugee camp at Mae La.

Treaties

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his statement of 16 September, Official Report, column 794, when it became Government policy that all international treaties take primacy over national law; and on what evidence he bases the statement that under the draft constitutional treaty for the first time provision is made whereby Parliament can legislate to repudiate a treaty. [131821]

Mr. MacShane: It is an established principle of international law that a state may not plead its national law to escape its international law obligations, including its treaty obligations. As a matter of UK constitutional law, international treaties have effect in UK national law to the extent that they have been implemented in national law.

Article I-59 of the draft EU Constitutional Treaty states that any member state may decide to withdraw from the Union in accordance with its own constitutional requirements. The Government believe it is highly unlikely that any member state would wish to withdraw, but sees a case for stating the political and legal reality of what would happen in such exceptional circumstances.

Turkey

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last had discussions with his Turkish counterpart; what matters were raised in these discussions; and if he will make a statement. [131445]

Mr. MacShane: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs met Turkish Foreign Minister Abdullah Gul, in New York on 25 September. They discussed Turkey's progress towards EU accession, Cyprus and developments in Iraq. The Foreign Secretary reaffirmed the UK's commitment to Turkey's EU candidacy and welcomed the significant progress that Turkey has made towards meeting the Copenhagen Political Criteria. He also discussed the urgent need to work towards a Cyprus settlement on the basis of the Annan plan. The Turkish Foreign Minister gave the Foreign Secretary an update on Turkey's plans to help rebuild Iraq.

Cyprus

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions his Department has had with (a) representatives of the Turkish Government, (b) representatives of the Cypriot Government, (c) representatives of the Greek Government, (d) representatives of the US Administration and (e) representatives of the European Commission since April concerning re-unification negotiations in Cyprus. [131446]

Mr. MacShane: Foreign and Commonwealth Office Ministers and officials regularly discuss the prospects for resumed Cyprus settlement negotiations on the basis of the UN plan with representatives of the Turkish, Greek, Cypriot and US governments. We also discuss developments on the island with the European Commission and EU partners, including at monthly meetings of the Working Group on South East Europe. These contacts are too numerous to list here, but have included my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary's meetings with Turkish Foreign Minister Gul in London in July and at the UN in September. I discussed the issue with the Greek officials in Greece 10–11 October.

We firmly believe that securing a comprehensive settlement in Cyprus before 1 May 2004, in enabling a re-united island to accede to the EU, would be I the best interests of all Cypriots, and the region as a whole. In addition, it would provide a boost to Turkey's own EU candidature.

West Bank and Gaza Strip

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of the report on housing conditions in the West bank and the Gaza Strip, prepared last year by the United Nations Human Rights Commission's Special Rapporteur on housing; and if he will make a statement. [131629]

Mr. Rammell: We share Special Rapporteur Miloon Kothari's concerns about deteriorating housing conditions in the Occupied Territories and the wider human rights and humanitarian consequences of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. We are particularly concerned about the destruction of Palestinian infrastructure by the Israeli authorities. Such actions are provocative, exacerbate tension and undermine ongoing efforts to bring about an end to violence and a return to negotiations. We continue to press Israel to end the disproportionate use of force, demolitions and destruction of infrastructure.

The UK Government's support to the Palestinians includes a combination of emergency and development assistance. Our humanitarian support has mainly focused on basic service provision, but we are also supporting an UN Relief and Works Agency project to rebuild housing in Jenin Refugee Camp, destroyed in 2002 during Operation Defensive Shield. While humanitarian assistance can help alleviate suffering, only a comprehensive solution to the conflict will provide the conditions for permanent improvement in Palestinian living conditions. We are encouraging Israel and the Palestinian Authority to resume implementation of the Quartet Roadmap to this end.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Water Metering (Commercial Premises)

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many commercial premises are being used in each constituency in Northern Ireland; how many of these commercial premises have been fitted with a water meter; and how many of these commercial premises will receive their first account during January and February 2004. [131776]

Mr. Spellar: I have asked the chief executive of Water Service to write to the hon. Lady in response to this question. A copy of the letter will be placed in the Library.

HEALTH

Ethnic Minority Staff

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer of 30 June 2003, Official Report, column 141W, on ethnic minority staff, if he will require national health service trusts to give information on the ethnicity of hospital and community medical and hospital dental staff when making their six-month reports on suspensions. [128706]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 18 September 2003]: The Department will start to collect information on the ethnicity of hospital and community medical and dental staff as part of the routine data collection exercise on long term suspension as soon as practicable.

Achondroplasia

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children in each year since 1997 have suffered from achondroplasia. [132209]

Dr. Ladyman: This information is not collected in the form requested. Hospital Episode Statistics collect data on admissions for various conditions. The table records hospital admissions for achondroplasia. This does not represent the number of in-patients, as a person may have more than one admission within the year.

Primary diagnosis (ICD10 Q77.4) Achrondroplasia count of finished inyear admission episodes: age on admission 0–17 years—NHS hospitals England 1997–98 to 2001–02
Diagnosis code description Q77.4 Osteochrondrodysplasia with defect growth of tubular bones and spine—Achondroplasia

Year	Number
1997–98	98
1998–99	76
1999–2000	83
2000–01	102
2001–02	125

Notes:
1. Admissions—Admissions are defined as the first period of in-patient care under one consultant within one health care provider. Please note that admissions do not represent the number of in-patients, as a person may have more than one admission within the year.
2. Diagnosis (Primary Diagnosis)— The primary diagnosis is the first of up to 14 (seven prior to 2002–03) diagnosis fields in the Hospital Episode Statistics (HES) data set and provides the main reason why the patient was in hospital.
3. Grossing—Figures have not (yet) been adjusted for shortfalls in data (i.e. the data are ungrossed).

Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many individuals in England have been diagnosed with attention deficit hyperactivity disorder over the last three years. [132469]

Dr. Ladyman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 6 October, Official Report, column 1265W.

Diagnostic and Treatment Centres

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of (a) former and (b) seconded NHS staff who will be working in private diagnostic and treatment centres. [131908]

Mr. Hutton: The exact number of professional staff working in these new units will be finalised in the next stage of negotiations leading to contract close.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reasons the bids from (a) BUPA and (b) BMI to run private diagnostic and treatment centres were unsuccessful. [131910]

Mr. Hutton: The procurement process for independent sector treatment centres involved inviting bids from a wide range of independent health care sector organisations, which included BUPA and BMI.

The quality of bid submissions was very high and many companies, including BUPA and BMI were able to meet the stringent clinical standards requirements that had been set. The Department, along with local national health service sponsors, was also seeking examples of: additionality of staff, to avoid any disruption to the local NHS and to ensure that the activity provided in these units was additional to existing work being handled in NHS facilities; innovative solutions in terms of methods of working and patient experience; and value for money in terms of the costs of each procedure, and the affordability of this activity for the local NHS health economy. In order to provide fairness in the evaluation process the bids for all schemes were evaluated by a team made up from central Departmental experts in procurement and clinical practice and local NHS clinicians and managers representing the sponsors of the schemes. The resulting preferred bidders and reserve bidders were therefore chosen on the basis of the criteria and BUPA and BMI were not able to demonstrate their competitiveness on enough of these to warrant their inclusion.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether (a) NHS hospitals and (b) diagnostic and treatment centres will be paid more than the standard tariff for operations to reflect start-up costs they may incur. [131911]

Mr. Hutton: From this year, the Government have introduced a new financial system to provide a transparent, rules-based system for paying providers of services to national health service patients. Primary care trusts (PCTs) will commission the volume of activity required to deliver service priorities, adjusted for case-mix from a plurality of providers on the basis of a standard national price tariff, adjusted for regional variation in wages and other costs of service delivery. By 2008, all NHS providers will be required to meet tariff.

The Department is currently consulting on whether and how additional support above tariff should be provided for up-front revenue costs of new investment. However, we expect many of the contracts for new independent sector treatment centres to be at or below tariff. Where in the short-term we may initially pay slightly more than tariff to some independent sector providers, this is to cover start-up costs so that the new facilities open as quickly as possible to treat more patients, reduce waiting lists and bring additional clinical staff to treat NHS patients. In these cases, local PCTs commissioning care from these new units will not be disadvantaged.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will require private diagnostic and treatment centres to have intensive care beds. [131912]

Mr. Hutton: Treatment centres offer high quality, pre-booked surgery and diagnosis facilities for the treatment of routine, elective national health service patients and will not be required to have intensive care beds. They will be expected to be able to deal with typical surgical problems to the same standards as NHS providers. Local trusts, primary care trusts and new providers will agree protocols for referring and transferring patients who require emergency or urgent care that cannot be provided by the treatment centre.

Diet

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent research the Government have commissioned into the impact on anti-social behaviour of provision of dietary supplements of vitamins and minerals. [130058]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Medical Research Council (MRC) has not recently funded any research into the impact of dietary supplements of vitamins and minerals on anti-social behaviour. However, the MRC does have a nutrition portfolio and spent £17 million in 2001–02. The MRC always welcomes high quality applications for support into any aspect of human health and these are judged in open competition with other demands on funding.

European Single Currency

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent in each year by his Department in preparing for United Kingdom entry to the euro; how much his Department plans to spend on preparations for United Kingdom entry to the euro for each year from the current financial year up to and including 2005–06; and what estimates he has made of the total costs to his Department of changeover to the European Single Currency. [131604]

Ms Rosie Winterton: I refer the hon. Member to the response given by my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary to the Treasury (Ms. Kelly), on 14 October 2003, Official Report, column 142W.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate he has made of the number of patients in each of the last 12 months who have returned home following admission for in-patient treatment due to the unavailability of a hospital bed, without being discharged from hospital; [129100]

(2) what estimate he has made of the average time between an in-patient admission and the patient being allocated to a bed over the last 12 months. [129146]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 11 September 2003]: Data are not collected on this aspect of patient care. The NHS Modernisation Agency has established an emergency services collaborative. The collaborative is working with every health community to analyse bed management processes and spread best practice. However, the Department collects quarterly data on the number of operations cancelled by hospitals for non-clinical reasons at the last minute (that is, on the day the patients are due to arrive or after arrival in hospital or on the day of their operation) or on the day of surgery (in 2002–03 only). Data for England, by national health service trust and strategic health authority level, are available in the Library and on the Department's website at www.doh.gov.uk/hospitalactivity/data_requests.htm

The data collected on cancelled operations for non-clinical reasons are not broken down into the reasons for cancellation.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of beds that will be freed up in NHS trust hospitals due to the creation of fast track NHS diagnostic and treatment centres. [131887]

Mr. Hutton: The independent sector treatment centre programme will free up substantial additional capacity. In some specific instances, the activity freed up in the national health service trust is lower than the numbers being transferred into treatment centres. This is due to the nature of the work which will replace it, for example, more complex cases, with longer lengths of stay, as well as providing capacity to improve non-elective services such as accident and emergency.

Hospital Stays (Healthy Visitors)

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many overnight stays for healthy visitors in NHS beds in (a) England, (b) each region and (c) each strategic health authority there were in each of the last six years; and at what total cost. [128904]

Mr. Hutton: The Department does not hold any information relating to 'healthy visitors'.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list internal flights made by Ministers in his Department in 2002, including in each case the (a) cost, (b) departure location and (c) destination; and of these how many were (i) first class, (ii) business class and (Hi) economy class. [103587]

Mr. Hutton [pursuant to his answer, 19 March 2003, Official Report, c. 847W]: I regret that the previous response the hon. Member received was incorrect. The response should have read as follows.

"The tables show details of internal flights taken by Ministers in the Department of Health in 2002, according to available information".

My right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State for Health (Mr. Milburn) took the following flights.

Departure location	Destination	Type of flight	Class	Cost (£)
Newcastle	Belfast	Single	Premium Economy	161.30
Belfast	Heathrow	Single	Business Class	176.90

NHS Trust Deficits

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which NHS trusts are in deficit; what his strategy is for resolving the situation; and if he will make a statement. [132352]

Mr. Hutton: We have no plans to publish un-audited in-year financial information. All national health service trusts have been asked to plan for and achieve financial balance in 2003–04. Audited information for all NHS trusts will be published in their individual annual accounts and will be available centrally in autumn 2004.

Strategic health authorities and the NHS Modernisation Agency will be working closely with NHS organisations to ensure that they are able to deliver their financial and service delivery plans.

Ophthalmology (Oxfordshire and Buckinghamshire)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the planned location is of the proposed diagnostic and treatment centre for ophthalmology for Oxfordshire and Buckinghamshire. [131399]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 14 October 2003]: The ophthalmic treatment centre for Oxfordshire and Buckinghamshire will be provided through a mobile unit.

The unit will provide services for patients in North Oxford, Wycombe and south west Oxfordshire and as it is mobile it can be used elsewhere as the need arises. The final locations will depend on discussions between local primary care trusts and will relate to demand from national health service patients, and will be convenient for patient access.

Paediatric Dentistry

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each primary care trust the average wait for a child between an initial dental consultation and being operated on under general anaesthetic. [132298]

Mr. Hutton: Information is not collected on the waiting time from initial dental consultation to being operated on under general anaesthetic for a child.

Information is collected on how long a patient is waiting for elective in-patient admission from clinical decision to admit. Information for the specialty paediatric dentistry showing the total patients waiting and the average waiting time for this specialty by primary care trust has been placed in the Library.

Patient Records

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the Government Departments and agencies which will have (a) trusted access, (b) non-trusted access and (c) any other forms of access to patients' NHS records via the NHS net. [131958]

Mr. Hutton: It is not intended that any Government Department or agency that is not involved in providing care to patients will have access to patient records via the NHSnet.

Private Health Care Providers

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many foreign-owned private healthcare providers have pilot programmes with NHS trusts. [131344]

Mr. Hutton: The number of foreign owned private health care providers who are or have undertaken pilot programmes within national health service trusts is not held centrally.

There are, however, a number of primary care trusts (PCTs) who are engaged in programmes with private organisations. These organisations are providing administrative support services to help PCTs design and deliver improved health care. Some of these—such as the work with United Healthcare Group to implement the Evercare model of care for at-risk elderly—are part of the Transformational Change Programme, managed by the National Primary and Care Trust Development Programme (NatPaCT), which aims to help primary care trusts redesign services. However, we do not hold centrally details of all PCTs who have entered into arrangements with private organisations.

Renal Dialysis

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what renal dialysis services are planned for (a) Queen Mary's Hospital, Roehampton and (b) the Kingston area. [131943]

Mr. Hutton: This is a local matter for South West London Strategic Health Authority. There is provision for renal dialysis services within the Queen Mary's Roehampton rebuilding programme, which is due to be completed in 2005. In the meantime, options for developing services in the Kingston and North Wandsworth area are being considered by the local national health service.

Office of the Independent Regulator

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the (a) staff levels and (b) running costs of the Foundation Trust Regulator. [131907]

Mr. Hutton: Subject to legislation, the Office of the Independent Regulator will be established as a non-Ministerial Department, which will be accountable to Parliament but not subject to direction from the Secretary of State for Health. The Independent Regulator is responsible for structure and staffing of the Office of the Regulator. However, he or she must consult the Minister for the Civil Service on the number of staff and their terms and conditions.

The extent of these costs and the number of additional staff required will depend on the number of national health service foundation trusts. In the Explanatory Notes to the Bill, published in March 2003, the Department estimated that, in the first full financial year, 2004–05, the running costs would be £2.3 million. This estimate was based on legal and financial costs, accommodation, expenditure on information technology and the running costs for 12 staff. Final arrangements for the structure and staffing of the Office are for the Regulator to determine and, once appointed, the Regulator will develop detailed proposals and estimates.

Surgical Procedures (Comparable Costs)

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the comparable costs of surgical procedures carried out in national health service hospitals, diagnostic and treatment centres and under contracts with (a) the United Kingdom private sector and (b) overseas health facilities. [131493]

Mr. Hutton: The Department carries out an annual reference cost collection exercise. This year, for the first time, we have collected information on the cost of activity carried out for the national health service by non-NHS providers. This does not include overseas treatment or independent sector treatment centres, although this may be included in future years.

Waiting Rooms (Piped Music)

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of (a) patients' reactions to piped music in NHS waiting rooms and (b) whether this has any therapeutic effect; and if he will make a statement. [132420]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 15 October 2003]: The use or otherwise of piped music in hospitals is a matter for local decision making, which should reflect the views of staff and patients. We are not aware of any specific research on the effect of piped music in national health service waiting rooms.

Waiting Times

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the breakdown by clinical area of waiting times is for the number of people waiting for a referral to a specialist from their general practitioner. [132395]

Mr. Hutton: Information on patients waiting for their first consultant out-patient attendance following general practitioner written referral is collected at the consultants main specialty function, and only for those patients waiting over 13 weeks.

The table shows the number of patients waiting over 13 weeks by specialty.

Patients waiting for 1st consultant out-patient appointment following GP written referral: England (provider based): quarter 1, 2003-04

Specialty	Patients waiting over 13 weeks
General surgery	9,616
Urology	6,821

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Building Regulations (Disabled People)

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the levels of knowledge among builders of the housing design needs of disabled people. [130979]

Phil Hope: No direct assessment is made. However, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister undertakes extensive contacts with builders' organisations such as the House Builders Federation and the National House-Building Council. Officials of the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister discussed with builders from time to time their understanding of the Building Regulations, including Part M, 'Access and Facilities for Disabled People'.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what representations he has received on the adequacy of Part M of the Building Regulations in securing liveable accommodation for disabled people. [130980]

Phil Hope: The Requirements of Part M of the Building Regulations relating to housing were introduced in 1999, and are intended to make it reasonably safe and convenient for disabled people to visit new dwellings and to use the principal storey. The provisions are expected to enable occupants to cope better with reducing mobility and to 'stay put' longer in their own homes. Such representations as the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister receive range from those who feel Part M should not apply to dwellings to those who would like to see it extended in different ways.

Buildmark

Huw Irranca-Davies: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the nature of representations received in the last 12 months in respect of the Buildmark warranty scheme; and what major areas of concern were expressed in these representations. [132514]

Phil Hope: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given on 6 October 2003, Official Report, column 1025W.

The matters raised included instances where defects in homes were not detected, where claims fell outside the terms of the cover and where the resolution service offered under the scheme was unable to settle a dispute between the owner and the builder, or did so only after some delay. The number of cases brought to the attention of the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is small, bearing in mind that, at any one time, there are approximately 1.5 million homes covered by the scheme. However, any instance where defects come to light in a new home after hand over, or where appropriate remedial work is not carried out promptly, is regrettable. The house building industry must work for continuous improvement in quality of construction. The Buildmark scheme is helping them to do this.

High Hedges

Lynne Jones: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many representations his Department has received in support of legislation on high hedges from (a) hon. Members and (b) members of the public since the fall of the Private Member's Bill on High Hedges on 20 June 2003. [131914]

Yvette Cooper: Since 20 June 2003, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has received (a) 402 representations from hon. Members and (b) 182 representations from members of the public, concerning high hedges, almost all in favour of the legislation.

Official Residences

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the (a) maintenance, (b) running and (c) capital costs associated with each of his official residences in each year since 1997. [91630]

Yvette Cooper: The cost of my right. hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister's accommodation including rent, security and maintenance costs, which include capital works, in Admiralty House is tabled as follows:

1998–99	172,572
1999–2000	301,615
2000–01	224,677
2001–02	211,082
2002–03	260,916

The costs are based on an apportionment of the costs of running Admiralty House and are charged to the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister by the Cabinet Office who manage the building.

In addition my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister has the use of Dorneywood which is not owned by the Government, and therefore there is no cost to public funds

South East Housing Growth (Water Supply)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the effect of the projected housing numbers forecast for the South East on the level of water supply; and if he will make a statement. [131514]

Keith Hill: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is committed to ensuring that projected growth in housing numbers across the South East has the necessary water and sewerage services. In the growth areas, proposals for increased housing are based on studies which assess infrastructure requirements including water, and as more specific locations for growth are defined in local studies and plans, the requirements can be considered in terms of specific capacity increases required.

Together with regional and local partners, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has held and will continue discussions with the respective water undertakers and environmental regulators over the level of water supplies needed to meet the projected housing growth across the South East.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Pensioner Benefit Payments

1. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on (a) the proposed method of payment of state benefit for pensioners who cannot access a bank account and (b) the timetable for the receipt of such benefit after 2005. [132601]

Mr. Andrew Smith: While over 90 per cent. of pensioners have bank or building society accounts, and nearly half of all pensioners already choose to be paid by Direct Payment, we of course recognise that there will be some whom we will not be able to pay in this way.

We are presently consulting groups such as Age Concern, Help the Aged and the National Pensioners Convention about paying such pensioners by cheque.

We plan to have this service in place from October next year.

Departmental Job Losses

16. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when he next expects to meet staff representatives to discuss job losses in departmental offices in East Anglia. [132616]

Mr. Browne: Jobcentre Plus and the Pensions Service are modernising the service we provide to our customers. Staff movement between different roles is an ongoing feature of the development of these new services. Ministerial colleagues and I meet the Department's trade union representatives from time to time. Managers and union representatives at all levels meet routinely to discuss staffing plans.

Savings Policy

17. Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on saving for retirement. [132617]

Malcolm Wicks: Our aim is to help people choose how they plan for retirement, how much they save and how long they keep working. Our immediate priority was to tackle pensioner poverty and we have, through the Pension Credit, both increased the amount individuals receive and also rewarded those who have saved. Through our Green Paper and Action on Occupational Pensions proposals we have sought to increase security, promote flexibility of provision and reinvigorate the pensions partnership. We want to give individuals real choices about the savings decisions they take through the provision of the right information and the right products—this we are doing through our informed choice programme and proposed suite of stakeholder products, as proposed in the Sandler review. The Government's overall objective is to promote secure and sustainable pensions provision for individuals.

Stakeholder Pensions

18. Mr. George Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on the take-up of stakeholder pensions. [132618]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Over one-and-a-half million stakeholder pensions have been sold since their introduction in April 2001; over half a million in the last 12 months for which figures are available. This is an encouraging start, and a sign of confidence in the product.

State Pension Reform

19. Andrew Selous: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on Government plans to reform state pensions. [132619]

Malcolm Wicks: We have done much to improve the State Pension. The introduction of State Second Pension focuses help on those with low to moderate earnings, and on qualifying carers and long term-disabled people who have broken work records.

We have increased the basic State Pension by more than the RPI for the last three years. We have also guaranteed to increase the basic State Pension in future years by 2.5 per cent. or the increase in the September Retail Prices Index whichever is the higher.

In addition, the new Pension Credit is designed to ensure that pensioners benefit from their savings. These initiatives will help provide greater security for tomorrow's pensioners.

We will continue to look at sensible and affordable ways of improving the State Pension, such as giving a better deal to people who defer their State Pension.

Pension Credit

20. Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many pensioners the Government estimates will be receiving pension credit by 2006. [132620]

Malcolm Wicks: We are the first Government ever to set a take up target for any benefit and we aim to have at least 3 million pensioner households receiving Pension Credit by 2006.

However, we want every pensioner to take up their entitlement. We have already written to 1.6 million pension households to tell them about Pension Credit and will be writing to the remainder by June 2004. In addition we are running a major advertising campaign on TV and in the press to familiarise, pensioners, their families and friends with Pension Credit and to encourage them to apply.

22. Ms Keeble: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on the implementation of the Pension Credit. [132623]

Malcolm Wicks: Around 1.9 million pensioner households on our systems are already being paid Pension Credit. This represents over two million individuals. Of the awards made, 1.15 million pension households (over 1.3 million pensioners) will get more than they would have before. We are contacting every pensioner household, and want all those who may be entitled, to take up Pension Credit.

Anyone who applies by October 2004 will be able to receive payment from the start of the scheme or the first date they are entitled.

Around half of all households are eligible for Pension Credit and stand to gain on average £400 a year (or around £7 a week).

23. Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many pensioners are entitled to Pension Credit in Waveney constituency. [132624]

Malcolm Wicks: The information is not available in the format requested. However, an estimated 300,000 pensioner households are eligible for Pension Credit in the Eastern region.

Mr. Douglas Gowan

21. Mr. Bacon: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on the latest position regarding a constituent, Mr. Douglas Gowan. [132622]

Maria Eagle: I wrote to the hon. Gentleman on 10 October 2003 as agreed at the Adjournment debate of 9 September 2003.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Djanogly: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on the inter-relationship between the Child Support Agency and the benefits system. [132621]

Mr. Pond: The Child Support Agency and Jobcentre Plus work closely together to provide customers with the best possible service.

Jobcentre Plus staff gather information on behalf of the Child Support Agency to ascertain either the details of the non-resident parent or the reasons why a parent with care on benefit does not wish to apply for child support. In the latter case, Jobcentre Plus staff also decide whether she has good cause.

Jobcentre Plus also collect maintenance by making deductions from non-resident parents' benefit payments.

CABINET OFFICE

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what the total cost was of special advisers to the Office of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Treasury in financial year 2002–03, broken down by (a) salary and related expenses and (b) other costs. [131770]

Mr. Alexander: The numbers of Special Advisers in each pay band by department and total salary costs were set out in the answer provided by the Prime Minister on 16 July 2003, Official Report, column 328W. Other costs cannot be separately identified from the running costs of the office as a whole without incurring disproportionate cost.

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office on how many occasions in financial year 2002–03 the special advisers to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Treasury travelled abroad in an official capacity; which places were visited; and how much each visit cost. [131771]

Mr. Alexander: The special advisers to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Treasury did not undertake any overseas travel in an official capacity in 2002–03.

Parliamentary Questions

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many Questions directed to him remain unanswered. [130767]

Mr. Alexander: At 15 October four Parliamentary Questions remained unanswered.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Iraq

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: To ask the Solicitor-General pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Stone (Mr. Cash) of 17 March 2003, Official Report, column 515W, on Iraq, to what extent, in concluding that it was plain that Iraq had failed to comply with Resolution 1441, the Attorney-General relied upon facts and assertions contained in the Government dossier published in January as material to his conclusion and to the opinion he gave as to the authority to use force, specifying which such facts and assertions were so relied upon. [131002]

The Solicitor-General: The Attorney-General did not rely at all on the Government dossier published on 30 January in reaching the conclusion that Iraq had failed to comply with resolution 1441 and in stating his view that a legal basis for the use of force existed in the combined effect of UN Security Council resolutions 678, 687 and 1441. However, it was material to that conclusion that there was intelligence evidence that the Iraqi authorities had intimidated scientists which UNMOVIC wished to interview; that rooms designated for such interviews had been bugged; and that some potential interviewees had been kept away from UNMOVIC by the Iraqi authorities and that there was evidence that Iraqi scientists had been intimidated into refusing interviews with UNMOVIC outside Iraq. These points were also covered in the section on interviews in chapter one of the dossier.

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: To ask the Solicitor-General pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Stone (Mr. Cash) of 17 March 2003, Official Report, column 515W, on Iraq, whether, in concluding that it was plain that Iraq had failed to comply with Resolution 1441, the Attorney-General relied upon the facts and assertions contained in Chapter 3 paragraphs (a) two to five, (b) six to seven, (c) eight to 11, (d) 12 to 13, (e) 14,

(f) 15, (g) 16, (h) 18 to 23 and (i) 24 to 32 of the Government dossier published in September 2002 as material to his conclusion and to the opinion he gave as to the authority to use force. [131003]

The Solicitor-General: The Attorney-General did not rely upon any facts or assertions contained in the Government dossier published in September 2002 as material to his conclusion set out in his statement of 17 March that Iraq had failed to comply with resolution 1441 and that a legal base for the use of force existed in the combined effect of UN Security Council resolutions 678, 687 and 1441.

WALES

Coroners Courts

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what the annual budget is for each coroner's court in Wales; and what percentage is ring-fenced to enable the provisions in the Welsh Language Act 1993 to be met. [132423]

Mr. Touhig: Coroners' courts are funded by local authorities through the settlement and as such a matter for the National Assembly for Wales.

European Year of Disabled People

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives his Department (a) has undertaken and (b) is taking to commemorate 2003 as the European Year of Disabled People. [133287]

Mr. Touhig: The Wales Office does not have direct responsibility for specific programmes. However, my right hon. Friend and I recognise the importance of promoting the rights of disabled people and raising awareness of the contribution they make to society. On 4 September my right hon. Friend spoke at Remploy's awards ceremony, honouring employers in Wales who have led the way in the employment of disabled people.

The Disability Unit within the Department for Work and Pensions has been working closely with the National Assembly to promote the European Year of Disabled People in Wales. Joint sponsorship from DWP and the European Commission has enabled 13 special European Year projects to run in Wales covering a wide range of issues.

ADVOCATE-GENERAL FOR SCOTLAND

Legislative Competence

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Advocate-General if she will place in the Library copies of communications her Department has had with the Scottish Executive on consideration by her office of the legislative competence of the Bills detailed in Annex 9 of the Scotland Office Departmental Report 2003. [132984]

The Advocate-General for Scotland: Any such communications which take place between my Department and the Scottish Executive are confidential.

TRANSPORT

Essex Coastguard Service

Mr. Francois: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many full-time coastguards were employed by the Essex Coastguard Service on 1 September. [132630]

Mr. McNulty: On 1 September, the Maritime and Coastguard Agency (MCA) employed 33 full-time coastguards in Essex.

Biofuels

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to ensure that the UK will meet the EU target for 2 per cent. of road transport to be fuelled by biofuels by December 2005; and if he will make a statement. [132870]

Mr. Jamieson: The European Union's Biofuels Directive requires member states to set their own indicative targets for sales of biofuels to be met in the years 2005 and 2010. The Government will be consulting early next year on the level of targets that might be appropriate for the UK, and on the steps that we might take to meet them.

Correspondence

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Totnes of 17 June concerning the Teenage Cycle Safety Campaign; and what the reasons are for the delay. [132589]

Mr. Jamieson: I replied to the hon. Member on 7 July.

Flight Paths (Walthamstow)

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what altitude restrictions apply to aircraft on flight paths above Walthamstow; and how these have changed in the last five years. [131582]

Mr. McNulty [pursuant to his answer, 14 October 2003, Official Report, c. 168–69W]: The airspace over all of Walthamstow above 2,500 ft has been classified as 'controlled' for many years. Over the southernmost quarter of Walthamstow the airspace has been controlled to ground level since the opening of London City Airport. Aircraft using Heathrow and City operate within this controlled airspace. Aircraft inbound to Heathrow will normally be above 5,000 ft.

Over the remainder of my hon. Friend's constituency below 2,500 ft, helicopters and general aviation aircraft from smaller aerodromes can determine routes and altitudes according to their particular requirements. Such flights are subject to the Rules of the Air Regulations, notably Rule 5, which means most will be above 1,500 ft.

There have been no changes to the airspace over Walthamstow in the last five years.

Unmanned Level Crossings

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what recent discussions he has had with the Health and Safety Inspectorate on Network Rail's proposals to close unmanned level crossings in Scotland; [133121]

(2) what recent representations he has received from organisations representing country pursuits regarding Network Rail's proposals to close unmanned level crossings in Scotland. [133122]

Mr. McNulty: None. This is an operational matter for Network Rail.

However, I understand that there are continuing discussions between the Health and Safety Executive, Network Rail, the Ramblers' Association, the Scottish Executive, Scottish Natural Heritage, local authorities and residents about Network Rail's policy of preventing unauthorised use of a small number of private level crossings in Scotland. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has drawn the attention of Network Rail's Chief Executive to the need for decisions to enforce restrictions at such crossings to be properly justified on safety grounds.

St Christopher House

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what percentage of the demolition waste from the demolition of St. Christopher House, London is being sent to landfill; [133117]

(2) to what uses the waste from the demolition of St. Christopher House, London is being put; and what percentage of the total waste is being used in each way. [133118]

Mr. McNulty: The Highways Agency left St. Christopher House in September 2002 and the lease expired shortly after. The MOD remained for a few months longer, as their lease had not expired. The building was never a Crown building and it is being demolished by the private landlord. The Highways Agency now has nothing to do with the building.

Thelwall Viaduct

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what steps he is taking to monitor traffic congestion in North Warrington with particular reference to the Winwick area, while repairs to the Thelwall viaduct are being carried out; [132685]

(2) when he expects the repair work being carried out on the Thelwall viaduct to be completed. [132686]

Mr. McNulty: I have asked the acting Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, to write to my hon. Friend on these matters.

Letter from Keith Miller to Helen Jones dated 20 October 2003:

Tony McNulty has asked Stephen Hickey, Acting Chief Executive of the Highways Agency to reply to your two recent Parliamentary Questions about traffic congestion in North Warrington, arising from ongoing works to the M6 Motorway Thelwall Viaduct, and the expected timescale for completion of those works. Stephen is currently away on official business and I am writing on his behalf.

The Highways Agency is responsible for the operation, management, maintenance, and improvement, of the trunk road and motorway network in England, including the M6 Thelwall Viaduct. As you may be aware, the Agency's ongoing works are to replace 140 support bearings, following the discovery, during a routine inspection in July 2002, of a single failed support bearing on the viaduct carrying northbound traffic. All but one lane of that particular viaduct was then closed, and traffic is now carried on this single lane allowing access to Warrington at Junction 21, and on six reduced-width lanes on the viaduct carrying southbound traffic (three lanes in each direction) in contraflow, with a 40mph speed limit. Detailed investigations were urgently carried out and these revealed other failures in the bridge support bearings.

The Agency is conscious that traffic is diverting onto the local road network, including the Winwick area, as a result of the ongoing works and is working closely with Warrington Borough Council on this issue. Data is being collected by both the Council and the Agency to assess the impact of the traffic diversions.

Our aim is to re-open the northbound viaduct as soon as is practicable, and expect to complete the repair works by Spring 2005. However, we are in discussions with the Contractor to identify whether an earlier completion date for the works is possible.

I hope this is helpful. If you would like any further information on this matter, please contact the Agency's Project Manager for the viaduct repairs, David Brindle, Room 803, Sunley Tower, Piccadilly Plaza, Manchester M1 4BE telephone 0161 930 5653.

US Ships (Dismantling)

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for what reason he has not responded to the letter from the hon. Member for Lewes, dated 11 September, on the proposal to allow the dismantling of ships from the US reserve fleet on Teesside; and if he will make a statement. [133289]

Mr. McNulty: Staff from my Department have contacted the hon. Member's office on a number of occasions asking for a copy of the letter but we have yet to receive it. When we do I shall reply to the hon. Member.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he undertook of the availability of facilities in the US to dismantle the ships from the US Reserve Fleet intended for dismantling in the United Kingdom before permission was given for that dismantling. [133291]

Mr. McNulty: Such availability is a matter for the US authorities which tendered the recycling contract. We understand that AbleUK won the particular contract for 13 ships in competition with US and foreign bidders and that other contracts have been won by US firms. Trade in waste for recovery or recycling is legal among OECD countries and the EU has its own needs for efficient and properly regulated ship recycling facilities as a contribution to sustainable development.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Baku-Tbilisi-Ceyhan Pipeline

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make it his policy to ask the directors of the (a) European Bank for Reconstruction and Development and (b) International Finance Corporation to vote against providing support for the Baku-Tbilisi-Ceyhan pipeline; and if he will make a statement. [132460]

Hilary Benn: The European Bank for Reconstruction and Development (EBRD) and the International Finance Corporation (IFC) of the World Bank Group are currently completing their normal thorough screening and safeguards procedures on the Baku-Tbilisi-Ceyhan (BTC) pipeline project. DFID will make its decision on how to vote on the project on the basis of formal project proposals brought to the Executive Boards of these institutions. As is standard procedure, the decision will be based on an assessment of the projects compliance with the Banks' mandates, policies and procedures.

Dr. Vis: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will ask the directors of the (a) European Bank for Reconstruction and Development and (b) International Finance Corporation to vote against providing support for the Baku-Tbilisi-Ceyhan pipeline. [132505]

Hilary Benn: The European Bank for Reconstruction and Development (EBRD) and the International Finance Corporation (IFC) of the World Bank Group are currently completing their normal thorough screening and safeguards procedures on the Baku-Tbilisi-Ceyhan (BTC) pipeline project. DFID will make its decision on how to vote on the project on the basis of formal project proposals brought to the Executive Boards of these institutions. As is standard procedure, the decision will be based on an assessment of the projects compliance with the Banks' mandates, policies and procedures.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will ask the Director of the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development to withhold support from the Baku-Tbilisi-Ceyhan pipeline. [133628]

Hilary Benn: The European Bank for Reconstruction and Development (EBRD) and the International Finance Corporation (IFC) of the World Bank Group are currently completing their normal thorough screening and safeguards procedures on the Baku-Tbilisi-Ceyhan (BTC) pipeline project. DFID will make its decision on how to vote on the project on the basis of formal project proposals brought to the Executive Boards of these institutions. As is standard procedure, the decision will be based on an assessment of the projects compliance with the Banks' mandates, policies and procedures.

Call Centres

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development whether his Department plans to outsource call centre work to premises outside the United Kingdom. [132102]

Hilary Benn: DFID do not have responsibility for any call centres in the UK.

Developing Countries

Mr. Lazarowicz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment he has made of WTO procedures to meet the need for special and differential treatment for developing countries. [132429]

Hilary Benn: World Trade Organisation (WTO) agreements include a large number of special and differential treatment provisions (some 155 in all). However, there is dissatisfaction with the existing system of differential treatment by both developed and developing countries alike. A total of 88 proposals have been submitted to amend and modify the existing provisions and to provide for new concessions. The UK has worked hard with the European Commission, and others to assess and meet the concerns of developing countries. Accordingly the WTO membership has now agreed to 25 of these agreement-specific proposals. However, central to the issue concerning special and differential treatment is how to take account of country differences (e.g. Singapore to Ghana) within WTO agreements. Developing countries are reluctant to address the issue of country classification now and only within the wider context of future negotiations. DFID is working with others on possible options to provide an effective delivery mechanism for special and differential treatment.

Ethiopia

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State, Department for International Development if he will make a statement on the drought situation in Ethiopia. [129529]

Hilary Benn: The indications are that in most parts of Ethiopia rainfall has been better this year in terms of both quantity and distribution than it was in 2002. Assessments are under way, but at present it looks likely that food production will be better this year. This will have implications for the likely size and scope of humanitarian interventions; in particular food aid interventions may be less extensive.

Risks to health remain a serious concern. At present there is a malaria epidemic in many parts of Ethiopia. We are planning to respond urgently.

We are continuing to closely monitor the situation in Ethiopia, and as always we remain committed to playing our part in the international response. Since the beginning of 2002 we have provided £49.1 million of food and non-food humanitarian assistance to Ethiopia.

Fossil Fuel Projects

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what his policy is on the provision of (a) loans and (b) loan guarantees by multilateral development banks to fossil fuel projects overseas; and if he will make a statement. [132494]

Hilary Benn: The UK is a shareholder in a number of multilateral development banks which provide loans and loan guarantees for fossil fuel projects. The Government's policy is to ensure that these institutions comply with their own policies and procedures in all projects for which they provide finance. In considering whether to provide loans or loan guarantees this should include an assessment of the possible social and environmental impacts. In addition, our policy is to fully understand the developmental implications of fossil fuel projects. We are particularly concerned that the management of revenues from such projects occurs transparently and with a positive developmental impact. We hope that initiatives such as the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative will help to achieve this.

Dr. Vis: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what his policy is towards the provision of (a) loans and (b) loan guarantees by multilateral development banks to fossil fuel projects overseas; and what amendments he has made to it because of concerns about climate change. [132501]

Hilary Benn: The UK is a shareholder in a number of multilateral development banks which provide loans and loan guarantees for fossil fuel projects. The Government's policy is to ensure that these institutions comply with their own policies and procedures in all projects for which they provide finance. In considering whether to provide loans or loan guarantees this should include an assessment of the possible social and environmental impacts such as climate change. In addition, our policy is to fully understand the developmental implications of fossil fuel projects. We are particularly concerned that the management of revenues from such projects occurs transparently and with a positive developmental impact. We hope that initiatives such as the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative will help to achieve this.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development whether his Department has carried out an analysis of the extent to which his Department's support for fossil fuel investment is consistent with (a) the United Kingdom's obligations under the Kyoto Protocol and (b) the Government's environmental aims. [133630]

Hilary Benn: The UK government are committed to taking a lead in meeting obligations under the Kyoto Protocol, including reductions of carbon dioxide emissions. At the same time, we recognise the rights of other sovereign states to fulfil their own legitimate development needs. In considering support for fossil fuel based investments, it is standard procedure for DFID to liaise with other relevant Government Departments to ensure balance and consistency between these objectives. In addition, our policy is to ensure that lending institutions take account of possible social and environmental impacts such as climate change as part of their policies and procedures in assessing fossil fuel projects, before providing loans or loan guarantees.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is the total value is of support given by his Department to overseas projects for (a) the extraction of fossil fuels and (b) the development of renewable energy in each of the last three years. [133631]

Hilary Benn: DFID has not been involved in the direct funding of fossil fuel extraction projects over the past three years, although we are occasionally asked to comment on the proposals of lending institutions. While recognising that countries are entitled to exploit their own natural resources, either for export purposes or to meet domestic energy requirements, full account should be taken of possible social and environmental impacts, including climate change. Our policy is to ensure that institutions providing loans or guarantees take such factors fully into account.

On the renewable energy issue, DFID has funded about £3.6 million of research projects over the past 10 years, about half of this over the past three years. We have about £500,000 of project work still in progress.

Dr. Vis: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the total value of support is from his Department to overseas projects for (a) the extraction and transport of fossil fuels and (b) the development of renewable energy in 2003–04. [132502]

Hilary Benn: DFID has not been involved in the direct funding of fossil fuel extraction projects over the past three years, although we are occasionally asked to comment on the proposals of lending institutions. While recognising that countries are entitled to exploit their own natural resources, either for export purposes or to meet domestic energy requirements, full account should be taken of possible social and environmental impacts, including climate change. Our policy is to ensure that institutions providing loans or guarantees take such factors fully into account.

On the renewable energy issue, we have about £500,000 of research project work currently in progress, having funded about £3.6 million of such projects over the past 10 years.

Dr. Vis: To ask the Secretary of State, Department for International Development what assessment he has made of the extent to which his Department's support for fossil fuel investment is consistent with (a) the obligations under the Kyoto Protocol and (b) the goal of reducing UK carbon dioxide emissions by 2050. [132503]

Hilary Benn: The UK Government are committed to taking a lead in meeting obligations under the Kyoto Protocol, including reductions of carbon dioxide emissions. At the same time, we recognise the rights of other sovereign states to fulfil their own legitimate development needs. In considering support for fossil fuel based investments, it is standard procedure for DFID to liase with other relevant Government Departments to ensure balance and consistency between these objectives. In addition, our policy is to ensure that lending institutions take account of possible social and environmental impacts such as climate change as part of their policies and procedures in assessing fossil fuel projects, before providing loans or loan guarantees. I refer the hon. Member for Finchley and Golders Green to the reply to his question Hansard ref 132501 on this matter, at column 359W.

The UK Energy White Paper sets out four core objectives of UK Energy Policy: Tackling Climate Change, Energy Security, Cutting Fuel Poverty and Competitiveness. DFID is working closely with other Government Departments, notably FCO, DTI and DEFRA, to ensure a co-ordinated Whitehall approach to international energy issues.

General Agreement on Trade in Services

Mr. Lazarowicz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development whether his Department has conducted an assessment of the development impact of the General Agreement on Trade in Services. [132430]

Hilary Benn: The ability to assess the domestic economic and social impact of commitments taken under the General Agreement on Trade in Services (GATS) is of vital importance to developing countries. Meaningful assessments will help ensure that the commitments they take on are in line with, and contribute to, wider economic growth and poverty reduction policies.

It is important that such assessments are conducted by developing countries themselves in the process on making their own decisions during the GATS negotiations. We do however recognise the serious capacity constraints faced by many developing countries. We are therefore working closely with the World bank and UNCTAD to build a framework for supporting developing country efforts to carry out their own impact assessment work.

Iraq

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps are being taken to reduce delays of convoys into Iraq at the Kuwait/Iraq border. [131140]

Mr. Rammell: I have been asked to reply.

There are two military and one civilian crossing points between Kuwait and Iraq. The former are managed by the Coalition in close co-ordination with the Kuwaiti authorities. The civilian crossing point is under Kuwaiti control.

The flow of traffic at the military crossing points is not currently subject to unacceptable delays. Nevertheless the US, in consultation with UK forces, is working with the Kuwaiti authorities on further expediting the flow of traffic across the border without compromising security. There are longer delays at the civilian crossing point. Because of well-founded concerns over security and smuggling, the Kuwaiti authorities check carefully both people and goods crossing the border. The Coalition and the Kuwaitis are working on ways to reduce the resulting delays while maintaining security.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will support the opening of a women's resources centre in Basra. [132150]

Hilary Benn: Opportunities for providing support on women's issues in Basra will be identified once the member of staff responsible for gender issues is in place. Initiatives such as a women's centre will be considered alongside other priorities.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans he has to deploy gender specialists to Iraq. [132152]

Hilary Benn: A member of staff responsible for gender issues is currently on a three-month deployment in Baghdad and a second specialist will shortly begin a six-month deployment in Basra.

Kyoto Protocol

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on the extent to which his Department's support for fossil fuel investment is consistent with (i) the UK's obligations under the Kyoto Protocol and (ii) the Government's target to reduce the UK's carbon dioxide emissions by 60 per cent. from 1990 levels by 2050; and if he will make a statement. [132457]

Hilary Benn: The UK government are committed to taking a lead in meeting obligations under the Kyoto Protocol, including reductions of carbon dioxide emissions. At the same time, we recognise the rights of other sovereign states to fulfil their own legitimate development needs. In considering support for fossil fuel based investments, it is standard procedure for DFID to liaise with other relevant Government Departments to ensure balance and consistency between these objectives. Malawi

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what financial assistance has been given to Malawi in the last six months. [132294]

Hilary Benn: In the first six months of this financial year, DFID spent a total of £14.2 million on development assistance to Malawi. Of this, £5.3 million was financial aid, which was administered directly by the Government of Malawi. Financial aid was disbursed in a number of key areas, notably on the Malawi Safety, Security and Access to Justice programme and the education and health sectors, where funds were used to build education and medical facilities as well as supplying drugs.

Multinational Enterprises

Dr. Vis: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what his policy is on instructing the UK directors of the (a) European Bank for Reconstruction and Development and (b) International Finance Corporation to grant support for projects that have been the subject of an on-going complaint for breach of OECD guidelines on multinational enterprises. [132504]

Hilary Benn: UK policy is to assess proposed EBRD and IFC projects against the mandates, policies and procedures of those institutions. The OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises ("the Guidelines") are recommendations addressed by adhering countries to multi-national enterprises ("MNE's"). They represent a framework of principles of good conduct for multi-national companies in their business activities, designed to help ensure that they act in harmony with the policies of the countries in which they operate and that they consider the views of other stakeholders. The Guidelines aim to promote and develop a sustainable approach to business conduct and to build an atmosphere of confidence and predictability between business, labour, governments and society as a whole. It is intended that companies use the Guidelines as a benchmark when developing their own codes of conduct. The Government take complaints under the guidelines very seriously and have an established mechanism for dealing with complaints through the National Contact Point in DTI. This mechanism applies equally to projects for which financing by a multilateral financial institution is being considered.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what guidance his Department has given to UK directors of the (a) European Bank for Reconstruction and Development and (b) International Finance Corporation in relation to projects that are the subject of a complaint for a breach of OECD guidelines on multi-national enterprises; and if he will make a statement. [132459]

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what his policy is on the role of the (a) European Bank for Reconstruction and Development and (b) International Finance Corporation of the World Bank in granting support to projects that are subject to an outstanding complaint for a breach of OECD guidelines on multi-national enterprises. [133629]

Hilary Benn: UK policy is to assess proposed EBRD and IFC projects against the mandates, policies and procedures of those institutions. They represent a framework of principles of good conduct for multi-national companies in their business activities, designed to help ensure that they act in harmony with the policies of the countries in which they operate and that they consider the views of other stakeholders (for example in respect of social and environmental issues). Renewable Energy

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on the value of support from his Department to projects overseas for (a) the extraction and transportation of fossil fuels and (b) the development of renewable energy. [132458]

Hilary Benn: DFID has not been involved in the direct funding of fossil fuel extraction and transportation (pipeline) projects over the past three years, although we are occasionally asked to comment on the proposals of lending institutions. While recognising that countries are entitled to exploit their own natural resources, either for export purposes or to meet domestic energy requirements, full account should be taken of possible social and environmental impacts, including climate change. Our policy is to ensure that institutions providing loans or guarantees take such factors fully into account.

On the renewable energy issue, DFID has funded about £3.6 million of research projects over the past 10 years, about half of this over the past three years. We have about £500,000 of project work still in progress.

David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for International Department for International Development what the total value of support from his Department to overseas projects is for (a) the extraction and transport of fossil fuels and (b) the development of renewable energy. [132481]

Hilary Benn: DFID has not been involved in the direct funding of fossil fuel extraction and transportation (pipeline) projects over the past three years, although we are occasionally asked to comment on the proposals of lending institutions. Reproductive Health

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development pursuant to his answer of 14 October 2003, reference 131645 if he will list the (a) reproductive health and (b) family planning projects (i) run directly and (ii) supported financially by his Department in each Central American country, including an outline of each programme's aims and methods; and if he will make a statement. [132906]

Hilary Benn: DFID is supporting two key programmes that involve work on reproductive health and family planning across all of Central America including Nicaragua, Honduras, Ecuador, Guatemala and El Salvador:

Direct support on a £1.5 million project to reduce the impact of HIV/AIDS through strengthening national and regional capacity in HIV/AIDS prevention, control and care, focusing on Nicaragua and Honduras.

A £2.0 million cross-regional project on improving sexual health and reproductive health with the United Nations Fund for Population Activities (UNFPA) to reduce morbidity, mortality and the social problems associated with sexual and reproductive health in Central America. A component of this project involves funding for Marie Stopes International who are helping to provide access for adolescents to Sexual and Reproductive Health (SRH) services in Managua, Nicaragua.

Sugar Regime

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development pursuant to his answer of 15 September 2003, Official Report, column 550W, on agricultural produce (EU reforms), if he will make a statement on the research undertaken by his Department on the impact on developing countries of the Four Families of Sugar regime reform options put forward by the European Commission earlier this year. [131952]

Hilary Benn: The discussions regarding reform to the EU sugar regime are still in a relatively early stage. On 23 September 2003, the European Commission published an Extended Impact Assessment and posed three possible reform options for the future of EU sugar policy. These options will now be debated by EU member states, which must agree to any major policy changes in the sector.

With specific reference to the research undertaken by DFID, we have completed our own analysis on the reform options and commissioned a study, which is still in its drafting stage, to explore the potential need for adjustment assistance for ACP countries with preferential access to the EU sugar market that may lose out from the regime.

Unused Medicines

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State, Department for International Development what schemes exist for sending unused medicines from the United Kingdom to Third World countries; and if he will make a statement. [129528]

Hilary Benn: The UK Government are committed to increasing access to medicines in the developing world. The factors recognised by the World Health Organisation (WHO) that can improve poor people's access are; affordable pricing, sustainable financing, reliable health and supply systems and the rational selection and use of existing drugs. Appropriate donations of medicines can play a useful role, including through the use of UK's tax relief on drug donations, although country-level procurement of affordable medicines is likely to be more sustainable in the long term.

The Department of Health is aware of a recent proposal from a medical aid charity who supply medicines to Africa and is exploring a number of related issues connected to the scheme.

The proposed scheme does not comply with the quality recommendations in the Guidelines for Drug Donations issued by the WHO and the Department of Health is seeking further advice from WHO on this aspect.

There are also legal and ethical issues in which the Department of Health will be seeking the advice of the WHO where necessary.

Zimbabwe

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent assessment he has made of food shortages in Zimbabwe. [133561]

Hilary Benn: The Zimbabwe Emergency Food Security and Vulnerability Assessment released in April made a provisional estimate of 5.5 million people needing food aid by the first quarter of 2004. This figure might rise, since, with inflation now almost 500 per cent., many more people, particularly in cities and towns, cannot afford food even where it is available. The Government of Zimbabwe lacks the foreign exchange to import grains and continues to restrict the role of the private sector in importing and distributing food. The number of people needing feeding in urban areas is being assessed this month.

To date, less than 40 per cent. of the funding required for the current World Food Programme's Emergency Operation has been pledged by donors. Food aid supplies are therefore secure only through December. An interruption in food supplies, combined with the high level of HIV/AIDS in Zimbabwe, would obviously risk a significant increase in mortality rates. We are working closely with other members of the international community to update the overall estimates of humanitarian need. We will continue to monitor the position closely and encourage further contributions as necessary. This week we announced an additional contribution of £5 million to the WFP Emergency Operation. This is in addition to some £11 million of new commitments we have already made this year through NGO partners for food aid and agricultural recovery, and some £2 million granted to UNICEF for vaccines to immunise against childhood diseases.

PRIME MINISTER

Cabinet Committee on Biotechnology

Norman Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what criteria govern decisions by Lord Sainsbury to withdraw from discussions at the Cabinet Committee on Biotechnology. [133097]

The Prime Minister: All Ministers are required to conduct themselves in accordance with the requirements set out in the Ministerial Code. As has already been made clear, Lord Sainsbury does not take part in any Government decisions or discussions relating to GM food including those at the Sci-Bio Committee.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the persons employed in an official capacity at No. 10 Downing street; what post each of them holds; and how much each is paid. [132455]

The Prime Minister: A list of the main office holders in the Prime Minister's Office is set out in the Civil Service Year Book, which is updated annually. Copies are available in the House Libraries.

Information about an individual's pay is not disclosed under exemption 12 of Part 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

However, details of the pay of special advisers by payband are published on an annual basis. For details of the paybill for special advisers for 2002–03, I refer my right hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Croydon, Central (Mr. Davies) on 16 July 2003, Official Report, columns 327–30W.

International Treaties

Mr. Cash: To ask the Prime Minister pursuant to his Answer of 14 October 2003 to the honourable Member for Aldridge-Brownhills (Mr. Shepherd), Official Report, column 60W, on international treaties, on what evidential basis he relied in his statement that a State may not plead its national law to escape its international law obligations, including its treaty obligations. [132934]

The Prime Minister: The principle referred to in the answer of 14 October 2003, Official Report, column 60W, is well established. The Permanent Court of Arbitration, the Permanent Court of International Justice and the International Court of Justice have produced a consistent jurisprudence upholding this principle.

Iraq

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what commitments he has given to the President of the United States in relation to the UK's financial contribution to (a) the cost of the provision of troops in and (b) the reconstruction of Iraq. [132754]

The Prime Minister: I have given no commitments to the President of the United States in relation to financial contributions to the provision of troops in, and the reconstruction of, Iraq. The Government are covering the costs of the deployment of British troops and providing some logistical help to Coalition partners operating under UK command in Multi-National Division South East (MND SE).

The Government have pledged a UK financial commitment towards Iraq's reconstruction of £544 million for the three years from April 2003.

David Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister what consultations he has had with the US President over the Iraq Governing Council opposition to Turkish troops being part of the occupying forces; and if he will make a statement. [132832]

The Prime Minister: I regularly discuss the situation in Iraq with President Bush.

The Government is grateful for Turkey's efforts to aid in the reconstruction in Iraq. We welcome the generous offer of Turkish troops and the vote in the Turkish Parliament to approve this in principle. The practicalities of the potential deployment are a matter for the Coalition Provisional Authority and the US and Turkish authorities, taking into full consideration local sensitivities, including those raised by the Iraq Governing Council.

Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister when he received the letter on the nuclear weapons time-line in the Iraq Dossier, sent jointly by the hon. Members for Blaenau Gwent and for Hampstead and Highgate (Glenda Jackson) on 27August; and when he will reply. [133400]

The Prime Minister: I received the letter on 28 August and replied to my hon. Friend and my hon. Friend the Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Glenda Jackson) on 6 October.

Ministerial Code

Norman Baker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy for individuals not holding ministerial office but who carry out tasks of ministerial equivalence to be subject to the Ministerial Code of Conduct in respect of such tasks. [133100]

The Prime Minister: No. The Ministerial Code applies to Ministers.

Reports (Provenance)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister pursuant to his answer of 15 October, (ref. 131973), what the provenance is of the reports referred to in his answer of 15 October. [133279]

The Prime Minister: The reports to which I referred in my answer of 15 October come to the Government through a variety of channels.

I am unable to be more specific about the precise origins of all the information upon which our concerns are based, under Exemption 1(a) of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Security Clearance

Norman Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what level of security clearance applied to (a) the right hon. Member for Hartlepool (Mr. Mandelson) and (b) Mr. Jonathan Powell as of 1 October. [133114]

The Prime Minister: The security clearance of individual Members of Parliament is not a matter for the Government.

Jonathan Powell has the appropriate level of security clearance to do his job.

DEFENCE

Euro

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much has been spent in each year by his Department in preparing for UK entry to the euro; how much his Department plans to spend on preparations for UK entry to the euro for each year from the current financial year up to and including 2005–06; and what estimates he has made of the total costs to his Department of changeover to the European Single Currency. [131594]

Mr. Ingram: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 14 October 2003, Official Report, column 142W, by my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary to the Treasury (Ms Kelly).

Bailed Soldiers

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his policy is on the allocation of duties to a soldier released on bail on charges of unlawful killing. [131984]

Mr. Ingram: A soldier will perform normal duties providing he or she is medically fit and the range of duties is in accordance with any specific requirements of bail.

Departmental Travel

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much his Department spent on foreign travel on official business in each year since 1999. [132125]

Mr. Caplin: This information is not held centrally in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Young Service Personnel (Welfare)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he has taken to involve the families of young service personnel in safeguarding their welfare. [132182]

Mr. Ingram: The armed forces have a long standing tradition of including the families of all personnel in the overall welfare process which is an essential component in the maintenance of morale and operational effectiveness. A comprehensive audit of procedures within initial training establishments undertaken during 2002 nevertheless confirmed the need for units to sustain links with parents and for individuals to have regular access to external communications which is seen as significant in maintaining morale. Personnel staffs in each of the Services have identified best practices to be adopted. These include better access to mobile phones, the provision of internet cafes and plans to hard-wire internet infrastructure into barrack blocks, all with the aim of improving the ability of personnel of all ages to maintain contact with their families. The parents of personnel under the age of 18 are written to, with background details of the training unit and the regime involved. In addition, some units are encouraging 'parent days' at which parents and families are able to visit their sons and daughters and discuss issues with appropriate staffs and unit personnel.

Iraq

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many individuals in each of HM armed services were (a) charged and (b) disciplined for failing to answer call-up for the conflict in Iraq. [132183]

Mr. Caplin: Only the Reserve Forces are subject to call-out. To date no members of the Reserve Forces have been charged for failing to report for mobilisation after being served with a call-out notice. However, a small number of cases are still under investigation.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 17 September 2003, Official Report, column 754W, on weapons of mass destruction, whether any of the civil servants searching for weapons of mass destruction were specifically recruited for this purpose. [132831]

Mr. Ingram: On 16 October there were six civil servants in Iraq working for the Iraq Survey Group who were specifically recruited to assist it in its task of searching for Iraq's weapons of mass destruction. This number will continue to change as new staff join and others complete their periods of duty.

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many ex-RAF personnel subject to reserve list regulations were called up for duty during operation Telic, broken down by occupation. [133172]

Mr. Caplin: There were 165 RAF ex-regular reservists accepted into service for duty on Operation TELIC. Information on their civilian occupations is not held centrally and could be provided only at a disproportionate cost.

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the total cost to date has been of weapons, missiles, munitions and ammunition used in (a) the conflict in Iraq and (b) security and policing since the end of the conflict. [133316]

Mr. Ingram: The Ministry of Defence identifies the costs of Operations in terms of the net additional costs it has incurred. The costs which the Department would have incurred had the operation not been undertaken—expenditure on wages and salaries or on conducting training exercises, for example—are deducted from the total costs of the operation.

Calculating all the costs of military action will take some time since they will include the cost of ammunition, bombs and guided weapons consumed in excess of peacetime levels and the cost of repairing and replacing equipment destroyed and damaged. I am afraid, therefore, that I cannot yet provide cost information in the detail my hon. Friend requires.

Private Tesoni Vakacakaudrove

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements were made for the inquest into the death of Private Tesoni Vakacakaudrove at the Defence School of Transport, Leconfield, on 6 October 2002. [132191]

Mr. Ingram: These arrangements are a matter for HM Coroner in line with the Coroners' system in England and Wales.

Sergeant Roger Timothy Paul Clements-Hunt

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many vehicles and of what description were involved in the motor accident resulting in the death of Sergeant Roger Timothy Paul Clements-Hunt on 8 March 2001 on army exercise in Germany; and what the findings of the health and safety investigation were. [132192]

Mr. Ingram: The two vehicles involved in this incident were a Danish registered Heavy Goods Vehicle and a Ministry of Defence (Army) Leyland DAF 4 ton GS truck. The incident was the subject of an investigation by the German Civil Authorities. I am not aware of any separate health and safety investigation.

Corporal Thomas Rees

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the result was of the accident inquiry following the death of Corporal Thomas Rees on 23 May; and what the principal recommendations of the inquiry were. [132193]

Mr. Ingram: This incident has been investigated by the appropriate Civil Police authority, the Land Accident Investigation Team, and the Health and Safety Executive. The Health and Safety Executive has yet to report its findings. An Army Board of Inquiry will be convened in due course. It would be inappropriate for me to comment until all this work has concluded.

Defence Export Services Organisation

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what procedures the Defence Export Services Organisation undertakes to ensure that special commissions for which it grants permission represent legitimate fees for services rendered. [132363]

Mr. Ingram: The Defence Export Services Organisation does not authorise the payment of commissions.

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether BAE Systems sought or obtained clearance from his Department or from the Defence Export Services Organisation for payment of agency commission in connection with the sale of defence equipment to South Africa; [132365]

(2) whether British Aerospace (a) sought and (b) obtained clearance from (i) his Department and (ii) the Defence Export Services Organisation for the payment of agency commission in connection with the sale of defence equipment to Qatar. [132367]

Mr. Ingram: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence gave on 1 September 2003, Official Report, column 899W, to the hon. Member for Twickenham (Dr. Cable).

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many requests for special commissions have been referred to the Defence Export Services Organisation since 1995; and how many such requests DESO have granted, in which countries and on what dates. [132364]

Mr. Ingram: None.

Aldermaston

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many over-flights in the controlled airspace of Aldermaston have been recorded for each year since 2001 for which figures are available; and how many prosecutions have followed. [132659]

Mr. Caplin: Since 2001 there have been three alleged incursions by military aircraft into the restricted airspace around AWE Aldermaston. The RAF Police Defence Flying Complaints Investigation Team investigated all these incidents and in each case it was found that no breach of the restriction had occurred. Alleged incursions of the restricted airspace by civilian aircraft would be the responsibility of my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Transport.

Colchester Garrison

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether the Ministry of Defence Police have jurisdiction over former Ministry of Defence dwellings and areas of the Colchester Garrison which have been sold by Annington Homes to private owners; [132813]

(2) whether the security of military personnel and dependants living in Ministry of Defence housing at the Colchester Garrison has been reviewed following the disposal of dwellings by Annington Homes; and if he will make a statement. [132812]

Mr. Caplin: The security situation in the Colchester estates that are now occupied by Service families housed by the Defence Housing Executive (DHE), owner-occupiers and civilian housing association tenants, is unchanged since I replied to the hon. Member's question on this matter on 18 June 2003, Official Report, column 246. The regular routine patrols continue and there has been no increase in crime since DHE's releases of surplus property and the lease of properties by AHL to Colne Housing Association.

Any incidents arising in the DHE patch are the responsibility of Ministry of Defence Police (MDP); the Essex police cover the non-DHE areas, and the two police forces assist each other when required. The Royal Military Police also patrol the estate. Overall these arrangements imply a greater police presence and better response times than anywhere else in Colchester.

75 per cent. of the DHE properties have the recommended level of door furniture security; the remainder have chains and spy holes but, in some cases, only 3-lever locks. These will be replaced with 5-lever locks in this financial year.

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether he has been consulted by Annington Homes over (a) the disposal of former Ministry of Defence dwellings at the Colchester Garrison and (b) proposals by Annington Homes for the development of private housing on the site; [132814]

(2) what discussions he has had with Annington Homes on proposals to demolish former Ministry of Defence housing at the Colchester Garrison and build private housing. [132811]

Mr. Caplin: Annington Homes Ltd (AHL) have not consulted the Ministry of Defence over the disposal of former MOD dwellings at Colchester Garrison or their proposals for the development of private housing on the site. Under the terms of the 1996 Sale Agreement it is entirely a matter for AHL how they dispose of the houses for which MOD has no future requirement and has handed back, or how they choose to redevelop a surplus site.

Departmental Staff (Scotland)

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the manning changes in Ministry of Defence staff in Scotland for each quarter since 1997; and if he will make a statement. [132544]

Mr. Caplin: The number of civilian personnel located in Scotland in each quarter since January 1997 to October 2003 is set out in the table.

Detached Duties

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to discuss with the Chancellor of the Exchequer the taxation of armed forces pay during detached duties. [133173]

Mr. Caplin: I have no plans for such discussions.

National Army Museum (North)

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions his Department has held with the Treasury on the granting of permission for the construction of the National Army Museum (North). [131703]

Mr. Caplin: The Ministry of Defence has had discussions with the Treasury on the National Army Museum (North) project and officials from both Departments last met, together with NAM staff, on 4 September 2003.

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what obstacles remain to the commencement of works at the National Army Museum (North); and when he envisages such work will begin. [131704]

Mr. Caplin: Work continues to resolve a range of outstanding issues on this project, though none is currently thought to be insurmountable.

Northern Ireland

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his estimate is of the number of Her Majesty's armed services personnel that have served in Northern Ireland since August 1969. [131961]

Mr. Ingram: Since August 1969, the total number of soldiers who have served at least one day in Northern Ireland is 322,120 while the number of officers who have served at least one day in Northern Ireland is 24,120. The figure for Officers is lower than that given in the answer to my hon. Friend on 5 March 2001, Official Report, columns 17–18. The inaccuracy has only come to light when we sought an update of those figures to answer this question. (These figures include regular soldiers, full and part-time members of the Ulster Defence Regiment and the Royal Irish Regiment. It also includes members of the TA who do not play any part in security operations in Northern Ireland, but it is not possible to extract these figures from the overall totals.)

In the case of the Royal Air Force 2,380 Officers and 26,010 Airmen/Airwomen are recorded as having received pay while serving in Northern Ireland and will therefore, have served at least one month in Province. Comparable information for the Royal Navy and Royal Marines is not available.

Organophosphates

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if adequate protective equipment is available to British military units using organophosphate pesticides; and if he will make a statement. [94734]

Mr. Caplin [holding answer 3 February 2003]: Personal Protective Equipment (PPE) for use by United Kingdom armed forces is available through the normal supply chain. The Ministry of Defence has procedures in place to enable requirements for PPE to be met within the specified timescales.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the average time taken to answer written parliamentary questions has been in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement. [119160]

Mr. Caplin: Defence Ministers aim to answer Named Day written questions on the day specified and Ordinary written questions within five working days. The average time taken to answer written parliamentary questions could be calculated only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many questions directed to him remain unanswered. [130756]

Mr. Caplin: In the current session, up to and including 15 September, some 4,575 parliamentary questions were tabled to the Secretary of State for Defence. As of 14 October, 88 (1.9 per cent.) of these questions remained unanswered.

Private Peter Watson

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what duties have been allocated to Private Peter Watson while on bail at Palace Barracks Holywood; what assurances were given to enable his release from custody; and what rank of officer made representations. [132479]

Mr. Ingram: In accordance with the Data Protection Act 1998,1 am unable to make public any personal data relating to Private Watson unless the relevant conditions are met.

Bail conditions are a matter for the civil courts. No assurances were sought from, or given by, the Ministry of Defence in connection with Private Watson's release from custody.

Recruitment

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people from Fiji have been recruited into Her Majesty's armed forces in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [132806]

Mr. Caplin: The number of Fijian recruits to the Army for the last five years is shown in the table.

Financial Year	Number
1998–99	20
1999–2000	315
2000–01	265
2001–02	490
2002–03	470

Figures for the Naval Service and Royal Air Force are not available, as this information is not held centrally.

Reserve Forces

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the outcome was of his review of reservists' pay on mobilisation. [132933]

Mr. Caplin: There has been no review of mobilised reservists' pay. When called out for mobilised service, reservists receive the same rates of pay and are generally entitled to the same allowances as their regular counterparts. In addition to receiving their military salary; reservists may claim financial assistance if their civilian earnings are greater than their military pay. The regulations governing the latter are currently under review.

Service Accommodation

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of housing accommodation on RAF operational UK bases has been identified as below tolerable standards. [133174]

Mr. Caplin: The Defence Housing Executive (DHE) manages and maintains Service family housing in Great Britain. As these properties are managed on a tri-Service basis, statistical information on the individual Services is not available.

DHE is working towards upgrading its entire core housing stock (around 41,000 properties) to Standard 1 for condition, the best standard of Service housing. Currently some 90 per cent. of Service families are in houses at either Standard 1 or Standard 2 for condition and only 63 core properties are still at Standard 4 for Condition, the lowest standard of Service housing.

In the last financial year DHE exceeded its Key Target of 1,200 upgrades, bringing 1,440 properties up to Standard 1. Partial upgrades are also undertaken, with plans for improvements to over 4,600 homes this financial year.

All properties are inspected before families move in to ensure that they are fit for occupation, and DHE has teams of technically qualified staff at regional and local level to deal with problems that occur during occupation.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Afghanistan

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the cross-departmental drug strategy to help Afghanistan achieve the target of eliminating poppy production within the next 10 years; and what plans he has to fulfil the role of international lead on counter-narcotics co-ordination in Afghanistan. [131772]

Mr. Rammell: The UK is the lead nation on Counter Narcotics (CN) in Afghanistan and has a Public Service Agreement (PSA) target to contribute to a reduction in poppy cultivation in Afghanistan by 70 per cent. in five years and by 100 per cent. in 10 years. The United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (UNODC) and the UK have worked with the Afghan Transitional Administration to help them produce their National Drug Control Strategy.

The UK has developed a plan of activities to support the Afghan authorities in implementing their Strategy, including law enforcement, institution building, drugs demand reduction and alternative livelihoods for poppy farmers. Progress is monitored by stakeholders across Government.

As the lead nation, the UK is contributing £70 million over three years and posting additional personnel to Afghanistan to lead this work. It is also planned to hold a counter-narcotics conference in January 2004 in Kabul, involving Afghan and international representation, to encourage further support for the delivery of this project.

Mr. Caton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the timetable is for elections in Afghanistan. [127138]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Under the Bonn Agreement, national elections are due to be held by June 2004. On 24 September in New York, President Karzai announced that the presidential elections will be held in June, in keeping with the Bonn Agreement, but that the parliamentary election will have to come later. However a firm timetable has yet to be agreed.

Voter registration has already started under the auspices of the United Nations, with priority being given to remote areas that will be inaccessible during winter months. Registration is scheduled to conclude in May 2004. An Interim Electoral Commission and a Joint Electoral Management Body were appointed on 26 July to begin preparations for the 2004 ballot. The Interim Electoral Commission will hand over to an independent Electoral Commission before the ballot next year.

Embassy Staff

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his answer of 17 September, 2003 ref.130397, on security clearance levels, for what reason locally-engaged personal assistants recruited by British embassies are subject to a lower vetting classification than the developed vetting required for UK-based personal assistants recruited for the same posts. [131295]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The appropriate level of security clearance for locally engaged personal assistants is determined, in accordance with HM Government's statement of vetting policy, as announced to the House on 15 December 1994 (Official Report, columns 764–66). The levels required for staff both locally engaged and UK based, are based on the need for them to have access to classified material. The requirement for such access for locally engaged personal assistants is usually different than for UK based personnel. In most cases locally recruited staff will not normally have access to classified material.

Slovakia

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on visas for Slovakian citizens before their accession to the EU. [131481]

Mr. Mullin: All visa regimes, including that in respect of Slovak nationals, are kept under review and are lifted when it is judged that the circumstances which gave rise to the imposition of the requirement have been addressed. The visa regime on Slovak nationals will be lifted as soon as possible and at the latest by May 2004, when the Slovak Republic becomes a full member state of the European Union.

Intergovernmental Conference

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, at the forthcoming Intergovernmental Conference, the Government will seek to amend Article III-206, with particular reference to the provision that states that: When the Union has defined a position on a subject which is on the United Nations Security Council agenda, those member states which sit on the Security Council shall request that the Union Minister for Foreign Affairs be asked to present the Union's position; and if he will make a statement. [131512]

Mr. MacShane: The Government will not seek to change the aforementioned provision in Article III-206 at the Intergovernmental Conference. This Article allows for a continuation of the current practice, in line with the Security Council's Rules of Procedure, whereby the Presidency can speak at open meetings of the Council. Under the new Treaty, the European Foreign Minister instead of the Presidency will represent the Union where non-members of the Council are permitted to speak and when the Union has defined a common position on the subject of the meeting.

The UK retains the right to speak in a national capacity as a permanent member of the Security Council. This is safeguarded in Art III-206.2, which states that > "Member States which are members of the Security Council will, in the execution of their functions, defend the positions and the interests of the Union, without prejudice to their responsibilities under the provisions of the United Nations Charter".

The Government would not accept the any proposal that meant giving up its permanent membership of the UN Security Council and the rights which go with that.

Military Nuclear Testing

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions (a) he and (b) members of his Department have had since April with representatives of (i) the US Administration, (ii) the governments of the EU member states, (iii) the governments of prospective EU

candidates, (iv) the Russian Government and (v) the Government of China about military nuclear testing; and if he will make a statement. [131530]

Mr. MacShane: My noble Friend, the Baroness Symons of Vernham Dean and officials spoke to representatives of governments from all the regional groupings at the Conference on the entry into force of the Comprehensive Nuclear Test Ban Treaty (CTBT) in September 2003, which was attended by 102 State Parties. In her speech to the Conference, Baroness Symons reiterated the UK's continued strong support for the CTBT. The full text of the speech is available on the Foreign and Commonwealth Office website: www.fco.gov.uk-speeches

Prior to the Conference, we also participated in an extensive EU lobbying effort, including with both the United States and China, to urge their ratification of the Treaty.

The UK has not carried out a nuclear explosion since November 1991. We signed the CTBT in 1996 and ratified it in 1998. We continue to urge all states that have not yet done so to sign and ratify the Treaty as soon as possible.

Euro

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much has been spent in each year by his Department in preparing for UK entry to the euro; how much his Department plans to spend on preparations for UK entry to the euro for each year from the current financial year up to and including 2005–06; and what estimates he has made of the total costs to his Department of changeover to the European Single Currency. [131593]

Mr. MacShane: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 14 October by my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary to the Treasury.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many speeches he has made since 1 June 2003 supporting entry into the eurozone. [131752]

Mr. MacShane: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has made clear the Government's position on EMU—and indeed the EU more broadly—repeatedly over the last four months. May I draw my hon. Friend's attention in particular to the speech he gave to the Foreign Policy Centre on 27 August 2003.

Pakistan

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with Pakistan. [131749]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The UK has a close relationship with Pakistan. This relationship is strengthened by our historical links to Pakistan and by the very large number of Pakistani-origin British citizens. We have regular engagement with the Pakistani Government at all levels on a range of issues. Our relationship was further strengthened by the successful visit to the UK by President Musharraf in June 2003. The Pakistani Foreign Minister will be making an official visit to the UK as a Guest of Government in November 2003.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will meet the new Pakistani High Commissioner. [131751]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary briefly met the new Pakistani High Commissioner at the Labour Party Conference and I had a substantive meeting with her on 22 September 2003.

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his answer of 2 July 2003, Official Report, column 311W, on Pakistan, whether consular access to Mr. Ahmed Omar Saeed Sheikh has been granted; and if he will make a statement. [131773]

Mr. Mullin: We continue to seek consular access to Mr Sheikh. As explained to my hon. Friend on 2 July, if Mr Sheikh is a dual national, the Pakistani authorities are not obliged to give us consular access or information. We will, however, continue to press for access to ensure Mr Sheikh's welfare. The British Deputy High Commission in Karachi last wrote to the Pakistani Ministry of Foreign Affairs on 30 July, reminding them of the provisions of the Vienna Convention. We have not yet received a response.

The British Deputy High Commission also wrote to Mr Sheikh's legal representative on 1 September, asking him to deliver a letter offering consular assistance to Mr. Sheikh. Mr. Sheikh's legal representative explained that an earlier letter from the Deputy High Commission had been passed to Mr Sheikh. He therefore declined to pass this more recent letter to Mr Sheikh.

Visas

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many letters from hon. Members were received by UKvisas in August 2003. [131882]

Mr. Mullin: In August 2003, UKvisas received 1,466 letters from Members of Parliament.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he intends to fill the post of Director of Visas, India. [131883]

Mr. Mullin: The post of Director of Visas in India is currently filled by Chris Dix. A decision as to who will replace him has not yet been made.

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the backlog of correspondence for UKvisas was on 1 September. [131885]

Mr. Mullin: Ukvisas's computer system only enables the user to view current information and does not allow access to historical information. On 1 October the backlog of correspondence stood at 370. This refers to individual letters or e-mails that had not been answered within our deadlines (20 working days to reply to members of the public and 15 working days to reply to Members of Parliament). From January to week ending 22 August, the correspondence section received 15,892 letters, an increase of 37.5 per cent. over the same period in 2002. Ukvisas has also seen a 50 per cent. increase in the number of e-mail enquiries it is receiving (currently around 5 per cent. a month). We are constantly seeking to improve our working practices to deal with this rise in demand and are also expanding our correspondence unit.

Turkey

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Turkish Government about the future entry of Turkey into the EU; and what issues were discussed. [132099]

Mr. MacShane: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs met Turkish Foreign Minister Abdullah Gul at UNGA on 25 September. He reaffirmed the UK's support for Turkey's EU candidacy and welcomed the significant progress that Turkey has made, particularly the 6th and 7th EU-related reform packages this summer. He and his Turkish colleague agreed that consistent and effective implementation of these is now crucial.

Call Centres

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether his Department plans to outsource call centre work to premises outside the United Kingdom. [132103]

Mr. Rammell: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) is currently managing a project to secure a private sector strategic partner to assist in the development and support of the next generation of its Firecrest IT infrastructure. The future management of the internal help desk will be part of discussions with the private sector, when this partner is appointed, probably next year. But there are no plans to place this work outside the UK.

The FCO uses the MM call centre based in Bristol to provide travel advice. There are no plans to change this service.

Iraq

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to visit Iraq to view the reconstruction programme. [132130]

Mr. Rammell: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary last visited Iraq on 2 July. His travel plans, including plans to visit Iraq, are kept under review. He hopes to be able to return soon. My noble Friend, the Baroness Symons of Vernham Dean, Minister of State for the Middle East, visited Iraq between 7 and 8 October.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how regularly he holds discussions with the US Secretary of State on the activities of coalition forces in Iraq. [132134]

Mr. Rammell: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary discusses all aspects of policy on Iraq frequently with the US Secretary of State.

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support the UK is giving to the Iraq Governing Council and cabinet. [132241]

Mr. Rammell: Ministers have established a dialogue with Governing Council members and Iraqi Ministers on providing assistance. British officials in Iraq help the Council and Ministries with policy and resources. Budgets for the Council and Ministries for 2003–04 have been agreed with the Coalition. We are engaging Iraqi Ministers at political level. My right. hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary, for example, hosted the Iraqi Foreign Minister on 7 October, and my noble Friend, the Baroness Symons of Vernham Dean met members of the Governing Council when she visited Baghdad on 8 October. Our policy objective remains to hand over full authority to Iraqis as soon as is practicable.

Cyprus

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his assessment is of the political situation in Cyprus. [132236]

Mr. MacShane: The British Government continue to believe that securing a comprehensive settlement in Cyprus by 1 May 2004, and enabling Cyprus to accede to the EU as a reunited island, is in the best interests of all Cypriots, and of the wider region. It is clear that a majority of people in both the Greek Cypriot and the Turkish Cypriot communities are also looking to their leaders to bring this about.

The best way to do so would be for the parties to re-engage on the basis of the detailed settlement proposals presented by the UN Secretary General. The Annan Plan is balanced, practicable and compatible with the EU acquis-the EU has frequently reiterated its strong preference for accession by a reunited island and its willingness to accommodate the terms of a settlement negotiated through the UN process.

President Papadopoulos has affirmed that he is ready to negotiate on this basis. Mr. Denktash's latest statements, however, suggest that he is opposed not only to the Annan Plan but also to the UNSG's Good Offices. We hope the Turkish side will find a way out of this rejectionist stance, in time to enable all Cypriots and Turkey itself to reap the benefits.

Democratic Republic of Congo

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his assessment is of the economic and political situation in the Democratic Republic of Congo. [132246]

Mr. Mullin: The political situation in the Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC) is encouraging. Apart from pockets of local violence the conflict has ended. The Transitional National Government in Kinshasa is in place. It has a huge task to exert its full authority throughout the country and to prepare for elections in two years, and it will have our full support.

The DRC's economy has been devastated by years of poor government and, latterly, war. The DRC has made significant progress in stabilising the economy through a three year government economic reform programme supported by a US$786 million IMF poverty reduction and growth facility. For the first time in 13 years the economy achieved positive growth levels in 2002. The situation should improve further, with the decision on 23 July by the international financial institutions to reduce the DRC's total external debt by around 80 per cent.—some US$10 billion in monetary terms.

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he intends to visit the Democratic Republic of the Congo to discuss social reconstruction. [132247]

Mr. Mullin: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary has no immediate plans to visit the Democratic Republic of Congo. But he and Ministers from both the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Department for International Development take every opportunity in contacts with the Transitional National Government to emphasise our readiness to support a range of post conflict development issues, including social reconstruction.

Somalia

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his assessment is of the current economic and political situation in Somalia. [132248]

Mr. Mullin: While Somaliland has organised successful elections, which have brought stability to that region, the overall situation in Somalia remains unsettled without any form of effective Government.

The Government continue to support the reconciliation talks between Somali leaders which are currently taking place in Nairobi under the auspices of the International Governmental Authority on Development (IGAD). We believe that these talks offer the best opportunity for securing a lasting peace.

The Somaliland economy has been hit hard by the ban on livestock exports to Saudi Arabia, due to fears of transmission of Rift Valley Fever. The economy is dependent upon remittances from the diaspora.

Bechtel

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the contracts for consultancy and other work carried out by Bechtel in each year since 1997, stating in each case (a) the nature of the work, (b) the value of the contract and (c) the duration of the contract; and if he will make a statement. [132596]

Mr. Rammell: We have not contracted with Bechtel during this period.

Public Diplomacy

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate he has made of the cost of promoting British branding and identity overseas in the last year for which figures are available; and what element of this expenditure promotes (a) Welsh, (b) Scottish and (c) Irish branding and identity as a distinct component of that of the United Kingdom as a whole. [131944]

Mr. Mullin: Our public diplomacy strategy aims to understand and improve foreign perceptions of the UK. It is overseen by a Public Diplomacy Strategy board made up of a number of government departments, the devolved administrations and other organisations which have an interest in the UK's "brand".

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) public diplomacy expenditure in Financial Year 2003–04 includes:

£1.9 million on a "Think UK" campaign in China, plus £360,000 for the development of campaigns in Central Europe (partnerships with accession states) and North America (UK Science and Technology) to run in 2004;

A £2.4 million public diplomacy challenge fund which will support 81 projects in 51 different countries;

£1.25 million for British Satellite News, supplying material to overseas broadcasters; £32. 35 million for scholarships to overseas students;

£825,000 on a major FCO web infrastructure project, which includes www.i-uk.com; a central portal site to promote the UK overseas jointly with our public diplomacy partners (British Council, Trade Partners UK, Invest UK and VisitBritain);

£797,201 on generic products, such as £292,461 on publications promoting the UK. Sums have also been allocated this FY for publications promoting specific regions:

£12,750 on Scotland

£25,300 on Wales

£24,658 Northern Ireland

£36,340 England

£200,000 for public diplomacy activity promoting the UK's science and technology achievements overseas.

In addition, the FCO provides grant-in-aid of:

£166 million to the British Council

£220 million to the BBC World Service

Other than the publications on the Devolved Administrations, the FCO has not allocated separate expenditure for the promotion of Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland overseas. However we actively encourage projects that promote their identity and they play an active role in our public diplomacy efforts, including participation in campaign steering groups as well as their representation on the Public Diplomacy Strategy Board.

Our worldwide network of Press and Public Affairs Officers also play an important role in promoting the UK identity overseas through their everyday work.

Burma

Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions the Government has had with (a) Germany, (b) Austria and (c) Italy on targeted EU sanctions against the Burmese Government. [130635]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We regularly discuss sanctions and other possible EU measures against the Burmese Regime with all our EU partners at official level. The EU Common Position on Burma was strengthened on 16 June. We stand ready to respond proportionately to changes that occur in Burma.

Colombia (Human Rights)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government is taking to ensure that basic human rights in Colombia are observed; if he will make it his policy to support the call for an International Labour Organisation Commission of Inquiry into Colombia; and if he will make a statement. [132081]

Mr. Rammell: The London Meeting on International Support for Colombia in July impressed upon the Colombian Government the importance of human rights. This was reflected in the London Declaration issued after the Meeting. I reaffirmed our position when I met the Colombian Foreign Minister in the margins of the UN General Assembly in September. I made clear that implementation of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights' recommendations on Colombia must be a prime concern in the Colombian Government's pursuit of security and stability in Colombia. Representatives in Bogota of the donor countries who attended the London Meeting will monitor progress.

The UK Government believe that improving workers' rights in Colombia is best achieved through a supportive approach. It considers the International Labour Organisation's Special Technical Cooperation Programme for Colombia an effective way of bringing about change. We do not think an ILO Commission of Inquiry at this stage would contribute to the Technical Co-operation process. We continue to monitor progress on the Programme, and will continue to discuss with the Colombian Government how best the international community can help improve workers' rights and the situation trade unionists face.

Jamaica

Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Jamaican nationals (a) applied for visitor's visas and (b) were refused in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [131459]

Mr. Mullin: The visa regime for Jamaican nationals was introduced on 9 January this year. From the period 9 January to 9 October, 21,328 Jamaican nationals applied for visas to visit the UK at our Embassies and High Commissions overseas. Of these, 8,340 were refused entry clearance.

Surplus Armaments

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent steps have been taken to encourage developing countries to destroy surplus stocks of (a) illegally and (b) legally held armaments. [131137]

Mr. MacShane: The UK believes the weapons of greatest concern in developing countries are landmines and small arms and light weapons (SALW). It is on those weapons that we focus our efforts.

The UK is at the forefront of international efforts to curb the problem of small arms proliferation and the damage they cause. The UK fully supports the UN Programme of Action on SALW and the OSCE document on SALW which commit states to dispose, preferably by destruction, of small arms stocks that are surplus to national requirements.

The UK strategy on small arms and light weapons is supported by the £20 million (2001–04) SALW Global Conflict Prevention Pool jointly funded by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Department for International Development and the Ministry of Defence. The UK has given the United Nations Development Programme £7.5 million over three years to help fund a global programme of weapons collection, stockpile management, capacity building and destruction. In addition, the FCO has also directly funded SALW destruction projects in five developing countries including part funding for an EU SALW project in Cambodia.

The Government spends approximately £15 million per year on humanitarian mine programmes. The Department for International Development is currently funding mine action in Iraq, Afghanistan, Sudan, Cambodia, Angola and Georgia. We also actively work towards the destruction of anti-personnel landmines by encouraging states which have not become party to the Ottawa Convention to ratify or accede at the earliest opportunity. Once party to the Convention, states are legally obliged to destroy stockpiled anti-personnel landmines and to clear mine-affected areas within a given timeframe.

Switzerland

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the treatment (a) British and (b) other EU nationals receive from the Swiss justice system; and if he will make a statement. [131929]

Mr. Mullin: As in other countries we would expect any British or other EU nationals to be treated in accordance with the accepted standards under international law. We are currently unaware of any particular concerns about the treatment British nationals receive under the Swiss justice system.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of bilateral agreements on the free movement of labour and trade, between the EU and Switzerland; what steps the Government is taking to ensure these agreements are adhered to; and if he will make a statement. [131930]

Mr. MacShane: The bilateral agreements on trade provide an effective framework for trade between the EU and Switzerland. Switzerland is the EU's most important trading partner after the United States. In 2002 Switzerland was Britain's fourth biggest market for goods outside the EU with exports valued at £3.3 billion. The UK is Switzerland's fifth biggest export market, valued at £4.9 billion in 2002.

The 1999 Agreement relating to free movement of workers between the EU and Switzerland allows member states and Switzerland to maintain quotas on granting residence to Swiss or EU workers respectively for a transition period up to 2014. The Agreement has been operating smoothly. The UK, like many member states, has chosen not to maintain such quotas, in the interests of reaping the full economic benefits of free movement of labour. Negotiations are now underway to amend this Agreement to take account of EU Enlargement.

The Commission is directly responsible for monitoring the bilateral Agreements and does so through a framework of Joint Committees that meet at least once a month. The Government follows this process and can raise any relevant issues in Council Working Groups in Brussels.

TREASURY

Job Numbers

Mr. Swire: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) private sector and (b) public sector jobs there were in the UK in each year since 1997. [132653]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Hugo Swire, dated 20 October 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question about jobs in the private and public sectors in the UK since 1997. (132653)

The attached table shows the job levels in the public and private sectors from August 1997 to August 2002 (the latest available data).

Job Levels by Main Sector in the UK, 1997–2002

Stamp Duty

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations have been received by his Department from businesses regarding the proposed change in stamp duty. [132156]

Ruth Kelly: Extensive consultation with external representative bodies has been conducted both before Finance Act 2003 and after. Representations have also been received and considered from individuals, companies and organisations affected by the proposals and many useful suggestions have been made. These have been used to inform decision making, one example being the amendments I am today proposing to the Stamp Duty Land Tax treatment of leases, where continued consultation, as promised in the Budget, has helped shape the revisions to the Finance Act 2003.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate his Department has made of costs to business arising from the proposed change in stamp duty; and if he will make a statement. [132159]

Ruth Kelly: The costs to business were included in the red book for the 2003 Budget.

Correspondence

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Totnes of 15 July concerning Mr. Ron Warner of Stoke Fleming, South Devon, acknowledged on 17 July (ref:/31877/2003). [132593]

Dawn Primarolo: I replied to the hon. Member on 28 August.

Debt

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the level of debt as a percentage of disposable income was (a) in general and (b) broken down by social class; and what the level of debt as a percentage of disposable income was in each of the last 10 years. [132453]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Michael Meacher, dated 20 October 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question on the level of debt as a percentage of disposable income in each of the last 10 years. (132453)

The available information is shown in the table below. The data for debt (households' total financial liabilities) and disposable income (households' gross disposable income) used in the calculations are national accounts series for the combined household and non-profit institutions serving households (NPISH) sectors. The accounts for the household and NPISH sectors are currently combined; separate estimates are not available.

Information broken down by social class is not available.

Household debt as a percentage of household disposable income

1993	106.5
1994	107.5
1995	106.6
1996	104.9
1997	104.8
1998	108.5
1999	111.7
2000	113.3
2001	116.8
2002	127.6

Equitable Life

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the timetable is for the completion and publication of the Penrose Investigation into the origins of the problems surrounding Equitable Life; and if he will make a statement. [132872]

Ruth Kelly: The timetable for completing his report is a matter for Lord Penrose.

Lord Penrose's report will be published as soon as practicable after it is received.

Family Incomes

Mr. Keith Bradley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the net income of a family with two dependent children aged 18 and 12 with a gross income of (a) £13,000 a year, (b) £13,500 a year, (c) £14,000 a year, (d) £14,500 a year, (e) £15,000 a year, (f) £15,500 a year and (g) £16,000 a year; and what assessment he has made of the sources of that net income. [132687]

Ruth Kelly: Given annual gross earnings, a single full-time earner family with two dependent children aged 12 and 18 in full time education would have an annual net household income in 2003–04 that is tabulated as follows:

Gross Earnings	Income Tax	National Insurance	Child Benefit	Working Tax Credit	Child Tax Credit	Total Tax Credits	Net Income
13,000	1,610	921	1,394	707	3,418	4,125	15,988
13,500	1,724	978	1,394	516	3,418	3,934	16,145
14,000	1,827	1,030	1,394	344	3,418	3,762	16,287
14,500	1,941	1,087	1,394	152	3,418	3,570	16,444
15,000	2,044	1,138	1,394	0	3,398	3,398	16,585
15,500	2,159	1,195	1,394	0	3,206	3,206	16,742
16,000	2,273	1,253	1,394	0	3,015	3,015	16,899

Industrial and Provident Societies

Linda Gilroy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has received from hon. Members regarding the audit and account provisions for industrial and provident societies. [133012]

Ruth Kelly: The Government has received a number of representations on this and other issues relating to industrial and provident societies. We are considering these as part of our ongoing work on the industrial and provident society sector.

Iraq

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what financial provision he has so far made for the cost of the UK's contribution to (a) the conduct of active hostilities in Iraq earlier this year, (b) the provision of troops subsequently and (c) the financing of reconstruction in Iraq. [132778]

Mr. Boateng: As the Chancellor said in his 2003 Budget statement, "I can confirm that I have set aside £3 billion, in a special reserve available to the Ministry of Defence so that our troops continue to be properly equipped and given the resources that they deserve and have a right to expect." Official Report, 9 April 2003, column 271.

It is too early to provide total costs of the military campaign in Iraq. However, the Ministry of Defence estimate for the preparatory phase, up to the point military operations began, at around £700 million.

(c) In April 2003, the Department for International Development set aside £210 million for reconstruction and humanitarian work in Iraq. £154 million of this has been allocated to UN agencies, the Red Cross and Red Crescent movement and NGOs. A further £60 million was set aside by the Chancellor in the Budget to support the work of the UN on the reconstruction and development of Iraq. DFID also provides 19 per cent. of European Community (EC) funding for Iraq. The total EC commitment to Iraq currently stands at £100 million.

Pensions

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer from which organisations he received representations on retirement pensions in the pre-budget consultation exercise last year, broken down by number of items received. [132660]

Ruth Kelly: The Chancellor receives representations from a wide range of organisations and interest groups on many topics which are relevant to retirement pensions. There is no central record of those making representations or of the number of items received from each of them.

Pool Re

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the annual premiums collected and payments made have been in each year since the establishment of Pool Re; and if he will make a statement. [132873]

Ruth Kelly: Pool Re was established in 1993. The information requested is as follows:

	Gross written premiums (£ million)	Paid claims
1993	222.1	47.6
1994	389.3	93.2
1995	195.8	86.4
1996	287.2	94.3
1997	318.8	124.9
1998	173.2	95.6
1999	50.8	42.4
2000	56.0	14.3
2001	70.8	3.0
2003	142.9	3.1
Total	1,906.9	604.8

Oil Revenue

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the Government's revenue receipts have been on a monthly basis since January 2002 from (a) sales of petrol, (b) sales of petroleum products and (c) North Sea oil production; and if he will make a statement. [132878]

Mr. Boateng: Monthly data for all hydrocarbon oil duties and Petroleum Revenue tax receipts is available on the Customs and Excise and Inland Revenue respective websites (www.uktradeinfo.com and www.inlandrevenue.gov.uk). Information on revenue receipts from North Sea oil production is only available on an annual basis, again from the Inland Revenue website.

Tax Burden

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the projected change in the overall tax burden as a percentage of GDP for 2003–04. [132988]

Mr. Boateng: The projected change in net taxes and social security contributions as a percentage of GDP in 2003–04, as shown in Table C10 of Budget 2003, is due to a number of factors, including:

The return to trend of financial company profits from their current depressed levels;

Normal fiscal drag; and Measures announced in Budget 2002.

Unemployment (Wirral, South)

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on levels of unemployment in Wirral, South since 1997. [132867]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Ben Chapman, dated 20 October 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question regarding the levels of unemployment in Wirral South since 1997. (132867)

The Office for National Statistics (ONS) compiles statistics of unemployment from the Labour Force Survey (LFS) following the internationally standard International Labour Organisation definition. However the survey sample size is too small to provide estimates for the Wirral South Parliamentary Constituency. ONS also compiles statistics of those claiming Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA) for local areas including Parliamentary Constituencies.

In September 1997, the number of JSA claimants in the Wirral South Parliamentary Constituency stood at 1,776. The corresponding figure for September 2003, the latest date for which information is available, is 851.

Banking

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made in implementing the findings of the Cruickshank report on United Kingdom banking; and if he will make a statement. [132871]

Ruth Kelly: There have been a number of recent developments.

Following a recommendation of the Julius Banking Consumer Codes Review Group, Professor Elaine Kempson independently reviewed the Banking code in November 2002. The majority of her recommendations were accepted and the new Banking Code came into force in March of this year.

Secondly, the OFT have agreed to a number of undertakings with the eight main clearing banks to address the findings of the Competition Commission Report into SME banking in March 2002. These remedies will make it easier for customers to shop around and to move accounts between banks. In addition the four leading clearing banks have agreed to offer SME customers in England and Wales an account paying interest of at least the Bank of England base rate minus 2.5 per cent., or a current account free of money transmission charges.

Thirdly, the Government will make an announcement shortly on the commitment to review the Financial Services and Markets Act two years after it came into force.

Finally, the Government remains committed to legislating to give the OFT new powers to ensure effective competition in payment systems, and will do so as soon as Parliamentary time allows.

VAT (Children's Clothes)

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what guarantees have been obtained from the European Commission that zero-rating of children's clothes for VAT purposes may continue beyond 2007; [131996]

(2) what research he has collated on the cost of (a) children's and (b) adults' clothing in each EU country. [131997]

John Healey: The Government does not need guarantees from the European Commission about the future of the UK's VAT zero rates. Any amendment to the EC Sixth VAT Directive must be agreed unanimously by all member states in the Council of Ministers, and the Government will not agree to changes which go against our national interests and social objectives.

The Government remains committed to retaining the UK's zero rates on children's clothing and footwear.

Data on the cost of children's and adults' clothing in the UK is routinely gathered by the Office for National Statistics and by the European Commission. In addition, Customs and Excise have collected pricing information on children's and adults' clothing and footwear from UK retailers.

This evidence shows that the benefits of the VAT zero rates for children's clothing and footwear in the UK are passed on to consumers.

Woodlands

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list woodlands which are in receipt of tax relief on condition of providing public access; what checks have been made in each case in the last year on whether public access is being provided; and what the result of the check was in each case. [132451]

Dawn Primarolo: Conditional exemption is not granted to woodlands as such, though many of the landholdings which have been exempted on account of their outstanding scenic, historic or scientific interest are wooded in whole or part. Details of conditionally exempt land, and the access available to them, are available on the Inland Revenue's website, at: www.inlandrevenue.gov.uk/heritage The website invites members of the public to report any difficulties they encounter in visiting exempted property: the Revenue cannot recall any recent instances of problems with access to woodland. The Countryside Agency and its counterparts make inspection visits on the Revenue's behalf at least once every five years to check that owners are complying with the undertakings they gave to secure exemption.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Milk

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list for dairy farmers within Shrewsbury and Atcham the average milk price in each month since 1997. [132208]

Mr. Bradshaw: We do not hold milk price information for specific areas of the UK. However, we do have national statistics for the monthly farmgate price of milk in the UK and the average monthly retail price paid by the consumer in the UK. These figures since January 1997 are as follows:

UK farmgate prices in pence per litre

Notes:
Average prices estimates include prices of delivered milk and shop bought milk. However, 80 per cent. price range includes only shop bought milk.
From February 2002, the average price for milk is calculated as the average price of one pint of delivered milk and the one pint equivalent of two pints of shop bought milk. However, the 80 per cent. price range (which is the range of prices with the top 10 per cent. and the bottom 10 per cent. excluded) only includes shop bought milk.

Beef Exports

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on progress in United Kingdom export negotiations to free up the export market for (a) beef and (b) live cattle. [132391]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Secretary of State has discussed beef exports with Commissioner Byrne on a number of occasions, most recently on 22 September at the informal Agriculture Council at Taormina. Defra officials have also had regular meetings with the Commission officials. The Commission has sought advice from the European Food Safety Authority (EFSA) on amending the Date-based Export Scheme (DBES) and our methodology of scaling up testing results to support our claim that restrictions should be lifted so that the UK can trade on the same basis as other member states. An EFSA Opinion is expected in early 2004.

Large Combustion Plants Directive

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what assessment the Department has made of the impact on jobs in the deep mine coal industry of the implementation of the Large Combustion Plants Directive through (a) a national emission reduction plan and (b) emission limit values as proposed on the present consultation; [132401]

(2) what analysis the Department has made of the impact on the deep-mined coal industry of the implementation of the Large Combustion Plants

Directive by (a) a national emission reduction plan and (b) emission limit values as proposed in the current consultation. [132413]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Government has just completed a consultation on a proposal to implement the Large Combustion Plants Directive for plants first licensed before July 1987 using a national plan. Officials have discussed the potential impact of the alternative implementation routes with representatives of the UK coal industry and have received consultation responses from the Confederation of UK Coal Producers and other bodies and organisations with an interest in UK coal mining. The Government will take a decision on the most appropriate implementation approach after considering all of the consultation responses.

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what modelling the Department has conducted of the financial dynamics of a sulphur dioxide trading scheme resulting from the implementation of the Large Combustion Plants Directive by a national emission reduction plan approach. [132407]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Government has just completed a consultation on a proposal to implement the Large Combustion Plants Directive for plants first licensed before July 1987 using a national plan. Analysis conducted for my Department suggested that such an approach would lead to significant cost-savings when compared to the alternative implementation approach. The financial dynamics of a trading scheme will depend on the decisions of operators of plants who take part in such emissions-trading. An outline of how such a trading scheme might operate was included in the consultation document but further consideration would be needed before the scheme could be introduced.

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what discussions she has had with (a) the UK mined coal industry and (b) trade unions about the likely impact of the Large Combustion Plants Directive implementation options proposed in the current consultation. [132409]

Mr. Bradshaw: Officials have discussed the potential impact of the alternative implementation routes for the Large Combustion Plants Directive with representatives of the UK coal industry, who have also responded formally to the Government's consultation paper. Consultations closed on 29 September but some responses are still being received. The Government will take a decision on the most appropriate implementation approach after considering the responses to the consultation.

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she expects to announce the Government's decision on the implementation options of the Large Combustion Plants Directive. [132410]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Government will take a decision on the most appropriate implementation approach after considering the responses to the consultation. If the UK is to adopt the national plan approach, the plan has to be with the European Commission by 27 November 2003.

Animal Movements

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on EU proposals in respect of improved controls for the welfare of animals during transit. [133101]

Mr. Bradshaw: We welcome publication of the Commission's proposals. They were overdue and now provide the opportunity to seek improvements in many areas, in particular, journey times, vehicle standards and enforcement. We have consulted widely and we are playing a full part in the forthcoming negotiations.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what information regarding animal welfare (a) on the journey and (b) at the final destination is requested by the animal exports division before authorisations for exports are granted; and if she will make a statement. [132442]

Mr. Bradshaw: Before livestock are exported, transporters must submit a Route Plan setting out details of the proposed journey. Officials check that the transporter is authorised, that the proposed journey times are within the maximum allowable for the species and that all necessary rest, watering and feeding breaks are included. If assembly centres, staging points or slaughterhouses are included in the planned journey, staff check that these are EU approved premises. The use of Staging Points also requires the transporter to provide a statement to the effect that the necessary health requirements will be met there and that the animals are booked into the premises on the dates specified on the Route Plan.

Once staff are satisfied that the proposed journey appears to meet these conditions, the plan is sent to a Local Veterinary Inspector. The animals are then inspected to ensure they are fit for their intended journey and that they meet the health requirements of transit and destination countries.

Supervised loadings of vehicles may be carried out to ensure only fit and healthy animals are loaded, that the vehicle is suitable and that stocking densities are correct. Animals for slaughter or fattening may be inspected on arrival at the port or transfer onto a vessel.

These checks are carried out scrupulously and only when all have been satisfactorily completed will the animals be allowed to start their journey.

Atrazine

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to ban atrazine in the UK. [132493]

Alun Michael: Atrazine is to be withdrawn from use as an agricultural pesticide throughout the European Community, following a full scientific review. Products containing atrazine will be withdrawn over an 18-month period which will begin on formal adoption of the relevant European Commission decision, which we anticipate within the next few months. However, certain 'essential uses' will be permitted until the end of 2007. The essential uses agreed for the United Kingdom are for sweetcorn and forestry.

Fisheries

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the fishing stop orders made in the last 12 months. [132528]

Mr. Bradshaw: No orders have been made in the last 12 months under the provisions of the Sea Fish (Conservation) Act 1967 prohibiting fishing for specified quota stocks. However, individual groups of fishermen, including the under10 metre fleet, have been prohibited from fishing for specified stocks through the variation of their fishing vessel licences.

GM Crop Trials

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the chemical weedkillers used in the farm-scale evaluation trials on the (a) GM and (b) non-GM part of the field; and what the extent of use of each herbicide was. [132154]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 14 October 2003]: The results of the farm scale evaluations of three spring-sown GM crops—including details of herbicides used, and the extent to which they were used—were published on 16 October by the Scientific Steering Committee and the research team that has overseen and carried out the evaluations. Copies of the results will be placed in the Library.

Illegal Chemicals (Agricultural Produce)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the role of her Department in preventing the importation of agricultural produce which has been subjected to illegal chemicals during its production. [131903]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I have been asked to reply.

The role of the Food Standard Agency (FSA) regarding importation of agricultural produce includes ensuring necessary action is taken to protect public health where the use of illegal pesticides or veterinary medicines is detected. The FSA receives information on these from the European Commission and from surveillance carried out by the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Defra). The FSA can also carry out its own surveillance where there are concerns for public health. The FSA and local authorities have regulatory powers to prevent food that poses a threat to human health from entering the food chain or to withdraw it from sale.

All food products of animal origin being imported to the United Kingdom from non-European Union countries are subject to documentary and identity checks at designated border inspection posts by an official veterinary surgeon. A percentage of consignments are subjected to a physical check, which may include laboratory tests for residues from illegal chemicals. These controls have been enhanced on certain produce from countries with known chemical residue problems. Products of non-animal origin are subject to routine inspection at ports of entry and may be examined, sampled and detained.

Products of animal origin from other EU member states must have been produced in accordance with harmonised EU rules for hygienic production. Such products are in free circulation in the EU as part of the EU single market, but are subject to inspection inland as part of routine enforcement and surveillance activities.

Given recent concerns over import controls, the FSA is taking forward a range of measures to improve the co-ordination and delivery of local authority inspection of imported foodstuffs and products of animal origin at ports and inland.

Special Advisers

Mr. Tyrie: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs on how many occasions between 31 March 2002 and 31 March 2003 (a) departmental and (b) non-departmental special advisers have travelled abroad in an official capacity; what places were visited; and how much each visit cost. [126665]

Margaret Beckett: Between 31 March 2002 and 31 March 2003, Defra special advisers travelled abroad in an official capacity on 12 occasions at an average cost of approximately £2,179 per trip. The countries visited were Belgium, Luxembourg, France, South Africa, Indonesia, USA, Canada and India.

All travel by special advisers is undertaken fully in accordance with the guidelines set out in the Ministerial Code and the Civil Service Management Code.

Waste Management

Paddy Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list those individuals and organisations who responded to her consultation paper on the Large Combustion Plant Directive; and if she will place a summary of the responses in the Library. [132325]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 16 October 2003]: Some 68 substantive responses have been received so far from individuals, businesses, trade associations representing industry sectors, environmental groups, regulators, and Government agencies. A list of consultation respondents follows. In addition, some 1,550 individual letters have been received so far from employees of the coal mining and associated industries. I will place a summary in the Library once we have completed our analysis of the responses.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Broadcasting Impartiality

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) what steps she is taking to ensure that television and radio channels broadcasting in the United Kingdom maintain political impartiality; [131975]

(2) what actions she is taking to ensure that television and radio channels in the UK maintain political impartiality. [132227]

Estelle Morris: The Government strongly supports impartiality in the broadcast media and there are relevant provisions in legislation to ensure that television and radio channels broadcasting in the UK maintain political impartiality.

Responsibility for what is broadcast on television and radio rests with the broadcasters and the broadcasting regulatory bodies—the Governors of the BBC, the Independent Television Commission, the Welsh Fourth Channel Authority and the Radio Authority. The regulators' codes of practice place a requirement on broadcasters to treat controversial subjects with due accuracy and impartiality, both in news services and in the more general field of programmes dealing with matters of current public policy or industrial controversy. It is for the regulatory bodies, not Government, to decide whether any particular broadcaster is or is not complying with its obligations regarding impartiality.

Under the Communications Act 2003 the Office of Communications (Ofcom) will have similar responsibilities for maintaining impartiality from the end of this year. The BBC Governors will retain their responsibility, under the Charter and Agreement, for maintaining the BBC's impartiality.

Football (Violent Behaviour)

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations she has made to (a) the Football Association and (b) the Football League about violent behaviour by professional footballers during matches; and if she will make a statement. [132835]

Mr. Caborn: Professional footballers have a duty to ensure that their behaviour on the field of play is of the highest standard. I wrote to the chairmen of all 92 league clubs before the start of the 2002–03 season to remind them of their responsibilities.

Since then, I have discussed the issues raised by player misbehaviour, and the responses of the football authorities, on a number of occasions during my regular and informal meetings with the management teams of the Premier and Football leagues.

Public Libraries

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps the Government are taking to ensure the long-term survival of public libraries in England and Wales. [132228]

Estelle Morris: In February 2003 this Department published "Framework for the Future", setting out the Department's vision for the future of public libraries in England during the next 10 years. "Framework for the Future" identified three central themes vital to the further development of public libraries, the promotion of reading and learning, improving access to digital skills and services and helping to build and improve community and civic values.

Resource, The Council for Museums, Archives and Libraries, has recently published a three-year action plan setting out a range of programmes to help libraries achieve the vision set out in "Framework for the Future". I am arranging for copies of this document to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses. DCMS and Resource will work closely with all stakeholders to ensure its success.

Responsibility for public library policy in Wales is devolved to the Welsh Assembly.

SCOTLAND

European Year of Disabled People

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what initiatives his Department (a) has undertaken and (b) is taking to commemorate 2003 as the European Year of Disabled people. [133286]

Mrs. McGuire: The Scotland Office has worked with the Disability Rights Commission, Capability Scotland and the RNIB on access issues for the Scottish Parliament elections. Additionally, my right hon. Friend, the former Secretary of State, and I have visited two of the three Scottish regional initiatives supported by the European Commission and the Department for Work and Pensions as part of EYDP.

Manufacturing

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland pursuant to his answer of 16 September 2003, Official Report, column 640W, to the hon. Member for Galloway and Upper Nithsdale, on manufacturing, why he estimates the number of people employed in the manufacturing industry in Scotland has fallen since 1997; and what his Department is doing to reverse this trend. [132899]

Mrs. McGuire: Scotland's manufacturing sector, along with that of other advanced economies, has experienced falling output in recent times, due to the global slowdown and re-structuring in key industries such as electronics. Opportunities to grow manufacturing are recognised within the Government's Manufacturing Strategy, published in May 2002, which identified seven key areas of activity. Action is being taken in all of these areas to help UK manufacturers improve productivity in difficult global conditions.

The Scotland Office will continue to work with the Scottish Executive and a wide range of manufacturing interests on initiatives such as the Scottish Manufacturing Steering Group.

Microsoft (Licensing Fees)

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was paid to Microsoft in licensing fees by his Department and its agencies in each of the last three years; and how much has been budgeted for (a) 2003–04 and (b) 2004–05. [130679]

Mrs. McGuire: Information Technology systems and support for the Scotland Office are provided through the Scottish Executive. Details of Microsoft licensing fees for the office are not held separately and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Official Engagements

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland pursuant to his answer of 15 September 2003, Official Report, column 575W, to the hon. Member for Galloway and Upper Nithsdale (Mr. Duncan), on official engagements, if he will list the Scotland Office official engagements he has undertaken since his appointment. [132900]

Mr. Darling: I have undertaken a number of both public and private engagements. It is not appropriate therefore to list them.

Winter Fuel Allowance

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many pensioner households are receiving winter fuel allowance in (a) the North East of Scotland and (b) Gordon. [132595]

Mrs. McGuire: For winter 2002–03, 70,435 households in the North East of Scotland (taken to include Aberdeen Central, Aberdeen North, Aberdeen South, Banff and Buchan, Gordon, Moray and West Aberdeenshire and Kincardine constituencies) received winter fuel payments. In Gordon, winter fuel payments were made to 10,045 households for winter 2002–03.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Appointments

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the people appointed to ad hoc posts within his Department bearing the titles of advocate, tsar, adviser, champion and comparable titles since May 1997; what their job title is or was; what their role is or was; whether they were or are being paid; what the total costs of each such person was in each financial year, including expenses and benefits; what the expected cost of each such person is in 2003–04; to whom they are accountable; and if he will make a statement. [112458]

Yvette Cooper: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister was created as a separate department on 29 May 2002. In the period since then, the Office has employed three Special Advisers, as defined in paragraph 50 of the Ministerial Code: Joan Hammell, Ian McKenzie, and Paul Hackett (part-time). Their role is to advise the Deputy Prime Minister and they are accountable to him for their decisions and actions. These are paid appointments. Under Exemption 12 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, remuneration details are not disclosed in order to protect the privacy of the individuals concerned.

Building Control Performance Standards Advisory Group

David Taylor: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what process governs membership of the Building Control Performance Standards Advisory Group; and if he will list the current membership. [132529]

Phil Hope: The advisory group was set up in May 2000 under the terms of a Memorandum of Understanding entered into by the Association of Consultant Approved Inspectors (ACAI), the Construction Industry Council (CIC), the District Surveyors Association (DSA), the Local Government Association (LGA), the Welsh Assembly Government (WAG) and the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions. The Memorandum of Understanding provides that the six signatory bodies nominate a total of 10 members. In addition, the Building Regulations Advisory Committee (BRAC) nominates one of its members. The Chairman of the Advisory Group is appointed by the Minister at the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister responsible for building regulations, after consultation between the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and the other five signatory bodies. The Memorandum of Understanding also provides for there to be members representing building users and construction clients, though these seats are not currently filled.

The current membership is as follows:

Chairman:

Michael Finn FRICS

Members:

ACAI: Tony Threadgold, Paul Timmins

CIC: Stuart Holt, David Lush

DSA: John Leney, Adrian Prest

LGA: Tony Hough, Geoff Luker

ODPM: John Thompson

WAG: Philip Gardiner

BRAC: Paul Allen

Compensation Claims

Mr. Battle: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much compensation has been paid in claims against local government in each year since 1990. [132738]

Mr. Raynsford: The information requested is not held centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Councillors

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to bring forward legislation to extend the tenure of councillors. [132913]

Mr. Raynsford: On 6 May 2003 the Government announced its intention to move the date of the English local council and Greater London authority elections in 2004 from 6 May to 10 June. This will enable them to be combined with the European Parliamentary elections and provide convenience to electors, enabling them to participate in all the elections at the same time rather than voting twice in a short period of time. As a consequence of combining these elections, the term of office for those sitting councillors in England affected will be extended by five weeks with that for councillors elected on 10 June 2004 being reduced by five weeks. The Government will shortly be consulting key stakeholders on draft legislation which facilitates these intentions. More generally there are no plans at present to bring forward legislation to extend the tenure of Councillors but the Terms of Reference of the current review of electoral cycles in local government, being undertaken by the Electoral Commission, includes identifying options for change which may include, if appropriate, options involving changes to councillor's terms of office

John Cryer: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will (a) estimate expenditure on councillors' allowances in each London borough in the past five years and (b) estimate expenditure on councillors' allowances in the financial year 2003–04 within each London borough. [133277]

Mr. Raynsford: The information requested is not held centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Essex Fire and Rescue Service

Mr. Francois: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many regular firefighters were employed by the Essex Fire and Rescue Service on 1 September. [132637]

Mr. Raynsford: Figures supplied by the Essex Fire and Rescue Service show that there were 933 whole-time firefighters employed on 31 August 2003.

Light Pollution (Astronomy)

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he will respond to the relevant recommendations of the Science and Technology Committee report on Light Pollution and Astronomy. [133593]

Keith Hill: The Government will aim to provide its response to the Science and Technology Select Committee report on Light Pollution and Astronomy within two months of the report's publication, as recommended by the Procedure Committee.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what estimate he has made of the revenue which would be raised by local authorities from charging (a) 100 per cent. council tax rate and (b) 100 per cent. business rate on long-term empty properties. [132448]

Mr. Raynsford: About £320 million per year would be raised by English local authorities if 100 per cent. council tax were charged on all long-term empty domestic property other than those subject to exemptions. This represents an additional £160 million because there is currently a 50 per cent. discount on council tax for long-term empty domestic properties. There are, in addition, some categories of long-term empty domestic property that are exempt from council tax. Figures for the revenue which would be raised if these exemptions were ended are not available.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister does not have sufficiently detailed records to be able to calculate what would be raised if long-term empty domestic property were subject to non-domestic rates rather than council tax.

About £1 billion per year in rates revenue in England is currently foregone as a result of reliefs granted on empty non-domestic properties. This comprises 100 per cent. mandatory relief on all non-domestic properties for the first three months for which they are vacant and, after three months: 100 per cent. mandatory relief for certain properties including factories and warehouses, 90 per cent. mandatory relief for charities and 50 per cent. mandatory relief for other properties.

Mobile Phone Masts

Bob Russell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many planning appeals by mobile telephone companies against the refusal of local authorities for telephone masts have been made in each of the last three years for which figures are available; and of these how many were (a) successful and (b) turned down. [132815]

Keith Hill: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The following information relates to appeal decisions about telecommunications development generally.

	Received	Withdrawn	Allowed	Dismissed	Total decisions
2000–01	135	7	81	39	120
2001–02	284	18	89	69	158
2002–03	232	46	164	123	287
2003–04[1]	116	0	44	26	70

[1] Up to 17 October 2003

Note:
All figures relate to the year in which the appeal was received, not necessarily the year it was decided.

Bob Russell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will advise the Planning Inspectorate to give greater weight to the views of local authorities when determining planning appeals made by mobile telephone companies against the refusal of applications for telephone masts. [132817]

Keith Hill: Planning Policy Guidance Note 8 Telecommunications (PPG8) already advises that all relevant matters will be considered as appropriate at all stages of the planning process.

Bob Russell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what guidance has been given to the Planning Inspectorate to take into account health concerns as a reason for local authorities to refuse planning applications by mobile telephone companies for the erection of telephone masts; and if he will make a statement. [132818]

Keith Hill: The Courts have held that the Government's statements of planning policy are material considerations which must be taken into account, where relevant, in decisions on planning applications. These statements cannot make irrelevant any matter which is a material consideration in a particular case. Where such statements indicate the weight that should be given to relevant considerations, decision-makers must have proper regard to them.

The guidance in Planning Policy Guidance Note 8 Telecommunications (PPG 8) says that health considerations and public concern can in principle be material considerations in determining applications for planning permission for telecommunications developments. Whether such matters are material in a particular case is ultimately a matter for the courts. In the first instance, it is for the decision-maker to determine what issues are material in any particular case and what weight to attach to them.

Nevertheless, PPG8 states clearly that, in the Government's view, if a proposed mobile phone base station meets the international guidelines for public exposure (ICNIRP guidelines) it should not be necessary to give further consideration to the health aspects and any concerns about them, in processing an application for planning permission.

Parish Councils

David Taylor: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to increase parish councils' powers under section 137 of the Local Government Act 1972. [132898]

Mr. Raynsford: Section 118 of the Local Government Act provides for the maximum amount that a parish or town council can spend per elector under section 137 of the Local Government Act 1972 to be automatically uprated in line with the annual change in the retail prices index. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister intends that this power will come into effect in time for the next financial year.

This is additional to the increase in the maximum amount, from £3.50 to £5.00 per elector per year, that took effect at the start of the current financial year.

Parliamentary Questions

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many Questions directed to him remain unanswered. [130753]

Yvette Cooper: At 10 October 2003 of the 2,743 House of Commons Parliamentary Questions tabled to the Deputy Prime Minister in this Parliamentary session, 42 Questions remain unanswered and of these 12 were tabled since 8 September.

Regeneration Schemes

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the regeneration schemes in (a) the last 10 and (b) the next three years, together with their (i) allocated amounts and (ii) actual amounts spent. [130054]

Yvette Cooper: Information on past regeneration schemes can be found in the Annual Reports of the former Department of the Environment; the former Department of the Environment Transport and the Regions; the former Department of Transport, Local Government and the Regions; and the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister. Copies of these are available in the Libraries of the House.

Information about regeneration programmes to be funded between 2003–04 and 2005–06 by the Office can be found in "Sustainable Communities: building for the future" published in February 2003. A copy of this is also available in the Libraries of the House.

US Ships (Dismantling)

Norman Baker: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the plans by Able UK to dismantle ships from the US Reserve Fleet and the relevant planning permission needs in respect of dry dock facilities. [133293]

Keith Hill: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister understands that Able UK has entered into a contract with the US Marine Administration to dismantle ships from the US Reserve Fleet. The decision on whether planning permission is needed for this operation, and for any associated development, and the determination of any planning applications, are, matters for Hartlepool Borough Council, in accordance with their local planning responsibilities.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Criminal Records

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long on average it took to process an application for screening for criminal records of care home workers in (a) July 2002, (b) October 2002, (c) January 2003, (d) April 2003 and (e) July 2003. [127463]

Paul Goggins: Information is not available in the form requested. There are no IT procedures at present to extract this information from the Criminal Records Bureau database. It is expected that, as systems develop, this information will become available at some point in the future.

However, average turnaround times for Standard and Enhanced Disclosures during the periods specified are shown in the table:

Days

	Standard	Enhanced
July 2002	16.71	21.04
October 2002	16.75	32.00
January 2003	26.00	47.72
April 2003	12.27	23.18
July 2003	19.25	25.91

The turnaround times for January are higher than usual because of lost production days between Christmas and New Year due to staff holidays, and a training and consolidation exercise of new PNC procedures.

The Criminal Records Bureau has been steadily improving its performance and output since October 2002. The increase in July can be attributed to a surge in applications during the last two weeks in June in advance of an increase in fees coming into effect on 1 July. Approximately 50,000 additional applications were received above the Bureau's normal intake at that time of about 43,000 applications per week. While this increase in applications temporarily increased the turnaround times for applications, the Criminal Records Bureau nevertheless continued to meet its service standard targets.

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will exempt voluntary organisations from the recent increase in the level of charges to the Criminal Records Bureau for the remainder of financial year 2003–04 in respect of checks for paid staff; [127306]

(2) what estimate he has made of the cost to voluntary organisations in financial year 2003–04 of the increase in the level of charges for checks by the Criminal Records Bureau in respect of paid staff. [127398]

Paul Goggins: We have no plans to exempt paid employees of voluntary organisations from paying the higher rates of fee which came into force on 1 July. Responsibility for paying the fee rests primarily with the individual applicant, although it is open to the employer to reimburse the charge. Charging a lower rate in some cases would mean adjusting the charge for others, who may be not better-placed to pay. Checks remain free to volunteers, saving the voluntary and community sector an estimated £10 million in the current financial year.

I have placed in the Library a Regulatory Impact Assessment which assesses the impact of the fee increase across all sectors.

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the changes to the disclosure levels regarding information which the Criminal Records Bureau will be required to provide to local authorities when they check on the suitability of persons to become Hackney carriage or private hire drivers; and if he will make a statement. [129184]

Paul Goggins [holding answer 11 September 2003]: At present, all applicants for licences as taxi and private hire vehicle drivers are eligible for a Standard Disclosure. Some—principally those whose duties regularly involve being in sole charge of unaccompanied children (for example, under a school contract) or vulnerable adults—are eligible for an Enhanced Disclosure. Earlier this year, as part of a wider consultation exercise about recommendations of the Independent Review Team appointed by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary to look at the operation of the Criminal Records Bureau (CRB), we sought views on a proposition that the criteria for levels of Disclosure should be set by Ministers, in consultation with relevant stakeholders, on the basis of risk assessment and that it would then be the function of the CRB to ensure that the criteria were observed. An analysis of the responses received was placed in the Library on 5 June. We have since received a number of representations on this matter, instigated by the National Association of Taxi and Private Hire Licensing and Enforcement Officers. These argue that licensing authorities should determine the level of Disclosure required. This view will be taken into account in arriving at a conclusion on the matter.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Criminal Records Bureau will issue a disclosure for Kau Bellah, CRB reference 2270071. [131176]

Paul Goggins: A disclosure was issued for Kau Bellah on 24 September.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with colleagues from the Department of Health on the proposal of care home owners to seek a delay in the implementation of Criminal Records Bureau plans to require complete record checks prior to the employment of staff. [131324]

Paul Goggins: None. I am aware that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health has received a number of representations from representatives of the care home sector in the light of the National Care Standards Commission's decision to withdraw its interim guidance on Criminal Records Bureau checks for care home staff.

The National Care Standards Commission, as the independent regulator, issued a press release on 22 September in order to make its position clear on this matter. It is available on the Commission's website at www.carestandards.org.uk.

Aylesbury Young Offenders Institution

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his response to HM Chief Inspector of Prisons' report on Aylesbury YOI, published on 14 August. [130540]

Paul Goggins: The Prison Service produces an action plan for each inspection report based on the Chief Inspector's recommendations. Action plans list every recommendation and progress towards implementing each one. I see the original action plan and subsequent progress reports.

The initial action plan for Aylesbury Young Offenders Institution should be ready by mid-October.

Child Abuse Investigations

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps have been taken to ensure that, when the police conduct a trawl in child abuse investigations, complainants are offered victim support services from an early stage of involvement in the investigation. [128353]

Paul Goggins: The Handbook for Senior Investigating Officers produced by the Association of Chief Police Officers and the Government's Inter-Agency Guidance both detail steps to be taken to ensure that victims of historical abuse are offered victim support services as an initial step. The Inter-Agency Guidance says that "an unequivocal victim support strategy and protocol should be established at the outset" of investigations, including consideration and support for victims both during and after an investigation.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Government will reform (a) the law of similar fact evidence, as recommended by the Home Affairs Committee, to require a striking similarity in historical child abuse cases and (b) the law of severance to introduce a presumption in favour of severance in cases where the similar allegations are inadmissible on a similar fact basis. [128357]

Paul Goggins: The Government set out its position on these issues in its response, published in April this year, to the Fourth Report of the Home Affairs Committee (Session 2001–02) "The Conduct of Investigations into Past Cases of Abuse in Children's Homes":

"55. The Committee's recommendation [that the law of similar fact evidence is reformed to require a "striking similarity" in historical child abuse cases] would return the law on similar fact evidence (for these cases) to the position that applied following the case of Boardman in 1975. However, the test for admitting such evidence has developed since then to recognise that its value is not limited to cases of "striking similarity". For example, multiple accusations against an offender have a significance that derives from the unlikelihood that a person will be independently falsely accused of offences of a like nature, whether or not there is a particular degree of similarity. Whilst such accusations do not establish that an incident is true, and issues of collusion need to be considered carefully (as they would if the threshold were "strikingly similar"), such evidence is certainly relevant to assessing the cogency of a witness's account. Evidence of other incidents might also be relevant when considering an innocent explanation put forward by the defendant—what might credibly be explained as a mistake on one occasion becomes much less so in respect of repeated incidents. Here, too, the relevance of the other allegations does not depend on establishing a particular level of similarity between the events.

56. The Government is therefore concerned that reverting to the "strikingly similar" test would risk denying juries and magistrates a range of potentially highly relevant evidence. Our approach, as embodied in our proposals for reforming the law on evidence of bad character in the Criminal Justice Bill currently before Parliament, is to enable juries and magistrates to hear the widest range of relevant evidence that will assist them to reach a fair verdict. The admissibility of bad character evidence should therefore depend on its relevance to the issues in the case, rather than on a particular degree of similarity.

57. We are not, however, complacent that dangers cannot arise where evidence is admitted in these circumstances. However, there are safeguards to ensure that trials are fair. For example, in determining whether to admit the evidence, the courts must consider whether it would be more prejudicial than probative. The judge will therefore be able to direct that the charges be considered evidentially separate if necessary. And where this might not be sufficient to secure a fair trial, the judge can order that the various charges are tried separately, ensuring that the jury in each case is not aware of the evidence in the others. The Criminal Justice Bill also proposes that judges should be under a duty to withdraw a case from the jury where it becomes clear that seemingly independent allegations are in fact the result of collusion or other distortion and a conviction would be unsafe.

58. The Committee also recommends a presumption in favour of ordering separate trials where allegations cannot be heard as evidence in support of each other on a similar fact basis. In their judgement in the case of Christou (1997), dealing with the severance of charges for sexual offences, the House of Lords held that a trial judge should exercise his discretion to sever to achieve a fair resolution of the issues. This is buttressed by the Human Rights Act 1998, which makes it clear that the courts must act in a way that is compatible with the European Convention on Human Rights including ensuring a fair trial. Given the centrality of fairness to the issue of severance, it is not clear what the proposed presumption would substantively add. The Committee is concerned that "sexual offences tend to engender greater prejudice than non-sexual offences" (paragraph 96). However, we do not agree that this warrants a special rule to deal with historic child abuse cases: the issue of prejudice will clearly be an important aspect of deciding whether severance is required and to the extent that there is a greater risk of prejudice in any particular case, whether of historic child abuse or any other, the argument in favour of severance will clearly be stronger."

Consultancies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many consultancies were commissioned by his Department in the last two years for which figures are available; and what the cost of those contracts was. [130892]

Fiona Mactaggart: The available information held by the Home Office on the cost for the use of external consultants for the financial years 2000–01 and 2001–02 is given in the table.

Year	Number of Consultancies Commissioned	Cost of contracts (£)
2000–01	Not known	27,877,286
2001–02	145	21,147,058

We do not hold data on the number of consultancy contracts awarded for 2000–01 and to obtain this date would result in disproportionate cost. Information on cost or number of commissions for 2002–03 is not yet available.

The increase in expenditure on consultancy in 2000–01 is primarily due to a major investment programme in the modernisation of the Home Office and in particular on IT related modernisation.

Criminal Justice Bill

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Government will adopt the recommendation by the Home Affairs Committee to amend the Criminal Justice Bill so that where the prosecution wish to interview a defence witness in advance of trial (a) they should be required to notify the defence and offer to interview the witness in the presence of the defence and (b) that interview would be tape-recorded. [128523]

Paul Goggins: A Government amendment to Part 5 of the Criminal Justice Bill was agreed by the House of Lords on 14 July 2003. This introduced a new clause requiring the Secretary of State to prepare a code of practice giving guidance to police officers in relation to the arranging a conduct of police interviews with defence witnesses. This provides that the code must include guidance on the notification and presence of the accused's solicitor at the interview. It is also the Government's intention that the code should include guidance on making an accurate recording of the interview either by writing or audio-recording where this is appropriate. Further details of the amendment may be found in the House of Lords, Official Report, 14 July 2003, columns 744–45W.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the Criminal Justice Bill's proposal to allow for greater admission at trial of a defendant's previous convictions. [128649]

Paul Goggins: The Criminal Justice Bill reforms the rules governing the admission of bad character evidence in criminal proceedings. The law already acknowledges that this sort of evidence has a proper role to play in appropriate circumstances. However, the rules governing its admission have developed in a piecemeal fashion and lack a rational and coherent structure. Our proposals will provide a new and comprehensive statutory scheme that puts the law on a clear and accessible footing.

Evidence will be admissible where it is relevant to a case and provided that there isn't an adverse affect on the fairness of the proceedings. There will be a number of safeguards for defendants, including a power for judges to exclude evidence where its prejudicial effect would outweigh its probative value.

The Bill also offers new protection to witnesses to ensure that questions relating to their previous conduct has a clear bearing on the issues in the trial.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effects the proposal in the Criminal Justice Bill to allow for greater admission at trial of a defendant's previous convictions will have on criminal trials. [128650]

Paul Goggins: The Criminal Justice Bill reforms the rules governing the admission of bad character evidence in criminal proceedings. Our proposals will provide a new and comprehensive statutory scheme that puts the law on a clear and accessible footing.

Evidence will be admissible where it is relevant to a case and provided that there is not an adverse affect on the fairness of the proceedings. There will be a number of safeguards for defendants, including a power for judges to exclude evidence where its prejudicial effect would outweigh its probative value.

The Bill will encourage the admission of evidence of bad character in appropriate circumstances, ensuring that jurors and magistrates have available to them a full picture of the case. Rationalising and clarifying the rules will reduce the scope for legal arguments and make it more predictable for defendants when their record may be given in evidence.

The new statutory scheme deals with witnesses as well as defendants, and offers new protection to ensure that questions about witnesses' previous conduct have a clear bearing on the issues in the trial. This will ensure a better balance between the rights of defendants and interests of witnesses.

Home Detention Curfew Orders

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners released on home detention curfew were unlawfully at large on the latest date for which figures are available, broken down by (a) category of offence, (b) contract region and (c) police force area; and what penalties have been imposed on each contractor as a result. [124916]

Paul Goggins: There were 296 prisoners unlawfully at large as at 30 June 2003 (out of 75,000 prisoners who had been released on Home Detention Curfew between January 1999 and 30 June 2003) and who subsequently had their licences revoked for breaching the conditions of the scheme. The following table gives a breakdown of these prisoners according to their index offence. The Prison Service does not record centrally the contract region or police area for each of these prisoners and to provide such information would be at disproportionate cost. However, amendments to data collection systems will be made so that such information can be stored in the future.

Once a prisoner has been reported unlawfully at large, it is the responsibility of the police and not the electronic monitoring contractor to apprehend that person. Therefore there is no financial penalty imposed upon the contractor in respect of these prisoners.

Drug Rape

Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what campaigns his Department is funding directed at warning people of the danger of drug rape; and what plans he has to do so in the future. [129618]

Caroline Flint: When the drug Gammahydroxybutyrate (GHB), commonly used in drug rape, was outlawed by the Government in July 2003, we ensured that this was accompanied by high media coverage.

In addition, the Eastern Government Office Drug Team recently supported production of a new drug rape awareness video called Spiked! The Production of the video was funded through Drugscope's Millennium Awards scheme. The video was launched at the end of September and will be shown in public and university cinemas until November in Eastern Region cinema during screenings of newly released films. These showings are supported by the Regional Screen Agency for the East of England. The stylish but hard-hitting infomercial aims to increase awareness of the dangers of drug rape and make people aware of how they can protect themselves.

Finally the Government's new drug awareness campaign, FRANK also supplies information about date rape. The FRANK website www.talktofrank.com pays particular attention to GHB. It warns the reader that GHB has been linked to rape cases. It states '. . . because it's almost tasteless it's easily slipped in a drink'.

Food Expenditure

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much was spent on food by his Department and by each of the agencies for which it is responsible in (a) 2001–02 and (b) 2002–03; what proportion of that food by value was produced in the United Kingdom; what guidance he has issued to encourage the procurement of home-produced food; and if he will make a statement. [129369]

Fiona Mactaggart: The Home Office (with the exception of the Prison Service) is not a direct purchaser of food as this is provided through Facilities Management Contracts. Food purchased directly relates to official hospitality and where applicable we pay a subsidy to the Facility Management contractors for the provision of food in staff restaurants. By subsidising the costs of meals in the staff restaurants we are able to reduce the daily costs of staff working in central London which aids staff retention and provides them with a variety of nutritional snacks and hot meals.

Due to the disproportionate costs I am unable to provide you with all the details requested. I have though highlighted the subsidies that apply to the central London Headquarters and Croydon estates.

	Central London HQ	Croydon Estate
Expenditure on canteen subsidy 2001–02 (£)	218,000	99,716 (January-December 2001)
Percentage of food products produced in the UK	Not known	Not known
Expenditure on canteen subsidy 2002–03 (£)	179,000	79,098 (January-December 2002)
Percentage of food products produced in the UK	62	Not known

The Prison Service recorded expenditure on food was £40,155,638 in 2001–02 and £42,357,666 in 2002–03. No data is held on the value of food produced in the United Kingdom for 2001–02. In 2002–03, £31,104,289 (73 per cent.) was produced in the United Kingdom.

The Home Office and Prison Service are both working with Department for the Environment, Farming and Rural Affairs (Defra) on the Sustainable Food Procurement Initiative which is part of the Government's strategy for Sustainable Farming and Food. This is intended to encourage the public sector to procure food in a manner that promotes Sustainable development and does not discriminate against local and UK suppliers. As part of this the Home Office and Prison Service have developed separate action plans that will be used to measure progress towards meeting the initiatives objectives.

Timber

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the inquiry into the use of Indonesian rainforest timber at 2 Marsham Street will be completed; and if he will place a copy of the report in the Library. [131677]

Fiona Mactaggart: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms Walley) on 1 September 2003, Official Report, column 985W. The report was prepared for internal use. An edited version is being placed in the Library which omits text covered by the exemptions in Part 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. The recommendations have been and are being implemented. Arrangements for monitoring construction timber purchased by the developer for their own use have now been put in place. This is in addition to the previously planned arrangements for monitoring timber that will be part of the new building. Despite extensive inquiries the developer has been unable to establish precisely the source of the timber used to manufacture plywood previously supplied to the site.

Juvenile Prisoners (Strip Searches)

Dr. Vis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether the guidelines for strip searching juvenile prisoners are the same as for strip searching children in (a) local authority secure children's homes and (b) secure training centres; [130240]

(2) whether the guidelines for strip searching juvenile prisoners are the same as for adult prisoners; [130241]

(3) whether force may be used to strip search a juvenile prisoner. [130242]

Paul Goggins: The Prison Service Security Manual gives instruction to all prisons on how to strip search prisoners in line with Prison Rule 41 and Young Offender Institution Rule 43. The frequency with which this is carried out is generally decided by the prison governor and the area manager, except for certain activities where there is mandatory routine strip searching, such as reception.

There is no equivalent central guidance issued by local authority secure children's homes. Each home operates its own policy according to their security needs. Some homes do not strip search any young persons in their care, while others may strip search all new arrivals. Strip searching may also be carried out where there is suspicion that illicit items are being concealed, sometimes with the assistance of the police. The methods used to perform a strip search are also decided by each centre without central guidance.

The Secure Training Centre (STC) Rules 1998 and the Operational Procedures of the companies that run the three STCs provide guidance that must be followed by staff involved in strip searching. These techniques are similar to those used by the Prison Service.

The current Prison Service Policy on strip searching in the Security Manual (Prison Service Order 1000) applies to all categories and types of prisoner. This includes instructions on techniques and frequency of strip searching.

The Prison Service recognises the sensitivities around the strip searching of young prisoners, and separate guidance has recently been issued to Governors of prisons holding juvenile prisoners emphasising the need for staff to be aware of specific child protection issues.

Training modules for new entrant officers also include specific advice for staff involved in conducting strip searches of young prisoners. Officers conducting strip searches are expected to be aware of the ways in which searches, and the way they are conducted, may affect young people.

Young Offender Rules and the Prison Service Security Manual allow force to be used where a young person refuses to comply with a lawful order to submit to a strip search. No more force than is necessary will be used and it will be used only as a last resort.

Community Policing

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police forces operate a system of named local police officers. [131657]

Ms Blears: The Home Office does not have information centrally on those police forces that operate a system of named local police officers. Community policing is emphasised to different degrees by different police forces.

Citizen focused policing prioritises the need to access, understand and engage with communities by ensuring that the citizen perspective is embedded within their decision making, policies, practices and service delivery, in order to improve police effectiveness. We want to see all police forces putting more effort into actively engaging with their local communities. The Community beat officer is a vital link between the police service as a whole and the local community.

Probation Services

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether there will be a shortfall in the (a) National Probation Service and (b) National Probation Directorate budget for 2003–04. [131164]

Paul Goggins: The 2003–04 settlement added £70 million to the probation budget. An overspend on this budget is projected but this is not unusual at this time of the financial cycle and by the end of the year it is anticipated that the budget will be in balance.

Terrorism Act

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many stops and searches have been carried out during 2003 by each police force in the UK under section 44 of the Terrorism Act 2000. [131585]

Mr. Blunkett: Figures on stops and searches under Section 44(1) and Section 44(2) of the Terrorism Act 2000 are published annually in the Home Office Statistical Bulletin. The latest published figures are for the financial year 2001–02. These are set out in the table. Figures for 2002–03 are due to be published in November this year. Figures for 2003–04 will be published when the relevant data has been collated and verified.

[1] Formerly section 13A and 13B of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989 and repealed under the Terrorism Act 2000 which came into force on 19 February 2001.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of those stopped and searched during the current year under section 44 of the Terrorism Act 2000 have been (a) arrested, (b) charged with an offence and (c) charged with a terrorism offence. [131586]

Mr. Blunkett: The data collected on stops and searches made under Section 44 of the Terrorism Act 2000 is not automatically cross-referenced by the forces with the data they hold on arrests or on those charged. This information could therefore be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

British-Irish Council

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many times the British-Irish Council has met since April 1998. [132092]

Mr. Leslie: The British-Irish Council has met on the following occasions since its inception in December 1999:

Summit Level

17 December 1999;

30 November 2001;

14 June 2002; and

22 November 2002.

Sectoral formats

2 October 2000—BIC Environment Ministers;

19 December 2000—BIC Transport Ministers;

25 February 2002—BIC Environment Ministers;

22 March 2002—BIC Drugs Ministers;

16 January 2003—BIC Environment Ministers; and

7 February 2003—BIC Drug Ministers.

The next British-Irish Summit is due to take place in November 2003, and a meeting of BIC Environment Ministers is due later this month. There have also been many official-level meetings and associated events, including seminars and conferences.

Good Friday Agreement

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what measures have been taken in the last 12 months to promote co-operation in matters concerning work and pensions through the east-west dimension of the Good Friday Agreement. [131948]

Mr. Leslie: Strand Three of the Belfast or Good Friday Agreement did not identify work and pensions as one of a number of possible issues for early discussion within the British-Irish Council. The Council is currently working on a number of other priority areas.

Post-mortem Retentions

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs whether the Government plans to restrict coroners' post mortem retentions only to material that is required for evidentiary purposes of a legal nature. [132339]

Mr. Lammy: The post-mortem examination in Northern Ireland is a key stage in the investigation of deaths referred to a coroner, as the findings identify the medical cause of death and often determine whether or not any further action on the part of the coroner is required. There are two main purposes for which it is necessary to retain organs or tissue samples, i.e. to enable the pathologist accurately to determine the cause of death or for evidential purposes in suspected criminal cases. It will therefore continue to be necessary to retain organs or tissue samples for both these reasons.

Appeals (Terrorism/Immigration and Nationality Acts)

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what steps he is taking to expedite appeals against (a) detention under the Terrorism Act 2000 and (b) removal of nationality under the Asylum and Nationality Act 1998; how many appeals (i) have been decided and (ii) remain to be decided in each case; and in relation to (ii) what the (A) longest period since the appeal was lodged and (B) the average period since the appeal was lodged was; and when he expects outstanding appeals to be heard. [133061]

Mr. Lammy: The preparation and listing of appeals takes place under the direction of the Chairman of the Special Immigration Appeals Commission (SIAC), who is an independent member of the judiciary. It is always the intention for appeals to be heard as soon as they can be readied for hearing.

No appeals concerning detention under the Anti-terrorism Crime and Security Act 2001 have been decided by SIAC, although two appeals have been abandoned. No appeals concerning deprivation of citizenship status under the British Nationality Act 1981 as amended by the Nationality Immigration and Asylum Act 2002 have been decided.

18 appeals concerning detention remain to be decided, including 10 appeals where the hearing has taken place and the judgments are pending. One appeal concerning deprivation of citizenship remains to be decided.

The first six appeals concerning detention were lodged in January 2002 and remain to be decided. The 18 appeals concerning detention still outstanding were lodged an average of 14 months ago. The one appeal concerning deprivation of citizenship has been outstanding for six months.

The current schedule of appeals listed for hearing is as follows:

Month	Detained	Citizenship
November/December 2003	2	—
January/March 2004	2	—
April 2004	—	1
Later	4	—
Total	8	1

Call Centres

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs whether his Department plans to outsource call centre work to premises outside the United Kingdom. [132106]

Mr. Lammy: No.

Law of Limitation (Child Sexual Abuse)

Ms Oona King: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs if he will introduce legislation to implement the recommendations by the Law Commission on revision of the law of limitation in relation to claims for child sexual abuse. [132087]

Mr. Lammy: In July 2002, the Government announced their acceptance in principle of the recommendations for reform of the 1980 Act contained in the Law Commission report, "Limitation of Actions", subject to further consideration of certain aspects. This further consideration will include the recommendations relating to claims for child sexual abuse. Legislation will be introduced to implement those recommendations which are accepted when an opportunity arises.

Magistrates Courts (North Yorkshire)

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs when the outstanding decision on the appeal of North Yorkshire County Council against the closure of three magistrates' courts in North Yorkshire will be announced. [132405]

Mr. Leslie: Having received representations from North Yorkshire County Council and the North Yorkshire Magistrates' Courts Committee, I have decided that the County Council's appeal should be dismissed and the Magistrates' Courts Committee's decision to close the Courts at Richmond, Picketing and Whitby should be upheld. However, I understand that the Magistrates' Courts Committee have indicated their intention that these courthouses should not close until the courthouses to which the work will be transferred haven been replaced or refurbished.

Magistrates Courts (Private Finance Initiative)

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs when the decision on the application from the North Yorkshire Magistrates' Courts committee for private finance initiative funding for building new magistrates' courts in York and Selby will be announced. [132406]

Mr. Leslie: Further work is being undertaken on the business case and the Court Service and the Magistrates' Court Service are jointly reviewing their strategy for court provision in the area. This means that the earliest an announcement could be made is in spring 2004.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Anticoagulants

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many coagulometers were provided through the health service in Northern Ireland for patients to monitor international normalised ratio levels at home, in the last year for which figures are available. [131919]

Angela Smith: The Health and Personal Social Services in Northern Ireland does not provide coagulometers for home use. However, Roche Ltd. made a small number of coagulometers available and these were provided to patients for home use on a trial basis.

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate he has made of the cost of monitoring international normalised ratio levels of patients in Northern Ireland on warfarin in the last year for which figures are available. [131920]

Angela Smith: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to make coagulometers more widely available in Northern Ireland for home monitoring of international normalised ratios by patients on warfarin. [131921]

Angela Smith: There are no plans at present to make coagulometers available for home use on the HPSS.

Child Protection Training

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many teachers and schools within each education and library board participated in multi-disciplinary training for child protection (a) from 1 April 1993 to 31 March 2003 and (b) from 1 April 2003 to 31 August 2003; [132215]

(2) how many teachers and schools within each education and library board are participating in multi-disciplinary teaching for child protection. [132216]

Jane Kennedy: Training for teachers in child protection is not multi-disciplinary. It is provided by the Education and Library Boards and is focused on the particular needs of teachers and schools. Multi-disciplinary training has been offered by the Health and Social Services Trusts but information is not available on which teachers may have attended this.

Commercial Rates

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many premises in Northern Ireland were charged a commercial rate for 2002–03. [132088]

Mr. Pearson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Rates Collection Agency to write to the hon. Lady in response to this question. A copy of the letter will be placed in the Library.

Concessionary Fares

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what his policy is on the acceptance by Translink of concessionary public transport passes issued outside Northern Ireland. [133241]

Mr. Spellar: The Northern Ireland Concessionary Fares Scheme provides concessionary travel only for eligible Northern Ireland residents on scheduled public transport services within Northern Ireland. Consequently, Translink does not accept concessionary public transport passes issued outside Northern Ireland. We have no plans to extend the Concessionary Fares Scheme to include people who are not resident in Northern Ireland.

Delayed Discharges

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money was spent by each health board in Northern Ireland to counter delayed discharges in each of the last three years. [132467]

Angela Smith: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many hospital in-patients in Northern Ireland had their discharge delayed while awaiting community care packages on 1 January (a) 2000, (b) 2001, (c) 2002 and (d) 2003. [132468]

Angela Smith: Information on delayed discharges is collected in respect of the position at the last day of each month. The numbers of acute hospital in-patients who had their discharge delayed while awaiting community care packages were 265 at 31 December 2000, 341 at 31 December 2001, and 323 at 31 December 2002. Equivalent information is not available for the position at 31 December 1999, but at February 2000 there were 319 in-patients whose discharge was delayed.

Drug Treatment

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the age was of the youngest person in Northern Ireland treated in the last five years with an (a) anti-depressant, (b) anti-psychotic and (c) amphetamine drug. [132472]

Angela Smith: The information requested is not available.

Equality Commission

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many press releases the Equality Commission has released in 2003; and of these how many were wholly or mainly on the issue of fair employment. [132214]

Mr. Spellar: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Equality Commission for Northern Ireland to write to the hon. Gentleman. A copy of the letter will be placed in the Library.

Exotic Pets

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans there are to require the owners of exotic pets in Northern Ireland to register them. [132466]

Angela Smith: On 13 October I published the legislative proposals for public consultation to regulate dangerous wild animals kept by private individuals in Northern Ireland. The proposed legislation will require anyone owning or wishing to own a dangerous wild animal to apply to the Department of the Environment for a licence. It will also establish stringent criteria, on matters such as public safety, security of accommodation and animal welfare, which will need to be met, and confirmed by inspection, before the grant of a licence. The draft legislation also specifies licence conditions which the licence holder will have to meet while any dangerous wild animal is being kept. The consultation paper has been circulated and the Department of the Environment would welcome any views on the legislative proposals.

Fuel Poverty

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many fuel poor households based on the 2001 Northern Ireland House Conditions Survey there are in each local authority area; and what his estimate is of how many children are living in fuel poor households. [132577]

Mr. Spellar: The number of fuel poor households identified in the 2001 House Condition Survey in each local authority area is following table:

Local Authority Area	Number
Antrim	6,799
Ards	7,912
Armagh	5,065
Ballymena	8,155
Ballymoney	4,070
Banbridge	4,676
Belfast	42,962
Carrickfergus	3,396
Castlereagh	5,654
Coleraine	6,520
Cookstown	3,606
Craigavon	13,449
Down	6,037
Dungannon	3,671
Fermanagh	6,462
Larne	4,396

Local Authority Area	Number
Limavady	4,019
Lisburn	10,569
Londonderry	13,086
Magherafelt	5,690
Moyle	2,170
Newry & Mourne	6,651
Newtownabbey	10,038
North Down	7,656
Omagh	5,101
Strabane	5,449

The 2001 house condition survey estimated that there are some 114,000 children living in fuel poor households.

General Practice

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many general practitioners practices in Northern Ireland are not accepting any new patients on to their lists. [132094]

Angela Smith: The information requested is not available.

Health Service IT

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what comparative studies have been conducted on the cost of improving health service information technology in Northern Ireland and schemes in the rest of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [131918]

Angela Smith: To date no formal comparative studies have been conducted on the cost of improving health service information technology in Northern Ireland and schemes in the rest of the United Kingdom. My Department published earlier this year a new ICT Strategy for the HPSS, which will set the overall direction of investment for modernising ICT services over the next 10 years. This strategy will be taken forward in a cost-effective way and will make use of developments, products and services sourced as far as possible from the same supplies who supply systems to the NHS.

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on standards in NHS information technology; and what costs have been incurred from the recent modernisation of the technology. [131922]

Angela Smith: Northern Ireland works closely with the other UK administrations in the development of standards for use in ICT in healthcare and my Department is fully committed to adopting any UK-wide standards for use in the HPSS.

In addition to using UK standards, within the HPSS the policy has historically been to use common IT solutions for common problems. This has led to the use of standard IT systems throughout the HPSS, for example in patient administration, clinical support services, finance and administration.

Since 1 April 2002, costs incurred in NI-wide ICT modernization projects have been:

i. £4.2 million for the implementation of a unique patient and client identifier for use within health and social care throughout Northern Ireland together with the provision of a highly secure 'always on' communications network and E-Mail and Internet services to all GPs (contract let July 2003).

ii. £4.3 million for the consolidation of 104 obsolescent computers in the HPSS into two highly resilient, mutually supportive computer systems to serve the whole HPSS (Contract let December 2002).

Both of these contracts were let by open competition under EC/GATT rules. £1.2 million has also been made available to HPSS bodies specifically to further encourage and facilitate the use of IT by health and social care clinical and professional staff, mainly through the provision of additional PCs and data communications equipment.

Organ/Tissue Retention

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what payment has been made for organs and tissue removed and retained without informed consent in Northern Ireland in the last five years. [132338]

Angela Smith: No payment has been made for organs and tissue removed and retained without informed consent in Northern Ireland in the last five years.

IRA Weapons Stocks

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate he has made of the amounts of (a) weapons and (b) explosives possessed by the Irish Republican Army (i) now, and (ii) in April 1998; and if he will make a statement. [131917]

Jane Kennedy: Estimates of the amount of weaponry held by paramilitary organisations are an intelligence matter on which it would be inappropriate to comment. The Government has consistently made clear that paramilitary groups must end all forms of terrorist activity and decommissioning should be carried out through the Independent International Commission on Decommissioning appointed by the Government for this purpose.

Manufacturing Exports

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimate he has made of export sales growth in Northern Ireland's manufacturing companies in each of the next three years. [133340]

Mr. Pearson: There are no forecasts of Northern Ireland manufacturing export sales. However, between 1996–97 and 2001–02, manufacturing export sales increased by 45 per cent. in real terms. The Invest NI Corporate Plan and "Building on Progress—Priorities and Plans 2003–06" includes a target for the growth of export sales. The current target is for manufacturing export sales to increase by 10 per cent. each year in real terms between April 2002 and March 2005.

I am confident that a sustained global economic recovery will lead to an improvement in Northern Ireland's manufacturing performance. In that context, these challenging targets remain firm.

Northern Ireland Mother and Baby Association

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what public funding has been received in the last year by the Northern Ireland Mother and Baby Association (NIMBA). [132465]

Angela Smith: A total of £41,000 from public funds was provided to NIMBA to support its activities, in the last financial year.

Planning (Ravenblack)

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when a decision will be made on the planning application submitted by Ravenblack in November 2000 for a development in the Gocean area of Killyleagh; and if he will make a statement. [133236]

Angela Smith: In August 2003, I met with locally elected representatives and facilitated a further meeting with representatives at their request to discuss this proposal. I agreed that further consideration would be given to some of the issues raised, and further consultation was subsequently carried out with key organisations. Some of these responses are still outstanding. Once received and considered, the application will be processed to determination as expeditiously as possible.

Police Leisure Facilities

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications have been received by the PSNI since 1 January from (a) former and (b) retired police officers for permission to use police leisure facilities; how many of those applications have been processed; and how many applicants have been informed that permission has been granted. [132078]

Jane Kennedy: The Chief Constable has advised me that to date 54 retired and former officers have applied for permission to use police leisure facilities. Some 33 applications have been processed and approved with the remainder being considered by PSNI Security Branch. No retired officers have been refused permission to use police leisure facilities and it remains the Chief Constable's policy to encourage retired officers to avail of the health and fitness facilities available.

Prison Budgets

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what budget was allocated to each prison in Northern Ireland between 1 April and 31 August. [132219]

Jane Kennedy: The Northern Ireland Prison Service receives an annual budget allocation from the Northern Ireland Office through the spending review process. The 2003–04 allocation to the Service is as follows:

	£000
Operating costs	116,895
Capital costs	12,195

The Director General has delegated authority to manage the Service's allocation in an effective, efficient and economic manner. The Service is managed as a whole. Budget allocations are made to budget holders throughout the Service and not on an establishment by establishment basis.

Queen's University

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many members there are of the Senate of Queen's University; and how many of them completed undergraduate degrees at the University. [131923]

Jane Kennedy: There are 32 members of the Senate of Queen's University and 16 of those have completed undergraduate degrees at the University.

Road Deaths

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people were killed on the roads in Northern Ireland in (a) 1973, (b) 1983 and (c) 1993. [132096]

Jane Kennedy: The information is set out in the following table.

Year	Fatalities
1973	335
1983	173
1993	143

Security Measures (Health Service)

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much each health trust in Northern Ireland spent on security measures in the last 12 months. [132471]

Angela Smith: Information in the form requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Sports Funding

David Burnside: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what funding from Her Majesty's Government has been received by (a) the Gaelic Athletic Association, (b) the Irish Football Association and (c) the Irish Rugby Football Union, Ulster Branch, in each year since 1998. [132829]

Angela Smith: The Sports Council for Northern Ireland is responsible for the development of Sport in Northern Ireland including the distribution of Government Exchequer funding to governing bodies of Sport including the Gaelic Athletic Association (GAA), the Irish Football Association (IFA) and the Irish Rugby Football Union (IRFU), Ulster Branch. The following table provides information detailing the Exchequer funding distributed by the Sports Council NI in each year from 1998–99 to 2002–03 to the GAA, IFA and Ulster Branch of the IRFU:

	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02	2002–03	Total
GAA	30,000	30,000	30,000	30,000	45,000	165,000
IFA	50,000	50,000	50,000	59,000	52,500	261,500
IRFU, Ulster Branch	16,000	16,000	16,000	16,000	45,000	109,000

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

University Applications

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on levels of applications to universities in the last three years from (a) international students, (b) UK students and (c) students from the West Midlands. [131452]

Alan Johnson [holding answer 14 October 2003]: The latest available information from the Universities and Colleges Admissions Service (UCAS) covers applicants to full-time and sandwich undergraduate courses in the UK and is shown in the table. Comparable data for 2003 entry will not be published until January 2004, but the latest data for 2003 shows that, by early October, overall applicants were up by 3 per cent. This continued increase demonstrates that students realise that higher education can bring them better opportunities and are willing to make the investment.

Dyslexia

Jonathan Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on the delivery of the Raising the Achievement of Dyslexia Pupils: Dyslexia Teaching project that was funded in 2002–03. [132204]

Margaret Hodge: The Raising the Achievement of Dyslexia Pupils: Dyslexia Friendly Teaching project was one of 16 projects in receipt of grant under the Department's Special Educational Needs (SEN) Training and Development Fund 2002–03. The fund was established to provide one-off pump priming support to aid the creation of new, or extended, in-service training and development opportunities for teachers and other staff, both in mainstream and special schools. The aim was to help improve and reinforce skills in the area of SEN and disabilities.

This particular project is being delivered by the Institute of Education at Manchester Metropolitan University (MMU), working in collaboration with the British Dyslexia Association. It involves a validated module, targeted at new or recently qualified teachers and learning support assistants, and includes the creation of course materials and video case studies of successful practice in schools and classes. This material has now been completed and is in the process of being edited and transferred to a DVD format for the classroom and a CD-ROM covering the teaching methods and philosophies of the teachers involved. It is proposed that the material will be available via the MMU website.

Additional School Funding (Armed Forces)

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what recent progress has been made towards providing additional funding for schools with a high percentage of pupils drawn from families serving in Her Majesty's armed forces. [132804]

Mr. Miliband: Additional funding for such schools would need to come through the budget shares calculated in accordance with the local education authority's school funding formula. Any school concerned with this issue should press for change through local consultative procedures. The Department will be considering the overall needs of such schools through a working group being set up this autumn.

Pregnant Asylum Seekers

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what research has been conducted on assistance the Government might provide to pregnant asylum seekers who have been raped as a consequence of war; and if he will make a statement on support services for teenage asylum seekers who are victims of rape. [131959]

Margaret Hodge: On 16 July 2003 my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Education pledged to commission research into the support networks of pregnant teenage asylum seekers, Official Report, column 95WH. Information gained from upcoming national events, organised by the Government's Teenage Pregnancy Unit, will identify areas that require further research, which can be addressed in the near future.

In relation to support services, adult and child pregnant asylum seekers who have been raped as a consequence of war have the same rights of access to the national health service and its specialist services as their peers.

The Government is currently considering how to improve the provision of interpreting services in the UK in addition to providing language support services for NHS Direct. This work is due to be completed by the end of 2003 and a contract for services will be in place by early 2004.

Child Care

Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans he has to make child care more affordable. [132380]

Margaret Hodge: The Government recognises that making child care affordable is a key challenge for the National Childcare Strategy and has made a substantial investment to achieve this. We have funded a substantial expansion in child care provision in the public, private and voluntary sectors, with a wide variety of types of child care—nurseries, child minders, before and after school provision and increasingly delivered alongside early education and other family services—to ensure diversity and choice for parents and to provide better services for children.

Working parents, subject to the level of their income, may receive support through the child care element of the Working Tax Credit (WTC). Tax credits are rightly targeted at lower and middle income families who may use a range of registered or approved child care. The child care element of the Working Tax Credit provides for up to 70 per cent. of costs of eligible child care. It can pay up to £94.50 a week for one child (where the childcare cost is £135), and up to £140 a week for two or more children (where the cost is £200).

No Government has provided the kind of direct support for the costs of child care that is delivered by the child care element of the Working Tax Credit. Over £650 million a year is now spent on supporting parents with child care costs.

Families are further supported through early education places, which can be used to off-set the cost of child care. As a result of our policies, all four year olds are able to access a free, good quality, part-time early education place. From April 2004, six months ahead of the original target, this will be extended to all three year olds. Currently 88 per cent. of three year olds are able to benefit from some level of free provision.

Support is also available through various grants and access funds for parents studying further and higher education, for participants on the New Deals and those receiving Job Seekers' allowance.

Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans he has to increase the number of childcare places in Redcar. [132381]

Margaret Hodge: The local authority area of Redcar and Cleveland is planning to create an additional 360 childcare places in 2003–04 bringing their total stock of childcare places to approximately 3100 by April 2004. This will represent some 13 places for every 100 children aged 0–14 in the area compared with an estimated national average by 2004 of 15 places for every 100 children.

To help meet the national target for a further 250,000 new childcare places by March 2006 Redcar and Cleveland have been allocated a target to create 598 new childcare places in 2004–06. The local authority has written to confirm acceptance of this target and the funds being made available to support this growth.

Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on the level of provision of workplace childcare in Redcar. [132421]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 16 October 2003]: I understand that there are currently no workplace nurseries in Redcar.

The Government provides tax and National Insurance exemptions to encourage employers to provide workplace nurseries.

We are currently reviewing the tax and National Insurance treatment of employer-supported childcare. Our proposals offer improvements to give a better incentive to employers to support a wider range of good quality childcare provision and will benefit a greater number of employees, especially those working for smaller employers who do not have workplace nurseries.

Children and Young People's Unit

Mr. Lazarowicz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills pursuant to his answer of 6 October, Official Report, columns 1127–28W, on the Children and Young People's Unit, what activities have been undertaken by the Unit in co-ordinating the UK's participation in (a) the EU Open Method of Co-ordination on Youth Policy and (b) the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child. [132745]

Margaret Hodge: The Children and Young People's Unit co-ordinates UK participation in the EU Open Method of Co-ordination on Youth Policy (Youth OMC) and the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child (UNCRC) through a variety of methods.

Co-ordination with the Devolved Administrations

The Unit chairs a Devolved Administrations Liaison Group (DALG) which meets for half a day, four times a year. Membership is comprised of officials with responsibility for EU youth policy and child rights policy from England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. The Youth OMC and the UNCRC are standing agenda items.

The Unit holds two half-day bilateral meetings per year with officials in each of the Devolved Administrations. Again, the Youth OMC and the UNCRC are standing agenda items.

The Unit has an information sharing arrangement with the Devolved Administrations where written information is circulated quarterly by e-mail to officials updating them on developments and new initiatives for children and young people in each country of the UK.

These formal arrangements are reinforced with regular working-level contact between the Unit and each of the Devolved Administrations.

Co-Ordination with Westminster Departments

At a formal level, co-ordination on both the Youth OMC and the UNCRC has previously been undertaken through the Children and Young People's Unit Interdepartmental Steering Group. With the recent machinery of government changes following the creation of a Children and Families Directorate within the Department for Education and Skills, structures for cross-Whitehall co-ordination are currently being reviewed. Formal co-ordination of the Youth OMC and the UNCRC will become part of the new arrangements.

At working-level, the Unit has daily contact with officials across Whitehall on these two issues.

Examinations

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list for each local education authority (a) the floor target with respect to the percentage of year 11 pupils attending maintained schools gaining five or more GCSE results at Grades A* to C and (b) the date by which the floor target has to be achieved; whether the GCSE results of pupils attending academies will be included in calculating each local education authority's performance; and which local education authorities did not achieve the floor target in 2003. [131402]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 16 October 2003]: The information regarding floor targets is as follows:

The floor target is that 38 per cent. of 16-year-old pupils in schools in each LEA are to achieve five or more grades A*-C at GCSE/GNVQ by 2004. The GCSE/GNVQ results of pupils attending Academies will be taken into account in calculating each Local Education Authority's performance.

Based on 2003 provisional figures, the following Local Education Authorities have not yet achieved the 2004 floor target yet: Bristol City (35.0 per cent.), Greenwich (34.5 per cent.), Hackney (36.8 per cent.), Haringey (37.5 per cent.), Islington (36.9 per cent.), Kingston-upon-Hull (31.6 per cent.), Knowsley (33.2 per cent.), North East Lincolnshire (35.0 per cent.), Nottingham City (34.3 per cent.), Salford (36.2 per cent.), Sandwell (35.3 per cent.) and Southwark (37.7 per cent.).

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what recent discussions his Department has had with (a) the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority and (b) the exam boards on control procedures for (i) GCSE and (ii) A level exams. [131808]

Mr. Miliband: The control procedures for public examinations are detailed in the GCSE, GCE, VCE, GNVQ and AEA Code of Practice which was jointly drawn up by the Regulatory Authorities in England, Wales and Northern Ireland. The Qualifications and Curriculum Authority (QCA) as Regulator, is responsible for ensuring the three unitary awarding bodies in England fulfil their obligations under the Code of Practice and conduct regular reviews to ensure parity.

Following a recommendation from Mike Tomlinson's Inquiry into A Level standards last year, QCA strengthened the Code of Practice for the 2003 examinations, paying particular attention to the section governing the setting of grade boundaries.

Good Friday Agreement

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what measures have been taken in the last 12 months to promote co-operation in matters concerning education and skills through the east-west dimension of the Good Friday Agreement. [131949]

Mr. Lammy: I have been asked to reply.

Strand Three of the Belfast or Good Friday Agreement identified education as one of a number of possible issues for discussion within the British-Irish Council. The Council is currently working on a number of other priority areas, although some of them touch on education and skills issues.

Graduate Teacher Scheme

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what estimate he has made of (a) the number and (b) the percentage of newly qualified teachers trained under the graduate teacher scheme this year who have been unable to find employment in teaching. [132926]

Mr. Miliband: My right hon. Friend has made no such estimates.

Electronics/Electrical Engineering

Mr. Challen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what have been the student participation rates in (a) electronic, (b) electrical and (c) combined electronic/electrical engineering courses in the last five years. [131115]

Alan Johnson: The latest available information is in the table.

Minister for Children

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the responsibilities are of the Minister for Children; what immediate targets she has set; and what funding is available for her Department subsection. [128238]

Margaret Hodge: I have responsibility within the Department for Education and Skills for policy on children, young people and families. The creation of the post of Minister for Children in June brought together within the DfES a number of key responsibilities including some from other Government Departments in order to improve the co-ordination of policy on children, young people and families. From September the title of this post was changed to Minister for Children, Young People and Families.

The accountability arrangements for PSA and supporting targets affected by this change are:

The transfer from the Department of Health of the PSA target on improving the life chances for children in care together with work on the adoption of looked after children.

Joint ownership of the PSA target on reducing the under 18 conception rate by 50 per cent. by 2010.

The Department of Health will retain the PSA target on improving life outcomes for adults and children with mental health problems with DfES having an important role in ensuring input from social care and other services.

I will also retain responsibilities for the Sure Start targets which aim to ensure that accessible and high quality childcare, early education and other services are available for all young children and families.

I will be reviewing all targets and structures are now being established within the Department to ensure that our policy ambitions are delivered in the most cost effective manner.

School Noise Reduction

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what his Department is doing to enforce the recommended guidelines in reducing noise in schools; and if he will make a statement. [132568]

Mr. Miliband: Acoustic standards in schools have been subject to the Building Regulations, Approved Document E, since 1 July 2003. Approved Document E quotes DfES Building Bulletin 93 as the normal means of compliance with Regulation E4 which applies to schools. Building Bulletin 93, "The Acoustic Design of Schools", can be downloaded from the DfES acoustics website www.teachernet.gov.uk/acoustics and will be published by the Stationery Office (ISBN 0 11 2711057) in November 2003.

Building Bulletin 93 contains recommendations that also apply to the refurbishment of existing schools which are not subject to Building Regulations. Some aspects of such refurbishment work are subject to the requirements of the Disability Discrimination Act as it applies to pupils with hearing impairments.

Building Bulletin 93 also gives recommendations on noise levels in playing fields and other areas of the school grounds. External noise considerations are subject to Policy Planning Guidance Note 24 and Planning law.

Ofsted

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills pursuant to the response from HM Chief Inspector of Schools to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury on 13 June, how many complaints have been made against Ofsted inspectors in each of the last three years for reasons other than their performance as inspectors in connection with Section 10 inspections; and whether de-registrations have subsequently resulted. [132753]

Mr. Miliband: This is a matter for Ofsted. HM Chief Inspector of Schools, David Bell will write to my hon. Friend and place a copy of his letter in the Library.

PGCE Citizenship Courses

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills pursuant to his answer of 18 September 2003, Official Report, column 985W, on Post-Graduate Certificate in Education (Citizenship), how many places (a) have been taken up and (b) were available for PGCE history courses in each year between 2001 and 2003; what percentage of teacher training institutions offer PGCE Citizenship courses; and if he will make a statement. [131950]

Mr. Miliband: The table shows the number of entrants to Postgraduate Certificate in Education courses in history and the number of places allocated to institutions in England by the Teacher Training Agency since 2001/02.

	Places	Entrants[1]
2001/02	941	922

Currently 13 per cent. of providers of initial teacher training courses in England offer a Postgraduate Certificate in Education course in Citizenship.

School Finance (Essex)

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills when he expects to respond to the request for additional financial resources made on 26 September by the Essex Secondary Headteachers' Association; and if he will make a statement. [132805]

Mr. Miliband: On 17 July the Secretary of State announced the changes we propose to make to restore stability to school funding in 2004–05 and 2005–06. We are currently working with national partners on the detail of his proposals and the Secretary of State will be announcing the outcome as soon as this work is complete.

Sector Skills Councils

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment he has made of the trailblazer sector skills councils; and if he will make a statement. [132497]

Alan Johnson: Five organisations were licensed as Trailblazer Sector Skills Councils in the spring of last year. A business case for Skill set (the Trailblazer SSC for audiovisual industries) is currently being considered and if accepted will lead to the award of a licence before the end of the year.

The other Trailblazer Sector Skills Councils; Cogent Plus, Skillfast-UK, Lantra and Skillsmart, are expected, subject to SSDA Board approval to be awarded licences by June 2004.

Sure Start

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what resources were allocated for research for each of the Birkenhead Sure Starts in each of the years since their inception; and how much of the funding has been spent; [129168]

(2) how much (a) revenue and (b) capital has been allocated to each of the Birkenhead Sure Starts in each year since their inception; [129169]

(3) how much of the (a) revenue and (b) capital allocation awarded to Birkenhead under the Sure Start programme has been used, broken down by financial year, since 2001–02. [129229]

Margaret Hodge: The available information for the three Sure Start local programmes in the Birkenhead area is shown in the following tables. These programmes were approved at different times—Birkenhead North in August 2000, Ferries in January 2002 and Birkenhead Central in January 2003. Information is drawn from the local programmes' delivery 9 plans and Sure Start Unit's finance and performance monitoring IT system. N/A denotes not applicable where year shown is before a programme's inception.

Teachers (Essex)

Mr. Francois: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many full-time secondary school teachers were employed by Essex county council on 1 September. [132638]

Mr. Miliband: The information is not available in the precise form requested. The official survey of teacher numbers and vacancies (Form 618g) is conducted annually on the third Thursday in January. At January 2003, 4,960 teachers were employed full-time in maintained secondary schools in the Essex local education authority area.

Teaching Assistants (Leicestershire)

David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what the pay rates are for teaching assistants in Leicestershire; [132483]

(2) what training opportunities exist for teaching assistants in Leicestershire; [132484]

(3) what assessment he has made of the job content for a teaching assistant in Leicestershire. [132485]

Mr. Miliband: Pay, contractual arrangements and job descriptions are matters for local determination: the Government believe that this is the best way of ensuring a flexible system that can respond to local needs and circumstances. Many local authorities, including Leicestershire, have reviewed support staff pay and undertaken job evaluations in the light of the agreement—commonly known as the Single Status Agreement—made in 1997 by the National Joint Council for Local Government Services. I understand that that National Joint Council is in the process of issuing guidance about the grading of school support staff.

The Standards Fund for 2003–04 contains a grant of £37.45 million for the training and development of support staff and Leicestershire's share of this is £424,542. Responsibility for deciding how to devolve the funding to schools rests with LEAs. The grant can be used for those participating in induction training programmes for teaching assistants, developed by my Department, as well as for the professional development of more experienced teaching assistants including course fees for training leading to National Vocational Qualifications. Schools have always been able to use their own budgets to fund teaching assistant training and to 'buy in' or pay for any training available locally.

The National Agreement on raising standards and tackling workload signed on 15 January 2003 by the Government, local authority employers and school work force unions will improve training and career progression opportunities for support staff and makes clear that we expect their pay to reflect their level of training, skills and responsibilities. Following the Agreement, the Teacher Training Agency has published standards for Higher Level Teaching Assistants and training and assessment for these standards will be rolled out from April 2004.

Tuition Fees

Mr. Keith Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what percentage of university tuition fees will be paid to the university in advance. [132689]

Alan Johnson: We do not expect that any tuition fees will be paid to Higher Education Institutions (HEIs) in advance of the academic year for which they are charged. From 2006, students will decide whether they will defer payment until after they graduate, or whether to pay their tuition fees up front. Where a student chooses to defer payment, the Government will pay the tuition fee to the HEI during the academic year for which it is charged. The details of the arrangements for the timing of the payment or payments during the academic year have yet to be finalised.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the (a) maximum and (b) minimum ranges of residual parental income are at which students may be (i) wholly and (ii) partly exempt from tuition fees in 2003–04. [132752]

Alan Johnson: For most higher education students, the maximum fee contribution for which they will be liable in 2003/04 is £1,125. Students will be wholly exempt from a contribution to their fees if their parents' residual income is less than £20,970. They will be liable for a partial contribution to their fees if their parents' residual income is between £20,790 and £31,230.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Alstom

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the Government's role in the threatened closure of the Alstom works in Birmingham. [131969]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 14 October 2003]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has met the President of Alstom UK, constituency MPs and trade unions to discuss Alstom's restructuring plans and their impact on the company's operations in the UK. The Government also have a role through its regional agencies in providing the best available help for the individuals who may be affected.

Arms Sales

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much has been spent by her Department in each year since 1997–98 on promoting British military equipment and arms sales to foreign customers. [131110]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Defence Export Services Organisation (DESO) of the Ministry of Defence takes lead responsibility for promoting British military equipment and arms sales to foreign customers. The Department of Trade and Industry does provide some support to defence companies wishing to export where this is likely to produce economic benefit for the UK and complies with export control regulations imposed by the UK. However, it is not possible to separately identify the Department's overall spend on this activity in each year since 1997–98.

British Trade International, through the Defence Manufacturers Association (DMA), support the presence of UK companies at overseas Exhibitions and Seminars using the Support for Exhibitions and Seminars scheme (SESA) and its predecessor the Trade Fair Support scheme. The amount of grant provided to companies through DMA is as follows:

	Grant (£)
1997–98	67,850
1998–99	707,015
1999–2000	167,832
2000–01	268,592
2001–02	164,089
2002–03	311,934

Note:
The annual variation in amounts reflects the variation in the number and type of major export events occurring each year.

Asbestos

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much has been spent by her Department and its agencies on (a) asbestos surveys and (b) the management and removal of asbestos since 1 January 2001; and what budget is available to (i) commission asbestos surveys and (ii) manage and remove asbestos from buildings in (A) 2003 and (B) 2004. [130917]

Ms Hewitt: The Department of Trade and Industry (DTI) spend on asbestos surveys and on the management and removal of asbestos since 1 January 2001 has been small and the costs for this work are included in the normal operational costs associated with the DTI estate. For 2003 and 2004, there is no specific budget as provision for asbestos surveys and the removal of asbestos from buildings. For those agencies where the Department holds budgetary information, the position is similar.

Letter from Alison Brimelow to Dr. Vincent Cable:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question 3978 tabled on 16 September 2003, about how much has been spent by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry's Department and its agencies on (a) asbestos surveys and (b) the management and removal of asbestos since 1st January 2001; and what budget is available to (i) commission asbestos surveys and (ii) manage and remove asbestos from buildings in (A) 2003 and (B) 2004.

Of the three properties we administer, only one has any asbestos, and we had a survey done this year costing £1350. As a result we are aware that some remedial work needs to be done. There is no budget provision made for this yet as we are negotiating with the Landlord on the best way to proceed.

With regard to the other buildings in our portfolio, Concept House was built in 1989/91 and does not contain any asbestos. Harmsworth House was completely refurbished before our occupation and also does not contain any asbestos.

Letter from Claire Clancy to Dr. Vincent Cable:

I am responding to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on behalf of Companies House, which is an Executive Agency of the DTI.

Since 1 January 2001 Companies House has spent £11,500 on asbestos surveys, and £90,724 on the removal of asbestos. No more money has been budgeted to commission surveys as they are now complete. Removal of asbestos in the years 2003 and 2004 will not exceed £50,000 and can be accommodated in the existing budget.

BAC Strikemaster

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when she will reply to the letter dated 9 July from the hon. Member for North Norfolk concerning issues relating to the export of BAC Strikemaster jet aircraft. [132869]

Nigel Griffiths: I replied to the hon. Member's letter dated 19 June on 27 June. My Department has no record of having received a further letter from the hon. Member about Strikemaster aircraft.

Construction Industry

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent discussions her Department has had with trade associations in the construction sector regarding the impact of increasing insurance premiums. [132868]

Nigel Griffiths: The DTI has regular discussions with various trade associations and umbrella bodies in the construction sector, and is working closely with the trade associations, to produce practical advice and guidance to construction firms on insurance matters.

Consultancies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many consultancies were commissioned by her Department in the last two years for which figures are available; and what the cost of those contracts was. [130904]

Ms Hewitt: During 2002–03, the Department's recorded expenditure on consultancy was £52 million in respect of some 180 projects. The comparable expenditure in 2001–02 was £55 million. No figures are available in respect of the number of projects commissioned for that year.

The Department is currently undertaking a review of its consultancy expenditure, with the objective of maximising the value for money obtained from the deployment of consultants through:

the effective management of consultancies and exploitation of their conclusions; more cost-effective procurement practices; and the consistent capture of data.

Aggregate Exports

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of UK marine dredged aggregate is exported to (a) Holland and (b) other EU countries. [133253]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information is not collected in the form requested. However, in the year ending June 2003—the latest quarter for which data are available—sales of sand and gravel in Great Britain amounted to 83,318,000 tonnes, of which 12,451,000 tonnes were marine dredged. Exports of sand to the EU totalled 232,000 tonnes over the same period, or slightly less that 0.3 per cent of the total, of which none was exported to the Netherlands. A further 121,000 tonnes were imported, a proportion of which may have been re-exported. It is not possible to identify exports of sand by source, i.e. whether they were obtained from marine dredging or were land won.

Power Supply

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment her Department has made of whether (a) electricity demand is likely to surpass 54.4 GW in England and Wales during this winter, (b) gas demand is likely to surpass 450 Mcm during this winter and (c) there is sufficient (i) electricity generation capacity and (ii) gas supply and storage capacity to meet this demand; and if she will make a statement. [132431]

Mr. Timms: National Grid Transco reports annually to Ofgem on the outlook for the forthcoming winter. Ofgem published the latest assessment on 14 October 2003. The assessment covers winter peak electricity and gas demand. It also covers electricity generation capacity and gas supply.

The report is available in the Libraries of the House.

DTI is working with Ofgem, through the joint energy security of supply working group (JESS) to monitor energy security, specifically taking a forward look and make the conclusions publicly available—allowing market participants to react in good time.

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent assessment she has made of the proportion of electricity demand in the United Kingdom in (a) 2005, (b) 2010, (c) 2015 and (d) 2020 that will be met by electricity generated using (i) gas and (ii) renewable fuels. [132432]

Mr. Timms: The latest provisional DTI energy projections which update those in Energy Paper 68, indicate a share for gas generation of 33 per cent. and 50 per cent. in 2005 and 2010 respectively. For renewables, the shares are 5 per cent. and 10 per cent. respectively. Further updating of these estimates is under way, including estimates for later years. The projections are available at the following website: http://www.dti.gov.uk/energy/sepn/projections.pdf

Environmental Measures

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant to her answer of 17 July 2003, Official Report, column 509W, on environmental measures, what assessment she has made of the economic benefits to UK environmental industries of the markets created by each measure; what methodology she used to carry out each assessment; and where each assessment is published. [131893]

Ms Hewitt: The regulatory impact assessments referred to in my answer of 17 July took account of the costs and benefits to all relevant sectors, and were produced in accordance with best practice, as set out in the Cabinet Office publication "Better Policy Making: A Guide to Regulatory Impact Assessment". All the assessments were published in the corresponding DTI and Defra consultation papers, and placed on the appropriate Departmental website.

EU Emissions Trading Scheme

Jonathan Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the impact on industry of liability for the costs of the EU Emissions Trading scheme, with particular reference to the paper industry. [131972]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 14 October 2003]: We are currently working on implementing the EU Emissions Trading Scheme. We have already undertaken a draft consultation on different methodologies and a consultation is under way on draft regulations. A consultation on the draft national allocation plan will start in December 2003. Other analytical work is under way. It is not possible at present to calculate the impact on specific sectors while a number of aspects of implementation are still to be agreed and action by other member states to be finalised.

Hawk Contract

Tony Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what measures the Government will take to ensure that end-use undertakings made in relation to equipment or technology licensed for transfer to India as part of the intended sale of 66 Hawk jets to India will be honoured; [130773]

(2) what conditions will be placed on the end-use of any equipment and technology licensed for transfer to India in relation to the 66 Hawk jets intended for sale to India. [130774]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have been asked to reply. All licence applications are assessed on a case-by-case basis against the Consolidated EU and National Arms Export Licensing Criteria. The stated end-use of the equipment is one factor taken into account when making the assessment.

The Hawk trainer aircraft are intended solely for training purposes, although they would have limited combat capability as they are fitted with the necessary systems and interfaces to allow them to carry a range of weapons for training for combat.

Beyond the standard end-user undertaking requirements for export licences (which our Posts overseas will monitor), no specific additional conditions would normally be placed on the end-use of any equipment and technology licensed for transfer to India.

The Indian Air Force already has a range of other aircraft that are much more suitable for combat purposes, including modern Mirage 2000 and SU-30 aircraft. Although it would be possible for the Indians to convert the aircraft in an operational role, we are confident they are purchasing the aircraft for training purposes to fill a gap between their existing trainer aircraft and their front-line fast jets. The Hawk is to be used to teach Indian pilots to fly fast jets safely.

Iraq

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether components of British manufacture from the two vehicles suspected of weapons of mass destruction production were bought with Export Credit Guarantee Department credits; and if she will make a statement. [131486]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 14 October 2003]: The coalition has not yet made a definitive identification of the vehicles and the components in question. From the information available to date, ECGD has no reason to believe that its cover was given in respect of such components.

IT Industry

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what her policy is on the relationship between the number of work permits granted to overseas applicants to work in the IT industry and vacancy levels and unemployment levels among domestic employees in that sector. [132309]

Ms Hewitt: The government's Sector Advisory Panel for IT meets regularly to assess the system for issuing work permits. The composition of the panel is broad and includes members from representative organisations and contractor groups. This panel advises in the UK's national interest and ensures that we strike the right balance between enabling employers to move skilled staff from within their companies while protecting job opportunities for resident workers. This policy is kept under regular review.

Liverpool John Lennon Airport

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she was consulted on Royal Mail's proposal to withdraw air freight operations from Liverpool John Lennon airport; and if she will make a statement. [131476]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 14 October 2003]: DTI Ministers and officials meet representatives from the Royal Mail on a regular basis to discuss a wide range of issues, including the company's transport review.

Decisions about the future structure of the company's air freight operations is a matter for the Royal Mail Board. I understand that while the company has proposed the closure of its operations at John Lennon airport, the Communication Workers Union has asked to put forward alternative proposals that could mean the retention of this site. Royal Mail has agreed to consider their proposals before any final decision is made.

National Grid

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether (a) the continental gas interconnector, (b) the beach terminals, (c) the compressor stations, (d) the National Transmission System and (e) the national control centre in Hinckley rely on power from the National Grid to operate. [132436]

Mr. Timms: Yes, but all have back-up arrangements in place.

Post Office Closures

Sarah Teather: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consultations she has had with the Post Office about (a) the closures of Crown post offices and (b) the consequences of closing the Crown Post Office at Brondesbury. [132725]

Mr. Timms: Decisions on closures of individual post offices are an operational matter for Post Office Ltd., but all such proposals are subject to public consultation under the Code of Practice agreed between Post Office Ltd. and Postwatch. Post Office Ltd's decision to close Brondesbury Crown post office has been taken in the context of its programme to restructure the urban post office network and the need to address the substantial losses made by the Crown office part of the network. I understand from Post Office Ltd. that there are three alternative offices between half and three-quarters of a mile from Brondesbury.

Power Stations

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many gas-fired power stations are classified as (a) shipper nominated interruptible, (b) Transco nominated interruptible and (c) network sensitive loads. [132435]

Mr. Timms: There are 19 interruptible Combined Cycle Gas Turbine stations (CCGTs) in England and Wales. Transco has rights of interruption over all of these CCGTs. The shippers' contractual arrangements are not fully known, but it is thought that in the great majority of cases, they do have interruption rights. Even if they do not, the stations may still be self-interrupted in order to arbitrage between the gas and electricity markets. One of these CCGTs is a Network Sensitive Load, which means that its position within one of the Transco Networks makes it more likely to be interrupted for reasons of local capacity constraints. Another CCGT is in a network sensitive position from an electricity perspective. Based on National Grid Transco's latest information and experience of this station switching fuels when interrupted in the past, there is a high degree of confidence in the station's alternative fuel capability.

Science Research Councils

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list the members of each science research council. [132495]

Ms Hewitt: The following are the names of all members of the seven Research Councils.

Members of the Seven Research Councils

BBSRC

Dr. Peter Ringrose—Council Chair

Professor Julia Goodfellow—Chief Executive

Dr. D. Brightman—Self-employed Farm Manager

Professor H. Dalton—Chief Scientific Officer, DEFRA

Dr. M. A. Darnbrough—Head of Bioscience Unit at DTI

Professor R. B. Freedman—Head of Biological Sciences, University of Warwick

Professor C. A. Gilligan—Professor of Plant Sciences, University of Cambridge

Mr. J. S. Graham—Head of Rural Affairs Department, Scottish Executive

Professor K. Gull—Professor of Pathology, University of Oxford

Professor D. Kell—Professor of Chemistry, UMIST

Professor TBL Kirkwood—Professor of Gerontology, University of Newcastle

Professor A. A. Nash—Department of Veterinary Pathology, University of Edinburgh

Dr. J. M. Padfield—Retired (ex Pharmaceutical Industry)

Dr. A. Penman—Head of Laboratory, Unilever Research and Development

DR. C. I. Ragan—Executive Director, Neuroscience Research Europe, Lilly Research Laboratories

Professor C. A. Tickle—Professor of Life Sciences, University of Dundee

CCLRC

Sir Graeme Davies—Vice Chancellor, University of London

Prof John Wood—Chief Executive CCLRC

Dr. Derek Chadwick—Director of the Novartis Foundation

Prof Mike Cruise—Pro-Vice-Chancellor, University of Birmingham

Prof Graham Davies—Head of the School of Engineering, University of Birmingham

Mr. Stephen Dexter—Grant Thornton

Prof John Peacock—Head of Physics and Astronomy, University of Manchester

Prof Julia Goodfellow—Chief Executive BBSRC

Mr. Peter Gregson—Deputy Vice-Chancellor, University of Southampton

Prof Ian Halliday—Chief Executive PPARC

Dr. Richard Henderson—MR.C Laboratory of Molecular Biology, Cambridge

Ms Anne Kensall—Business Adviser

Prof John Lawton—Chief Executive NERC

Prof John O'Reilly—Chief Executive EPSRC

Mr. Philip Ruffles—Rolls-Royce plc

Prof David Williams—Head of Clinical Engineering, University of Liverpool

EPSRC

Professor Dame Julia Higgins—Council Chair

Professor John O'Reilly—Chief Executive

Professor John S. Archer, Principal and Vice-Chancellor Heriot-Watt University

Professor John Chapman, Head of Physics and Astronomy Department, Glasgow University

Professor Ann Dowling—Department of Engineering, University of Cambridge

Professor Susan Gibson—Department of Chemistry, King's College London

Dr. David Grant—Vice-Chancellor Cardiff University

Dr. Peter Grindrod—Chair of Numbercraft Ltd.

Mr. David Hughes—Director of Innovation, DTI

Dr. J. Kennedy—Director Ove Arup and Partners

Ms Beatrice Leigh—GlaxoSmithKline Pharmaceuticals

Mr. John Loughhead—Alstom plc

Professor Sir Keith O'Nions—Chief Scientific Adviser, Ministry of Defence

Dr. Andrew Rickman—Booker Technology plc

Dr. Martyn Thomas—MTAL (Consultant)

ESRC

Frances Cairncross—Chair

Professor Ian Diamond—Chief Executive

Professor Alan Alexander—Chair, Scottish Water

Professor Patricia Broadfoot—Graduate School of Education, University of Bristol

Professor Andrew Chesher—Department of Economics, University College of London

Ms Helen Dent—Chief Executive, Family Welfare Association

Professor Fiona Devine—Department of Sociology, University of Manchester

Professor Hadyn Ellis—Deputy Vice-Chancellor, University of Cardiff

Mr. Paul Johnson—Chief Economist, Department for Education and Skills

Mr. Adair Turner—Vice Chairman, Merrill Lynch (Europe)

Professor Robin Wensley—Warwick Business School, Warwick University

Professor Steve Wilks—Department of Politics, University of Exeter

Professor Sir Alan Wilson—Vice Chancellor, University of Leeds

Mr. Andrew Winckler—Partner and Chairman, Financial Services Regulatory Practice, Ernst and Young

MRC

Sir Anthony Cleaver—Council Chair

Professor Colin Blakemore—Chief Executive

Dr. David Armstrong—Department of General Practice, Kings College London

Dr. Mac Armstrong—Chief Medical Officer, Scottish Executive Health Dept.

Sir William Castell—Chief Executive, Amersham plc

Professor Kay Davies—Head of Department of Human Anatomy and Genetics, University of Oxford

Professor Richard Denton—Professor of Biochemistry, University of Bristol

Dr. Peter Fellner—Chief Executive Officer, Celltech Group plc

Mr. Derek Flint—Retired (ex Financial Services Industry)

Dr. Ruth Hall—Chief Medical Officer, Welsh Assembly

Professor Ian McLennan—Director of MR.C Centre for Immune Regulation University of Birmingham

Professor Alan North—Professor of Molecular Physiology at the University of Sheffield

Professor Sir John Pattison—Director of Research, Analysis and Information, Department of Health

Professor Genevra Richardson—Professor of Public Law, Queen Mary College, University of London

Professor Nancy Rothwell—MR.C Research Professor, University of Manchester

Professor John Savill—Professor of Medicine, University of Edinburgh

NERC

Mr. Rob Margetts—Chairman

Professor John Lawton—Chief Executive

Professor Malcolm Anderson—Professor of Physical Geography, and Assistant Director, Institute for Advanced Studies, University of Bristol

Mr. Chris Andrews—Former Chairman and Managing Director of Rhodia Ltd.

Professor John Beddington—Department of Environmental Science and Technology, Imperial College

Professor Valerie Brown—Research Professor in Agro-Ecology, and Director of the Centre for Agri-Environmental Research, University of Reading

Professor Howard Dalton—Chief Scientific Adviser (CSA), Department for the Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (DEFRA)

Professor Trevor Davies—School of Environmental Sciences, University of East Anglia

Professor Michael Depledge—Head of Science for the Environment Agency

Professor Anne Glover—Department of Molecular and Cell Biology, University of Aberdeen

Dr. Colin Hicks—Director General of the British National Space Centre, and Director-Space in the Department of Trade and Industry

Mr. Edwin Jenner—Formerly of AstraZeneca plc

Mrs. Karen Morgan—Deputy Chairman of WaterAid, Chairman of the University of the West of England, and a Director of Wessex Water

Mrs. Sara Parkin—Programme Director at Forum for the Future

Professor Judith Petts—Head of School, School of Geography, Earth and Environmental Sciences, The University of Birmingham

Professor David Roberts—Distinguished Adviser at BP Exploration

Professor David Read—Department of Animal and Plant Sciences, University of Sheffield

PPARC

Mr. Peter Warry—Chair

Professor Ian Halliday—Chief Executive

Professor George Efstathiou—University of Cambridge

Professor Brian Foster—University of Bristol

Dr. George Gray—retired

Mr. David Hendon—Department of Trade and Industry

Professor John Inkson—University of Exeter

Professor Dewi Lewis—Amersham plc

Professor Keith Mason—Mullard Space Science Laboratory

Professor Chris Sachrajda—University of Southampton

Professor Anneila Sargent—California Institute of Technology

Mrs. Judith Scott—British Computer Society

Mr. David Steeds

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list the financial and commercial links with industry of each member of the Science Research Council. [132523]

Ms Hewitt: Details of Research Council members' financial and commercial links with industry are available from each Council's Register of Members' Interests available from their website: Biotechnology and Biological Science Research Council, www.bbsrc.ac.uk; Council of the Central Laboratory of the Research Councils, www.cclrc.ac.uk; Engineering and Physical Sciences Research Council, www.epsrc.ac.uk; Economic and Social Research Council, www.esrc.ac.uk; Natural Environment Research Council, www.nerc.ac.uk; Medical Research Council, www.mrc.ac.uk; Particle Physics and Astronomy Research Council, www.pparc.ac.uk. For the convenience of Members I am placing paper copies in the Libraries of the House. A full list of Research Council members was given in my answer to my right hon. Friends Question No. 132495.

SMEs

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information her Department has collected regarding the number of small- and medium-sized enterprises that have gone out of business in the past 12 months owing to the high cost of employer's liability compulsory insurance. [132859]

Nigel Griffiths: In my discussions with the British Chambers of Commerce, Federation of Small Business, Institute of Directors, CBI SME Council and the Forum of Private Business in the past 12 months, during which time this subject has been raised, they have provided no figures and no specific cases of businesses citing these cases as the sole reason for ceasing to trade. Nor has the DTI been able to source such information elsewhere.

I have been working with these organisations and the insurers to address issues arising from employer's liability insurance.

South Africa

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many officials from her Department assisted in the negotiations with the National Industrial Participation and the Defence Industrial Participation programmes with South Africa; what their role was in these negotiations; and what posts they held in her Department at the time of the negotiations. [132378]

Ms Hewitt: None.

WTO Conference

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant to her oral statement of 17 September 2003, Official Report, columns 861–67, on the WTO Ministerial Conference, what assessment she has made of the role of NGOs in the collapse of the World Trade Organisations talks. [131957]

Ms Hewitt: The NGO community played an important role in the run-up to Cancun and at the WTO Ministerial-Conference. As I said in my statement to the House on 17 September, I warmly welcomed the UK Trade Network participation at Cancun.

The Government will continue to work with NGOs, and developing country members of the WTO, to ensure that this is a true 'development' round and that trade rules are improved to benefit the world's poorest people.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when she will reply in full to the letter from the hon. Member for Totnes dated 24 July 2003 concerning the World Trade Organisation negotiations in Cancun. [132591]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: A reply was sent out on 15 October 2003.

MINISTER FOR WOMEN

Special Advisers

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister for Women what proportion of special advisers working in Government Departments are women. [131478]

Mr. Alexander: I have been asked to reply.

At 14 October, there are 77 special advisers in post of which 23 are women.

HEALTH

Water Fluoridation

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what proportion of the public must be in agreement before water may be fluoridated in their area; [132113]

(2) how the Government plans to assess local opinion on the fluoridation of water supplies; [132115]

(3) to what extent local public opinion will be binding on the Strategic Health Authority in relation to water fluoridation. [132118]

Miss Melanie Johnson: It is Government policy that no area will be required to fluoridate its water supply unless the local population is in favour. Detailed provision on the local consultations required and the assessment of public opinion will be the subject of regulations to be made under Clause 61 of The Water Bill, currently in Committee before this House.

Accident and Emergency Services

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients admitted to Accident and Emergency in Hull and the East Riding in (a) 2002 and (b) 2003 waited for more than 12 hours before being treated or transferred to a ward. [132394]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The NHS Plan set a target for accident and emergency (A&E) to reduce the maximum wait in A&E from arrival to admission, transfer or discharge to four hours by 2004.

In line with this target from 2001, the Department has collected data on total time spent in A&E from arrival to admission, transfer or discharge. The available figures for Hull and East Yorkshire National Health Service Trusts are shown in table 1.

Table 1. Total time spent in A&E Departments, Hull and East Yorkshire Hospitals NHS Trust

Year	Quarter	Total attendances at major A&E	Percentage of patients who spent less than 4 hours in A&E	Number of patients spending more than 4 hours in A&E
2003–04	1	26,147	91.4	2,237
2002–03	4	23,919	84.6	3,695
2002–03	3	23,082	74	6,000
2002–03	2	24,313	64	8,827

The Department collects data on waiting times in A&E post decision to admit patients to a hospital ward. The figures for Hull and East Yorkshire NHS Trusts for the two years ended March 2002 and March 2003 are shown in table 2.

Table 2. Admissions through major A&E Departments, Hull and East Yorkshire Hospitals NHS Trust

Year	Quarter	Number of patients admitted through major A&E	Patients not placed in bed in a ward within 4 hours of a decision to admit	Percentage
2003–04	1	6,249	205	3.3
2002–03	4	6,411	349	5.4
2002–03	3	6,051	252	4.2

Breast Cancer

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what measures other than advising women of lifestyle changes his Department is taking to prevent breast cancer; [131315]

(2) what discussions he has had with other Departments on possible (a) environmental and (b) other causes of breast cancer. [131316]

Miss Melanie Johnson: It is not clear exactly what causes breast cancer, but it is thought that there are many risk factors, some already well established and some still being investigated. The main risk factors are being female and increasing age. The majority of other risk factors are linked to lifestyle. Key prevention measures include improving dietary intake, including increasing fruit and vegetable consumption, increasing physical activity and staying at a healthy weight.

About five per cent. of all breast cancer cases (fewer than 2,000 per year) may be caused by breast cancer genes. The National Institute for Clinical Excellence is developing a clinical guideline on the classification and care of women at risk of familial breast cancer in primary, secondary care and tertiary care. The guideline is expected to be published in February 2004.

The Government's White Paper, "Our Inheritance, Our Future—Realising the Potential of Genetics in the NHS", was published in June 2003. The Department has collaborated with Macmillan Cancer Relief to develop a model approach to genetic cancer services for people at risk of, or concerned about, familial cancer. The model is patient-centred, describing a continuum of advice and care involving primary care, local cancer services and specialised genetic and cancer services. A tendering exercise has begun to pilot all or certain aspects of the model. It is envisaged that there will be six evaluated pilot sites in England to inform the future development of cancer genetic services, as envisaged in the National Health Service Cancer Plan. Bids for pilot project funding must be submitted by 31 October 2003.

Women should be breast aware at all times. The Government promote the overriding importance of teaching women to be breast aware, knowing that 90 per cent. of breast cancers will be found by women themselves. The breast awareness five point code is as follows:

know what is normal for you;

look and feel;

know what changes to look for;

report any changes without delay; and attend for breast screening if aged 50 or over.

The Department, together with Cancer Research UK, produces a leaflet entitled "Be Breast Aware". The leaflet is widely available from general practitioner's surgeries and breast screening units. 1.5 million copies were printed in 2002–03.

Officials from the Department have had discussions with the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs regarding possible links between environmental chemicals, in particular, organochlorine pesticides, and breast cancer.

In 1999, the independent Committee on Carcinogenicity of Chemicals in Food Consumer Products and the Environment (COC) considered this issue and concluded that lindane and other organochlorine pesticides were not a significant risk factor in breast cancer. The remit of the COC is to advise Government Departments on all aspects of the carcinogenicity of chemicals. The COC is currently reviewing new data on this issue.

The COC has also considered the possible association between alcoholic beverages and breast cancer. A statement was issued in 1995, indicating that there was not enough evidence to conclude that the ingestion of alcoholic beverages was a cause of breast cancer. The COC is reviewing new data on this issue with a view to updating its statement next year.

There have been allegations of an association between environmental radiation and breast cancer and these are being considered by the independent Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment. The remit of this Committee is to advise Government Departments on the health effects of environmental exposure to radiation.

Call Centres

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department plans to outsource call centre work to premises outside the United Kingdom. [132112]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Department has no plans to outsource call centre work for which it is responsible to premises outside the United Kingdom.

Cancelled Operations

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many operations in Hull and the East Riding in (a) 2002 and (b) 2003 were cancelled for non-clinical reasons; and what proportion of admissions these figures represent in each case. [132398]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested is shown in the table.

Criminal Records

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the impact on voluntary organisations concerned with the delivery of personal care to elderly and vulnerable people of the cost of Criminal Records Bureau checks. [130701]

Paul Goggins: I have been asked to reply.

A Regulatory Impact Assessment which assesses the impact on different sectors of the recent fee increase was placed in the Library on 5 June.

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he had with the National Care Standards Commission (NCSC) on the Care Home Regulations in place since 1 April 2002, with particular reference to Criminal Records Bureau checks on staff to be employed in the care home sector; what directions have been given to the NCSC; and what representations have been received by his Department. [131621]

Dr. Ladyman: Ministers and officials meet regularly with the National Care Standards Commission (NCSC) to discuss a wide range of matters, including the regulation of care homes and Criminal Records Bureau (CRB) checks. I last met with representatives of care homes organisations on 24 September 2003. In the last few months I have received 125 letters from right hon. and hon. Members and five letters from members of the public on CRB checks for the care home sector. I have given no directions to the NCSC on this matter.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what factors underlay the decision to bring into effect the Care Home Regulation, from 1 October, that stipulates that all new staff should have a Criminal Records Bureau check completed before starting work; what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the interim guidance on this matter from the National Care Standards Commission; what assessment he has made of the effect of enforcing the regulation on the long-term care sector; and if he will make a statement. [132444]

Dr. Ladyman: Since 1 April 2002, all new staff in care homes have been required to obtain a satisfactory Criminal Records Bureau (CRB) check as part of their pre-employment checks. The impact of this requirement was assessed as part of a Regulatory Impact Assessment.

However, in the light of the initial difficulties experienced by the CRB in dealing with the level of demand for checks, in June 2003 the National Care Standards Commission (NCSC) issued interim guidance on how to deal with recruitment of care home staff, while steps were taken to improve the CRB's performance. The intention of the guidance was to enable care homes to recruit staff while ensuring residents were protected.

Following significant improvements made at the CRB, the NCSC rightly decided to look again at its guidance. Where CRB clearances are not in place, the NCSC will continue to apply its discretion on the use of its enforcement powers on a case by case basis, where this is appropriate.

The Department has not made an assessment of the effectiveness of the NCSCs interim guidance. However, we are aware that provider organisations welcomed the guidance and their recent concerns were not with its operation, but its withdrawal.

Care Homes

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many (a) residential care home and (b) nursing home places have been lost in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available in Gloucestershire; [133294]

(2) if he will make a statement on the provision of (a) nursing home and (b) residential home care in Gloucestershire. [133295]

Dr. Ladyman: In the period 1993–2001, there was an overall increase in the number of places in residential and nursing care homes in Gloucestershire. In 1993 there were 2,854 residential care and 3,228 nursing care home places totalling 6,082. This is compared to 4,241 residential care and 2,966 nursing care places totalling 7,207 in 2001.

Child Health Statistics

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children in each year since 1997 have been diagnosed with (a) eczema, (b) asthma, (c) AIDS and (d) glaucoma. [132210]

Dr. Ladyman: Information on eczema, asthma and glaucoma is not collected centrally in the form requested.

Hospital episode statistics collect data on admissions. Table 1 shows hospital admissions—this does not represent numbers of children diagnosed with these conditions, as a child may have more than one admission within the year, or may not be admitted at all.

Notes:
1. Admissions are defined as the first period of in-patient care under one consultant within one healthcare provider. Please note that admissions do not represent the number of in-patients, as a person may have more than one admission within the year.
2. The primary diagnosis is the first of up to 14 (seven prior to 2002–03) diagnosis fields in the Hospital Episode Statistics (HES) data set and provides the main reason why the patient was in hospital.
3. Grossing—figures have not been adjusted for shortfalls in data (ie the data are ungrossed).

Diagnostic and Treatment Centres

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which Government agencies are involved in schemes to offer patients choice in their NHS treatment. [129611]

Mr. Hutton: Nine choice pilot schemes are in operation. Local schemes covering a wide range of specialties are operating in Berkshire, Dorset and Somerset, Greater Manchester, London, Trent, Surrey and Sussex and West Yorkshire. In addition, we have a national coronary heart disease choice pilot and an ophthalmology choice pilot operating across the south of England. Strategic health authorities, primary care trusts and national health service trusts are involved in the planning and delivery of choice pilots. NHS Direct has also provided support to three pilot schemes that are operating with call centre based patient care advisers.

NHS Direct

David Davis To ask the Secretary of State for Health what call statistics have been collated for the East Riding NHS Direct call centre in Willerby for the last 12 months. [132412]

Ms Rosie Winterton: In the last twelve months (October 2002—September 2003), NHS Direct Tees, East and North Yorkshire handled 257,347 calls. For the corresponding time period in the previous twelve months (October 2001—September 2002), NHS Direct Tees, East and North Yorkshire handled 229,961 calls. This represents an 11 per cent. increase in call volumes.

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what role NHS Direct is expected to have in Government schemes to offer patient choice. [129596]

Mr. Hutton: NHS Direct is currently involved in three pilot schemes to offer choice of hospital to national health service patients. NHS Direct's existing infrastructure and expertise is being used to support call centre based patient care advisers. Strategic health authorities are currently planning for the national roll-out of choice of hospital and booking. This will include their plans for the role and provision of telephone services to support booking and choice.

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what schemes to offer patients choice in their NHS treatment will be operating in conjunction with NHS Direct. [129598]

Mr. Hutton: A number of pilot schemes are currently offering patients choice over the hospital in which they receive their treatment. NHS Direct is involved in pilots in London, Greater Manchester and Surrey and Sussex, using its existing infrastructure and expertise to support call centre based patient care advisers. The experience and learning of the choice pilots will support the national roll-out of patient choice.

Efexor

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children under the age of 18 years have been prescribed the anti-depressant Efexor in each of the past five years. [132314]

Dr. Ladyman: Information is not available in the form requested. The table shows the estimated number of prescription items of venlafaxine (Efexor being a branded form) dispensed in the community in England for children between 1999 and 2002. Children are defined as 0 to 15-year-olds and those aged 16 to 18 in full-time education.

On 19 September an expert group of the Committee on Safety of Medicines advised that venlafaxine should not be used in children and adolescents under the age of 18 years for the treatment of depressive illness. Advice was also issued on stopping treatment with venlafaxine.

Estimated number of prescription items of all venlafaxine dispensed in the community in England for children between 1999 and 2002

	Number
1999	5,000
2000	6,000
2001	9,000
2002	13,000

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many reports the Medicines Control Agency has received of suicides attributed to Efexor in each of the last five years; and how many yellow card reports the Medicines Control Agency has received about Efexor in each of the last five years. [132315]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The number of adverse drug reactions received by the Medicines and Healthcare Products Regulatory Agency (MHRA) under the yellow card scheme in respect of venlafaxine (Efexor) over the last five years is shown in the table, together with the number of reports of completed suicide.

	Number of UK reports for venlafaxine (Efexor)	Number of reports of completed suicide for venlafaxine (Efexor)
1999	444	3
2000	349	3

The number of reports received via the yellow card scheme does not directly equate to the number of people who suffer adverse reactions to drugs for a number of reasons, including an unknown level of under-reporting. It is important to note that the reporting of a reaction does not necessarily mean it was caused by the drug and may relate to other factors, such as the patients underlying illness or other medicines taken concurrently.

As with all medicines, the MHRA and the Committee on Safety of Medicines are keeping the safety of venlafaxine under continuous review. The summary of product characteristics for venlafaxine advises prescribers about the risk of suicide that is inherent in patients with depressive illness.

Energy Use Targets

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the voluntary targets for energy use in NHS capital schemes have been made mandatory; what progress his Department has made in revising the NHS carbon dioxide standard of heat insultation; if it is his intention to bring the revised NHS carbon dioxide standard into line with the current British Standard for heat insulation (BS 5422, as revised in 2001); and whether any further upward revision of BS 5422 resulting from this review will be followed without delay by an equivalent upward revision of NHS carbon dioxide. [132333]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I refer the hon. Member to the response I gave on Monday 6 October 2003, Official Report, column 1289W.

In that reply, MES CO2 is purely a reference number for the NHS Estates model engineering specification on thermal insulation and does not relate to carbon dioxide.

Epsom and St. Helier Hospitals

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the number of people admitted to Epsom and St. Helier hospitals via the accident and emergency departments in each of the past 24 months. [131636]

Mr. Hutton: The table shows the total number of admissions to Epsom and St. Helier National Health Service Trust via its accident and emergency (A&E) department, in the latest 24 months for which figures are available.

Eye Tests

Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many free sight tests were given to (a) pensioners and (b) other people in (i) Kirklees and (ii) England in each year since 1997. [132141]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The table shows the number of national health service sight tests paid for in Calderdale and Kirklees Health Authority (HA) for 1997–98 to 2002–03. Figures for the number of sight tests by constituency or age are not collected centrally. The table shows the number of sight tests where "patient aged 60 and over" was given as the eligibility category and all other sight tests.

Eligibility to NHS sight tests was extended to those aged 60 and over from 1 April 1999. There was an increase of 2.4 million sight tests between 1998–99 and 1999–2000 in England. It is fair to assume that the vast majority of this increase was due to newly eligible people aged 60 or over obtaining NHS sight tests.

However, some patients aged 60 and over will be eligible for sight tests for other reasons as well (for example, on income grounds). The classification for such patients will depend on the patient and the practitioner. The increase in the number of sight tests for those over 60 may therefore reflect an increasing awareness of the eligibility of over 60s.

Food Products (Health Claims)

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer to question ref. 130174, on health claims about food products, what estimate he has made of the cost to a manufacturer of making such an application. [132418]

Miss Melanie Johnson: No such estimate has yet been made. The Food Standards Agency is currently consulting on the proposed regulation on nutrition and health claims, and preparing an assessment of the potential impact, including application costs, on industry. The consultation package specifically requests information from manufacturers to inform that assessment.

Good Friday Agreement

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures have been taken in the last 12 months to promote co-operation in health matters through the east-west dimension of the Good Friday Agreement. [131947]

Mr. Leslie: I have been asked to reply.

Strand Three of the Belfast or Good Friday Agreement identified health as one of the possible issues for discussion within the British-Irish Council. Work focusing on telemedicine and e-health is being taken forward by the Isle of Man. A working group has met seven times since February 2001 and members have visited a number of telemedicine applications either being piloted or in everyday use. This work has been particularly useful to those administrations with the challenge of delivering health and social care in rural and remote communities.

GPs/Dentists

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many practising NHS (a) dentists and (b) general practitioners there were in Southend West in (i) 1997 and (ii) 2002. [130956]

Dr. Ladyman: Figures for general dental services (GDS) dentists by primary care trust (PCT) were not collected prior to 2002. The number of GDS dentists in Southend on Sea PCT at 31 December 2002 was 54. This figure includes principals, assistants and vocational dental practitioners. Figures for hospital and community health services dental staff are shown in the table.

Health Services (Battersea)

Martin Linton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the impact on the Battersea constituency of his Department's health policies and actions since 2 May 1997. [123709]

Mr. Hutton: Detailed information on the impact of departmental policies nationally is set out in the Department of Health annual reports. A copy of the most recent report "Department of Health—Government Expenditure Plans 2003/2004" is available in the Library and on the Department's website.

The impact of policies is not examined by constituency and statistics collected centrally by the Department are not collected on a constituency basis.

My hon. Friend's constituency falls within the geographical area covered by Wandsworth Primary Care Trust (PCT), St. George's Healthcare National Health Service Trust and the former Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth Health Authority (HA).

[1] Figures for 1997–98 and 1998–99 are not comparable to the later figures, as these are for Hospital and Community Health Services (HCHS) only.

Note:
From 1999–2000 allocations have included HCHS, QMS cash limited and prescribing components (2002–03 saw the addition of HIV/Aids and QMS non cash limited components).

Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth HA and the NHS trusts within it have also received additional funding for certain policies. This includes:

£6.6 million for accident and emergency modernisation in 2000–01.

Nationally, in 2000–01 recurrent investment of £50 million was available for the improvement of cancer services. For 2001–02, an additional £255 million is available nationally for cancer care. Merton, Sutton and Wandsworth HA has received £300,000 for the investment of cancer equipment. This has already been delivered and is now in use.

£4.5 million, £453,000 and £406,000 to reduce waiting lists and times in 1998–99, 1999–2000 and 2000–01 respectively.

£2.25 million to expand critical care services in 2000–01.

£3.3 million and £2.9 million to deal with winter pressures in 1998–99 and 2000–01.

£228,000 for heart disease services in 2000–01.

£35,000 invested into dentistry in 2000–01.

I am informed by South West London Strategic Health Authority that in 2002–03, the Wandsworth PCT's overall allocation included the following earmarked funding for certain policies (there has been no earmarked funding in 2003–04):

£470,000 for mental health.

£376,000 for coronary heart disease.

£471,000 for cancer.

£348,000 for information management and technology.

£523,000 for primary care.

£2.7 million for capacity.

One of the public's principal concerns about the NHS has been waiting times. Waiting list information for St. George's is shown in the table.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he has taken to ensure that people with learning disabilities are not deprived of housing benefit as a result of their accommodation being registered under the Care Standards Act 2000. [133167]

Dr. Ladyman: This is a matter for the Department of Work and Pensions.

Hypertension

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress the Government are making towards their target on hypertension. [130110]

Miss Melanie Johnson: High blood pressure is addressed through the national service framework (NSF) for coronary heart disease, which identifies the importance of prevention, detection and effective treatment of high blood pressure.

National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) guidelines for the management of hypertension in primary care to be published in February 2004, and the new general medical services contract, will further support national health service action to tackle high blood pressure.

It is also essential that individuals across the population be made aware of the risks associated with high blood pressure and the importance of regular testing. The Department has contributed to the funding of the Blood Pressure Association's national blood pressure testing week in September 2002 and again this year. This voluntary screening event offers people the chance to visit temporary blood pressure testing stations in order to check their own blood pressure numbers and find out more about high blood pressure.

The Department, working jointly with the Food Standards Agency, has called on industry to take a lead in reducing salt in processed foods and together will lead a salt stakeholders meeting to highlight the role of all sectors including industry health and consumer bodies.

Wider initiatives, such as five-a-day, to increase fruit and vegetable consumption and the recently formed, cross-government activity co-ordination team to increase mass participation in physical activity and sport, also have the potential to reduce the risk of high blood pressure in individuals.

Influenza Vaccinations

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will fund a scheme to offer influenza vaccinations to employees of large organisations on their work premises; and if he will make a statement. [132461]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Department's policy for recommending influenza vaccination is to protect those most at risk from serious illness should they catch influenza.

If employees of companies are in the recommended risk group to be vaccinated they can receive their flu vaccination from their general practitioner free of charge. Otherwise it is a decision for individual companies as to whether or not they offer their employees influenza vaccination under an occupational health scheme.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to extend the provision of free influenza vaccinations to citizens under 65; what assessment he has made of the cost of extending provision; and if he will make a statement. [132462]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Departmental policy is determined following recommendations from the Joint Committee on Vaccinations and Immunisation (JCVI). This is an independent group of experts, which reviews all current research on the subject of immunisation and its recommendation is based on reducing morbidity and mortality among the population.

Based upon current scientific research, the JCVI recommends that people aged 65 years and over and those aged under 65 years of age in certain clinical risk groups benefit most from being immunised against influenza.

This advice is kept under regular review.

IVF Treatment

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the draft NICE guidance on IVF treatment. [132350]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Department commissioned the National Institute for Clinical Excellence in July 2001 to produce a clinical guideline for National Health Service fertility services. The guideline will cover primary, secondary, and tertiary care, including in vitro fertilisation treatment.

A draft guideline was issued to a stakeholder group for consultation on 2 June 2003. A second draft was published for public consultation on 26 August.

Publication of the final document is expected in February 2004.

Licensing of Medicines

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the Medicines and Healthcare Products Regulatory Agency powers to require pharmaceutical companies to provide all available data and reports on products submitted for licensing. [132316]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Medicines and Healthcare Products Regulatory Agency (MHRA), already has the necessary powers to require pharmaceutical companies to provide all available data and reports when submitting an application for product licensing.

The Medicines for Human Use (Marketing Authorisation Etc.) Regulations 1994 require companies to make applications in accordance with the relevant European Community legislation, including Directive 2001/83/EC on the Community code relating to medicinal products for human use. All information which is relevant to the evaluation of the medicinal product concerned must be included in the application, whether favourable or unfavourable to the product.

NHS Compensation Payments

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much compensation was paid to patients and relatives by the NHS in each year since 1990. [132739]

Ms Rosie Winterton: This information is not held centrally.

NHS Dental Registration (Children)

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children in Hull and East Riding were registered with an NHS dentist on (a) 1 September 2002 and (b) 1 September 2003. [132392]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The table shows the number of children registered with a general dental services (GDS) dentist in the Hull and East Riding area for 31 August 2002 and 2003.

Number of children registered with a GDS dentist in the Hull and East Riding Area, at 31 August 2003

	2002[1]	2003
Hull and East Riding HA[1]	79,056	—
East Yorkshire PCT	—	21,564
Yorkshire Wolds and Coast PCT	—	14,270
Eastern Hull PCT	—	14,712
West Hull PCT	—	24,668

[1] In October 2002, responsibilities for dentistry were moved from health authorities (HAs) to primary care trusts (PCTs).

Note:

Registrations lapse if patients do not return to their dentist within 15 months. The registration figures for children therefore exclude those who have not been to their GDS dentist within the past 15 months. The figures also exclude children who receive dental treatment from other national health service dental services, including dental access centres.

NHS Dentists

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of children were registered with an NHS dentist in each primary care trust in the last year for which figures are available. [131030]

Ms Rosie Winterton: At 30 June 2003, 6.7 million children were registered with a general dental service (GDS) dentist in England, 60.4 per cent. of the population of children. Information on the percentage of the population and of children registered with a dentist in each strategic health authority area and primary care trust (PCT) area by region at 30 June 2003, has been placed in the Library.

Primary care trusts have little influence over the provision of general dental services in their area under the current statutory arrangements. Proposals in the Health and Social Care (Community Health and Standards) Bill will give PCTs a duty to secure the provision of primary dental services. The proposed changes will help underpin a modernised high-quality primary dental service provided through contracts between PCTs and dental practices properly integrated with the rest of the national health service. With these new responsibilities will go the £1.2 billion financial resources currently held centrally.

Registrations lapse if patients do not return to their dentist within 15 months, and so the registration figures exclude patients who have not been to their GDS dentist within the past 15 months. The figures also exclude patients who receive dental treatment from other NHS dental services including dental access centres.

Otitis Media

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of children diagnosed with otitis media have parents who smoke. [132211]

Miss Melanie Johnson: This information is not held centrally.

Paediatric Continence Services

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether his Department has completed an audit of whether the guidance "Good Practice in Continence Services" has improved paediatric continence services; [132876]

(2) what assessment his Department has made of how the children's national service framework will improve services for children with continence problems; [132885]

(3) what assessment his Department has made of how many children in England suffer from (a) nocturnal enuresis, (b) daytime wetting and (c) constipation and soiling. [132887]

Dr. Ladyman: Good Practice in Continence Services was issued by the Department in April 2000 and provides guidance to primary care trusts (PCTs) on continence services. This includes that PCTs should have specialist continence services in place, which provide patients with an individual assessment of their needs. Provision of these services in England is a matter for PCTs, which are responsible for determining the level of services required to meet the needs of their local populations.

The children's national service framework (NSF) will set out standards covering a broad range of services, including the management of common childhood conditions. Whilst few specific conditions will be covered, the standards are likely to cover what support should be available to children and their parents in managing a wide range of conditions and problems, including enuresis and soiling. The NSF will emphasise the promotion of evidence-based clinical guidelines and a number of examples of good practice in a range of different areas.

Information on the prevalence of these common conditions in childhood is not collected centrally.

Private Operations

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people classed as self pay undertook operations in the private sector in each year since 1997, broken down by type of operation. [122791]

Mr. Hutton: The Department of Health does not collect information on the number of patients having operations carried out in the private sector, nor on the source of funding for those operations.

Rheumatoid Arthritis

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his response to the Adjournment Debate on rheumatoid arthritis of 17 July 2003, Official Report, columns 537–42, what the evidential basis was for his statement that postcode prescribing of anti-TNF therapy is now rare. [131899]

Dr. Ladyman: Implementation of the National Institute of Clinical Excellence drug appraisals in the national health service has had an impact in reducing postcode prescribing. More patients are now able to get the drugs they need. The Arthritis and Musculoskeletal Alliance report appears to support this, as almost two-thirds of the rheumatologists surveyed reported no problems. Anti-TNF drugs should help approximately 15,000 people. The manufacturers of these drugs estimate that around 9,000 patients are already benefiting.

Sexual Health

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans his Department has to introduce a national service framework for sexual health. [132779]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government have no plans to introduce a national service framework for sexual health. The Government have already published the national strategy for sexual health and HIV in 2001 and has outlined progress and plans in the response to the Health Select Committee's report on sexual health, published in September 2003.

This recognises the value of developing and spreading good practice and identifying recommended standards for sexual health and HIV. Recommended standards for HIV treatment and care were published on 6 October this year and similar work is under way for sexually transmitted infections, reproductive health and psychosexual services.

Smoking

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps his Department is taking to encourage other Government Departments and agencies to become smoke-free; [130062]

(2) what plans the Government have to bring in legislation to control smoking in the workplace; [130063]

(3) what guidance the Government give to employers regarding smoking in the workplace; [130064]

(4) what plans he has to introduce a code of practice on smoking in the workplace in (a) England and (b) Wales; [130065]

(5) whether he plans to ban smoking on government premises. [130066]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The White Paper, "Smoking Kills", states that smoke-free places are the ideal. We will continue to encourage employers and the managers of public places to introduce smoke-free policies.

An employer already has a duty, under Section 2 of the Health and Safety at Work Act 1974, to > "ensure so far as is reasonably practicable, the health, safety and welfare at work of all his employees", and the Workplace (Health, Safety and Welfare) Regulations 1992 require that

> "rest rooms and rest areas shall include suitable arrangements to protect non-smokers from discomfort caused by tobacco smoke".

Guidance and advice on protecting people from second-hand smoke and on introducing smoke-free policies is available from the Health and Safety Executive and the Department in the form of leaflets and website material.

Psychologists (South Essex)

Mr. Francois: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many psychologists were employed by South Essex Mental Health and Community Care NHS Trust on September. [132629]

Dr. Ladyman: South Essex Mental Health and Community Care National Health Service Trust was replaced by South Essex Partnership NHS Trust in April 2002. The number of psychologists employed by South Essex Partnership NHS Trust in September 2003 has not been published. Figures for September 2002 are shown in the table.

Stroke Services

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what action his Department is taking to accelerate the spread of information on functional electrical stimulation techniques for the rehabilitation of stroke sufferers; [132586]

(2) what steps his Department is taking to raise awareness of functional electrical stimulation techniques for the rehabilitation of stroke sufferers; [132587]

(3) how many NHS trusts provide functional electrical stimulation as a treatment for stroke sufferers. [132588]

Dr. Ladyman: Functional electrical stimulation (FES) is available only in specialist centres where there is an interest in the procedure. It requires physiotherapists who have specialist training in the technique supported by specialist medical physicists. The forthcoming National Clinical Guidelines for Stroke from the Royal College of Physicians states that FES should not be used on a routine basis and that it should only be considered for a very select group of stroke patients as determined by local protocols. We do not know how many national health service trusts provide FES as a treatment for stroke.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many stroke physicians there were in (a) 1998 to 1999 and (b) 2002 to 2003. [130115]

Mr. Hutton: The Department does not collect data on stroke physicians; a number of specialties are linked with the treatment of patients with strokes. The main specialties are geriatric medicine, neurology and rehabilitation medicine but it is not possible to say how many of the physicians within these specialties specialise in the treatment of strokes.

The table shows the number of hospital medical staff in geriatric medicine, neurology and rehabilitation medicine from 1998 to 2003.

Between September 1997 and June 2003, total consultant numbers in geriatric medicine, neurology and rehabilitation medicine increased by 380 (37 per cent.).

TRANSPORT

Trains (Television Cameras)

14. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of proposals by train operating companies to install television in railway carriages. [132973]

Mr. McNulty: Television may be installed in railway carriages for either onboard entertainment or security purposes. The first is a commercial matter for operators. CCTV for security purposes has already been installed by some operators and the Department is working with the Strategic Rail Authority to continue to improve security on trains.

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

15. Jonathan Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport was assessment he has made of the possibility of Channel Tunnel Rail Link domestic service trains stopping in the Medway towns. [132974]

Mr. McNulty: The Strategic Rail Authority yesterday launched a further public consultation on Channel Tunnel Rail Link domestic services, building on one carried out earlier this year. A particular issue for the consultation will be whether CTRL domestic services should run to the Medway Towns.

Bus Industry

16. Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent steps his Department has taken to disseminate best practice within the bus industry. [132975]

Mr. McNulty: The Department will shortly be publishing two good practice guides, one drawing on experience with Rural Bus Grant and Rural Challenge, and one on tendering of bus subsidy contracts. The Bus Partnership Forum has produced a report on Understanding Customer Needs and a code of conduct on Service Stability. Guidance on Quality Bus Partnerships was published in 2001.

School Transport

17. Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had with other Government Departments on the relationship between home to school transport and children's health. [132976]

Dr. Howells: My Department works closely with the Department of Health on all aspects of school travel policy. We are keen to encourage walking and cycling to school.

Bus Deregulation

18. Mr. Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies he has undertaken to assess the impact of bus deregulation in metropolitan areas. [132977]

Mr. McNulty: The impact of bus deregulation was studied in the years following 1986. No recent studies have been undertaken but we continue to publish statistical data on kilometres operated, the cost of services, passenger satisfaction etc. We are in constant touch with the Passenger Transport Executives and major bus operators about local developments. Later today I shall be meeting representatives from Greater Manchester about bus regulation issues.

Transport Provision

19. Nick Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, if he will make a statement on the relationship between transport provision and access to public services. [132978]

Mr. McNulty: The Social Exclusion Unit's February 2003 report "Making the Connections" showed that provision of good local transport and provision of public services in accessible places are both essential to enable people to access the services they need when they need them. The increased funding for local transport we have already provided, and inclusion of accessibility planning in local authorities' next transport plans, will help authorities deliver real improvements in accessibility for their communities.

Air Travel (Compensation)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what measures the Government will put in place to ensure that the proposed regulation establishing common rules on compensation and assistance to passengers in the event of denied boarding and of cancellation or long delay of flights is proportionate and workable; and if he will make a statement; [133568]

(2) if he will publish a regulatory impact assessment in respect of the proposed EU regulation establishing common rules on compensation and assistance to passengers in the event of denied boarding and of cancellation or long delay of flights. [133569]

Mr. McNulty: The UK is supportive of the basic aim of this regulation, which is to protect passengers who are denied boarding or are the victims of commercial cancellations. However, we also believe a balance should be struck between the rights of passengers and the additional costs to airlines, which may ultimately be passed through to the consumer. Accordingly, we have been working hard to improve the original text, to try to make it more balanced and workable. Once the regulation comes into force it will be binding in its entirety and directly applicable in member states, who will be required to designate a body responsible for its enforcement and ensure that sanctions laid down for infringements are effective, proportionate and dissuasive.

When the text of the regulation has been finalised we will be in a position to complete our Regulatory Impact Assessment, which will appear on the Department for Transport website in due course.

Driving Licences

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will require drivers to be retested for their driving licence on a regular basis. [133540]

Dr. Howells: The Government do not consider that the regular retesting of all drivers would be a proportionate measure to deliver road safety benefits. Courts already have powers to require those drivers who offend to undergo a driving test. Where a driver is guilty of a serious offence, this involves an extended length driving test.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the average waiting time was for a driver aged over 70 between applying for a licence renewal and the issue of the licence in each of the last three years. [133590]

Dr. Howells: The Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency (DVLA) aims to return licences 15 working days following receipt of a valid application (i.e. one complete in all respects). This can take longer where further inquiries are required into an individual's health or personal details. This is published in the DVLA's literature that supports application forms. Apart from a courtesy reminder system there are no separate arrangements specifically for processing applications from drivers aged over 70.

Flight Paths (Walthamstow)

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what altitude restrictions apply to aircraft on flight paths above Walthamstow; and how these have changed in the last five years. [131582]

Mr. McNulty [pursuant to his answer, 14 October 2003, Official Report, c. 168–69W]: The airspace over all of Walthamstow above 2,500 ft has been classified as 'controlled' for many years. Over the southernmost quarter of the Walthamstow constituency the airspace has been controlled to ground level since the opening of London City Airport. Aircraft using Heathrow and City operate within this controlled airspace. Aircraft inbound to Heathrow will normally be above 5,000 ft.

Over the remainder of my hon. Friend's constituency below 2,500 ft, helicopters and general aviation aircraft from smaller aerodromes can determine routes and altitudes according to their particular requirements. Such flights are subject to the Rules of the Air Regulations, notably Rule 5, which means most will be above 1,500 ft.

There have been no changes to the airspace over Walthamstow in the last five years.

Grosvenor Square (Street Closure)

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, what the costs to his Department were of the (a) closure of Grosvenor Square and (b) policing of the private event held there on 11 September. [131411]

Mr. McNulty: The event was organised by the Department for Culture, Media and Sport, and was policed by officers from the Home Department.

The closure of Grosvenor Square incurred no costs to the Department for Transport. The cost of the ad hoc policing arrangements to Government was approximately £7,000.

Light Rail Schemes

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what assessment his Department has made of the risk factors associated with light rail schemes (a) where there is a pre-existing light rail passenger base and (b) that rely on projections of passenger growth; and how this is reflected in his Department's costs and other assessments of such schemes; [131924]

(2) what risk assessment his Department has made of the Blackpool and Fleetwood Tramway renewal proposals; [131925]

(3) what account his Department took of the (a) extent and (b) costs of Disability Discrimination Act 1995 compliance in 2004 in its assessment of the costs and value for money of the minimal option of works to keep the Blackpool and Fleetwood Tramway operational; [131927]

(4) whether his Department has included regeneration benefits from the upgrade of the Blackpool and Fleetwood Tramway in its assessment of its value for money and cost-benefit ratios; [131928]

(5) what assessment his Department has made of the success of (a) light rail and (b) bus schemes in attracting users to public transport; [131963]

(6) what his Department's policy is on the upgrade of existing light rail networks; [131964]

(7) what research his Department has undertaken of the (a) benefits and (b) costs of (i) upgrading existing and (ii) building new light rail systems; [131965]

(8) what (a) assessment his Department has made of the cost-benefit ratios and (b) value for money of the options for the renewal of the Blackpool and Fleetwood Tramway. [131966]

Mr. McNulty: The Department is nearing completion of its assessment of the proposals by Blackpool borough council and Lancashire county council to upgrade the Blackpool Tramway. In common with all transport projects considered by the Department, it is being assessed using the New Approach To Appraisal (NATA) framework, which pays attention both to those impacts which can readily be monetarised (such as time savings) and to others of policy significance (such as environmental impacts) which can only be considered qualitatively.

The NATA framework also requires the preparation of an Economic Impact Report on the possible regeneration impact of the scheme and a thorough quantified risk assessment, both of which the Council has provided. My right hon. Friend will take into account the findings of the appraisal in the light of all the other pressures on his programmes in deciding whether to fund the scheme.

Lower-cost alternatives to the full scheme have also been appraised, taking account of the requirements of the Disability Discrimination Act.

A crucial, and difficult, part of the assessment of any light rail project is the forecasting of patronage. The uncertainties are always considerable, though greater in the case of proposals for an entirely new system than for an upgrading of a long-established line. Different scenarios, including optimistic and pessimistic, are examined to help capture the inherent uncertainty in forecasting future demand.

There has been no research on the relative costs and benefits of upgrading existing tram systems and of building new systems, since the circumstances and characteristics of individual schemes vary too greatly for such a comparison to be useful. For the same reason, the Department does not have any general policy as regards tram upgrades. Each proposed major local transport scheme is considered on its individual merits.

Evaluation Studies have been completed for new light rail systems, such as Croydon Supertram and Manchester Metrolink, which suggest that around 15 per cent. to 20 per cent. of passenger journeys on these systems would otherwise have taken place by car, and that generated trips can increase demand by up to 15 per cent. in the off-peak. However, there is also evidence that investment in buses can be successful in increasing public transport use. There is as yet only very limited experience in this country of guided bus schemes, which are the nearest bus-based equivalent to tram systems, and assessments of their relative attractiveness are therefore uncertain.

Light Rapid Transit Schemes (Hampshire)

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on progress with light rapid transit schemes in South Hampshire. [132963]

Mr. McNulty: The South Hampshire Rapid Transit scheme was approved for funding in March 2001. Unfortunately the cost estimates now exceed the threshold figure agreed at the time and my right hon. Friend is reviewing the options for its future.

Mersey Tunnels

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the proposed increase in tolls on the Mersey Tunnels. [133670]

Dr. Howells: The application by the Merseyside Passenger Transport Authority (Merseytravel) to increase the toll charges for the use of the Mersey Tunnels and representations against that application are currently being considered.

Motor Insurers Bureau

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the Motor Insurers Bureau receives Government funding. [133730]

Mr. McNulty: The Motor Insurers' Bureau (MIB) is a Company which was set up and is managed by the insurance industry. It is funded entirely by a levy on the insurance industry and receives no Government funding.

Motorway Resurfacing

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to take into account minimising noise disruption to schools as part of the criteria for resurfacing motorways; and if he will make a statement. [132567]

Mr. McNulty: Government policy is that lower noise surfaces should now be used, except for practical reasons, when any trunk road is resurfaced and it is currently anticipated that over 60 per cent. of the strategic road network will have been surfaced with lower noise materials by 2011. The phasing of resurfacing is usually based on the need to keep the road in optimum condition without causing excessive delays to traffic. Noise mitigation measures on roads built after 1988 take into consideration the need to reduce their impact on noise sensitive facilities such as schools, as well as residential properties.

Railways

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much money has been granted to (a) Railtrack in Administration and (b) to Network Rail (i) by way of grant and (ii) in loan guarantees since the appointment of the Administrator. [133667]

Dr. Howells: Network grants paid to Railtrack in Administration and Network Rail are as set out in the Rail Regulator's Periodic Review Final Conclusions of October 2000, as amended by agreements between Railtrack and the Department for Transport in April 2001 and between Network Rail and the Strategic Rail Authority in June 2002.

Railtrack in Administration received network grants of £654 million. The Secretary of State guaranteed loans and other liabilities of Railtrack in Administration up to £4.5 billion. To date, Network Rail has received network grants of £1.8 billion. The SRA has made available standby credit facilities of up to £21 billion to support Network Rail's borrowing.

Recorded Crime (Railways)

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the recorded crime figures on the Great Eastern/Anglia railway for the past four years; and if he will make a statement. [133658]

Mr. McNulty: The British Transport police have provided the following information on serious offences reported to the force:

	Total notifiable offences
	First Great Eastern	Anglia Railways
1999–2000	1,425	390
2000–01	1,584	324
2001–02	1,841	415
2002–03	1,696	409

Road Schemes

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received from the Royal Automobile Club about new road building projects. [133025]

Dr. Howells: The RAC Foundation have contributed to several of the Multi Modal Studies, including those involving new road building projects, on which the Secretary of State made announcements in December 2002 and July 2003. Since then my officials have had regular dialogue with the RAC Foundation.

Salisbury Transportation Package

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will complete his review of the Salisbury Transportation Package. [132923]

Mr. McNulty: Department for Transport Officials are currently working with Wiltshire County Council and Salisbury District Council to complete a re-appraisal of the transport package following an increase in scheme costs since the initial bid in the 2000 Local Transport Plan.

It is anticipated that this work will be completed in time for an announcement on future funding to be made in the Local Transport Plan settlement, which we expect to announce in December 2003.

US Warship Disposal

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the planned route within UK waters is of the ships from the US Reserve Fleet intended for dismantling on Teesside which have set sail from the US; what control he has over this route; and if he will make a statement. [133362]

Mr. McNulty: The routing for the first four ships within the contract will be through the English Channel, observing mandatory IMO traffic separation schemes, and up the east coast of the UK. Generally, international rights of freedom of navigation apply, although upon entry into UK waters the tows could be directed by the Secretary of State's Representative to change routing or to leave UK waters if he believed it necessary for safety reasons or to prevent pollution or to conduct salvage operations.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent guidance he has issued to the Marine Coastguard Agency in respect of the proposal to bring ships from the US Reserve Fleet to Teesside for disposal; what policy the Marine Coastguard Agency has adopted on this matter; what discussions the Marine Coastguard Agency has had with the US Marine Administration; and if he will make a statement. [133363]

Mr. McNulty: The Maritime and Coastguard Agency (MCA) must be satisfied that the ships can make the passage without undue risk to the marine environment or safety. The MCA has had a number of meetings with both the US Coast Guard and the US Maritime Administration. MCA marine surveyors have accompanied Coast Guard surveyors during inspections of the ships. The US authorities refused to allow the vessels to sail until the MCA confirmed it was satisfied with all arrangements. The MCA did so only when it had completed a detailed scrutiny of all aspects of the company's proposals in relation to towing the first four ships within the contract; the remaining ships have yet to be considered or approved.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from the EU Environment Commissioner in respect of the proposal to bring ships from the US Reserve Fleet to Teesside for disposal; and if he will make a statement. [133366]

Mr. McNulty: None.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what his latest estimate is of the annual cost to the Exchequer of the evasion of vehicle excise duty; and if he will make a statement. [132901]

Mr. McNulty: In March 2003 the Department published the results of a roadside survey which estimated the level of revenue lost from vehicle excise duty in 2002–03 to be £193 million, equivalent to 4.5 per cent. of the total revenue that should be raised.

TREASURY

Disabled Employees

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people with registered disabilities are in full-time employment. [132642]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Nigel Waterson, dated October 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question about the number of registered disabled people who are in full-time employment. (132642)

The Labour Force Survey (LFS) asks a series of questions which determine whether respondents are subject to the provisions of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. In the three month period ending August 2003, an estimated total of 1.88 million such people of working age were in full-time employment.

Further information on the definition of disability used in the above Act is available from: http://www.disability.gov.uk/dda/

National Minimum Wage

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people have benefited from the national minimum wage since its introduction (a) in Leeds, West and (b) in total; and in each case how much was given to them. [132741]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. John Battle, dated 21 October 2003:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your recent question on the number of people in the Leeds West parliamentary constituency and in the UK who have benefited from the national minimum wage (NMW) since its introduction, and how much has been given to them. (132741)

The Office for National Statistics (ONS) calculates estimates of the number of jobs paid less than NMW rates for the United Kingdom and Government Office Regions. A guide to measuring low pay and associated articles and data can be found on the National Statistics website at:

http://www.statistics.gov.uk/StatBase/Product.asp?vink=5837&Pos=1&ColRank=1&Rank=272

Estimates for Parliamentary Constituencies are not available.

No information is available on how much money has been given to people as a result of the National Minimum Wage.

British Troops (Tax and National Insurance)

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce reliefs on tax and National Insurance payments for British troops serving in Iraq. [133478]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Colchester (Bob Russell) on 6 May 2003, Official Report, column 625W.

Business Taxation

Mr. Swire: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to change the levels of taxation levied on the business sector; and if he will make a statement. [132654]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government keeps all taxes under review and any changes will be made as part of the normal Budget process. Since 1997 the Government has introduced a wide-ranging package of measures to make the UK an attractive place for business to locate and help small business, including cuts in corporation tax and the introduction of targeted measures such as the R&D tax credit, permanent 40 per cent. first year capital allowances and improvements to the capital gains tax regime.

Correspondence

Norman Lamb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will reply to the letter dated 9 September from the hon. Member for North Norfolk to the Paymaster General concerning the export of BAC Strikemaster aircraft. [132866]

John Healey: I have done so.

Customs and Excise (Vehicle Seizure)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer under what powers Customs and Excise officers may seize private vehicles at ports of entry in connection with duty paid goods. [133585]

John Healey: Section 141(1)(a) of the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979 (CEMA) gives Customs the power to seize vehicles used in the carriage, handling, deposit or concealment of goods liable to forfeiture.

Travellers may bring back to the UK as many duty-paid excise goods from another EU member state as they wish for their own use. But such goods which are not for their own use may not be brought back into the UK without payment of UK taxes, and are liable to forfeiture.

Economic Growth

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the economy's predicted level of growth for 2003–04. [132989]

Ruth Kelly: The Government's latest economic forecasts were published in the Financial Statement and Budget Report 2003 (HC 500) on 9 April. GDP growth was forecast to be 2 to 2.5 per cent. in 2003 and 3 to 3.5 per cent. in 2004. Updated growth forecasts will be published in the forthcoming pre-Budget report 2003.

Energy Efficiency

Alan Simpson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer of 25 June 2003, Official Report, column 760W, if he will set out the timetable for the detailed consultation on specific fiscal instruments to encourage household energy efficiency announced in the November 2002 pre-Budget statement. [132744]

John Healey: A consultation paper 'Economic instruments to improve household energy efficiency' was published on 1 August 2003, and the consultation will close on 24 October 2003. Responses will inform decisions made as part of the usual pre-Budget report and Budget process.

European Court of Justice

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the (a) reference number, (b) date and (c) subject of the decisions of the European Court of Justice that have a bearing on UK taxation regimes; and what the effects of these decisions are. [132557]

Dawn Primarolo: The European Court of Justice ensures that Community Law is uniformly interpreted and effectively applied, including in relation to tax matters. All judgments of the European Court of Justice are set out in full in the Official Journal of the European Communities (C Series), a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Income Tax

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the impact on marginal tax rates would be of reducing the starting rate of income tax by each one per cent. between 10 per cent. and 0 per cent. assuming no change in entitlement to tax credits or benefits. [133176]

Dawn Primarolo: I refer my right hon. Friend to table 2.1 on the Inland Revenue website www.inlandrevenue.gov.uk/stats/income_tax/it_t01_1.htm and table 1.6 on the Inland Revenue website www.inlandrevenue.gov.uk/stats/tax_expenditures/g_t06_1.htm.

Influenza

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people aged 65 years or over have died of influenza in (a) South Tyneside, (b) Tyne and Wear, (c) the North East and (d) the UK in each year since 1997. [133214]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Hepburn, dated 21 October 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question asking how many people aged 65 years or over died of influenza in (a) South Tyneside, (b) Tyne and Wear, (c) the North East and (d) the UK in each year since 1997. (133214)

The information requested is given in the table below.

Numbers of deaths from influenza for people aged 65 and over,[1] 1997 to 2001[2], for South Tyneside local authority, the former county of Tyne and Wear, North East Government Office Region and the United Kingdom[3]

Number of deaths

Year	South Tyneside	Tyne and Wear	North East	United Kingdom
1997	-	*	7	413
1998	-	-	*	129
1999	*	17	35	598
2000	*	8	32	630
2001	-	-	*	27

- Zero deaths
* Fewer than 5 deaths
[1] Deaths with an underlying cause of influenza defined using the International Classification of Diseases, Ninth Revision (ICD-9) code 487 for the years 1997 to 2000 and, for the year 2001, the International Classification of Diseases, Tenth Revision (ICD-10) codes J10 and J11.
[2] Figures are for deaths occurring in each calendar year, except for data for Scotland and Northern Ireland included in the United Kingdom totals. These are deaths registered in each calendar year.
[3] Deaths of usual residents of these areas.

Investment Trusts

Mr. Caton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment the Treasury has made of the Financial Services Authority's ability to regulate split capital investment trusts. [132990]

Ruth Kelly: The Treasury has full confidence in the way that the FSA is carrying out its regulatory responsibilities. Split-capital investment trusts are not currently directly regulated by the FSA—the Treasury has undertaken to consult on whether the FSA should regulate these companies.

Mr. Caton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment the Treasury has made of the security of investment in split capital trusts. [132991]

Ruth Kelly: Investments in split-capital investment trusts have many risks in common with other forms of equity investment. It is for individual investors to take appropriate financial advice before investing in the shares of these companies.

The Treasury, however, welcomes the changes to the listing and conduct of business rules, as they apply to investment trust companies, recently announced by the Financial Services Authority. We believe that these will improve investor protection and effectively tackle the issues which have arisen at some split-capital investment trusts.

Mr. Caton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will bring investment trusts fully into the regulation regime of the Financial Services Authority; [132992]

(2) if he will accept the recommendation of the Treasury Committee to bring investment trusts directly within the scope of investment product regulation by the Financial Services Authority. [132993]

Ruth Kelly: In its response to the Treasury Committee (published in the Committee's Fourth Special Report of Session 2002–03, HC651) the Treasury said:

'The Treasury welcomes the proposals put forward by the FSA in CP164 and believe that, when implemented, these will effectively tackle the issues which arose directly from split capital investment trusts. However, we accept that there may be a case for bringing investment trusts fully within regulation by the FSA. There are a number of ways in which this could be done and it is by no means clear which, if any, might be the most appropriate. The Treasury will, therefore, in conjunction with the FSA consider the available options for doing so and will, in due course, consult fully on these.'

This remains the Treasury's position.

Lorry Road User Charging Project

Pete Wishart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the estimated revenues for the lorry road user charging project are for each year for which figures are available; and what proportion of the estimated revenues for the project are expected to come from Scotland. [132776]

John Healey: There will be reductions in fuel duty for those paying the charge so that there is no increase in the overall tax burden for that sector of the haulage industry that buys fuel in the UK.

No assessment of revenues can be made until it is decided at what level the charge will be set, and what level of offsetting fuel duty reduction will be available to charge-payers. Decisions on fuel duties and other taxes are made on a Budget-by-Budget basis.

Money Laundering Regulations

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a regulatory impact assessment in respect of the Money Laundering Regulations 2003. [133537]

Ruth Kelly: A full Regulatory Impact Assessment will be completed for the Money Laundering Regulations 2003. Copies will be deposited in the Library of the House and it will also be available on the Treasury website.

Non-departmental Public Bodies (Expenditure)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the expenditure on non-departmental public bodies was (a) in the last year for which figures are available and (b) in 1996–97. [133662]

Mr. Boateng: Total spending by non-departmental public bodies for 1998–99 to 2002–03 is shown as follows. Data on a comparable basis is not readily available for earlier years. For each department, the total of their NDPB spending is contained within their Departmental Expenditure Limit (DEL), so that any increase in spending on their NDPBs is offset elsewhere within their total DEL.

	NDPB spending (£ million)
Outturn
1998–99	12,238
1999–2000	13,846
2000–01	14,670
2001–02	20,151
Estimated outturn
2002–03	24,843

Productivity Growth

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on average projected productivity growth for 2003–04. [132987]

Ruth Kelly: The Government's latest published forecasts for the UK economy were set out in this year's Financial Statement and Budget Report (HC500). A full update will be made in the forthcoming pre-Budget report.

Professional Indemnity Insurance

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many financial advisers he estimates are operating without professional indemnity insurance; and if he will make a statement. [132880]

Ruth Kelly: The Financial Services Authority (FSA) tell me that as at 30 September 2003 of the 4,047 firms that are required to hold professional indemnity insurance (PII) cover, 749 have yet to notify the FSA that they have obtained cover. At that same date, 82 firms have been granted a waiver from the requirement to hold PII and are, in effect, self-insuring. Under current market conditions, there can be a time lag of three months or more for a firm to obtain suitable cover and notify FSA of that fact.

The FSA published a consultation paper in July 2003 with new proposals on its PII policy and revised rules for firms. The new PII policy will give firms a more flexible framework within which they can choose how to combine PII and financial resources. This will help firms remain in business and will continue to protect consumers who may have claims against firms.

Public Bodies

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress is being made in relocating (a) Civil Service Departments and (b) public bodies from London. [132957]

Mr. Boateng: The Chancellor and Deputy Prime Minister asked Sir Michael Lyons, Director of the Institute of Local Government Studies at the University of Birmingham, to conduct an independent study into the scope for relocating a substantial number of public sector activities from London and the South East of England to other parts of the United Kingdom.

Sir Michael has now received responses from Government Departments to his review and is currently assessing these before preparing his final report.

Registered Maternities

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many registered maternities to women resident in (a) Fareham, (b) Gosport, (c) Portsmouth and (d) Havant local authority areas took place in (i) Blackbrook Maternity Unit, (ii) the Mary Rose Unit, St. Mary's Hospital Portsmouth, (iii) other Portsmouth Hospitals NHS Trust, (iv) other NHS hospitals, (v) at home and (vi) elsewhere in each of the last three years for which figures are available. [133578]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Colin Mowl to Mr. Mark Hoban, dated 21 October 2003:

The National Statistician has been asked to reply to your request for the number of registered maternities to women resident in (a) Fareham, (b) Gosport, (c) Portsmouth and (d) Havant local authority areas, which took place in (i) Blackbrook Maternity Unit, (ii) the Mary Rose Unit, St Mary's Hospital Portsmouth, (iii) other Portsmouth Hospitals NHS Trust, (iv) other NHS hospitals, (v) at home and (vi) elsewhere in the each of the last three years for which figures are available. I am replying in his absence. (133578)

The attached table gives data for 2000, 2001 and 2002.

Regulatory Impact Assessments

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many regulatory impact assessments have been produced by his Department since August 2001; if he will list those (a) produced following initial consultation with affected parties about the most appropriate methodology for assessing costs and other impacts and (b) which set out full commercial impacts, including profitability, employment, consumer prices and competitiveness, as recommended in Good Policy Making; and if he will make a statement. [132883]

Dawn Primarolo: HM Treasury, HM Customs and Excise and the Inland Revenue have produced 50 final Regulatory Impact Assessments since August 2001. These are listed below and are available from the House Libraries and departmental web sites.

HM Treasury

The Building Societies Act 1986 (Electronic Communications) Order 2003; The Credit Unions Act 1979 (Commencement No.3) Order 2003; The Regulatory Reform (Credit Unions) Order 2003; Implementation of the Insurers Reorganisation and Winding-up Directive; Extension of Financial Services Regulation to Mortgages; Statutory Instruments Needed under the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000; Undertakings for Collective Investment in Transferable Securities (UCITS) (Second Amending Directive); Regulating Insurance Mediation; Regulating Mortgages; Orders to be made in support of the transfer of Audit responsibility for the Special Health Service Health Authorities from the Audit Commission to the Comptroller and Auditor General; The Electronic Commerce Directive (Financial Service & Markets) Regulations 2002—July 2001; FSMA Regulated Activities (Amendment) (No 2) Order 2002—July 2001; Fourth Motor Insurance Directive Regulations 2002—October 2001; FSMA 2000 (Administration Orders relating to Insurers) Order 2002; Implementation of the Money Directive 2002; The Money Laundering Regulations 2001; The Protection of the Euro against Counterfeiting Regulations; The Insurance (Fees) regulation 2001; The Credit Unions (Increases in Limits on Deposits by persons too young to be members of Periods for Repayments of Loans) Order 2001; FSMA 2000 (Promotion of Collective Investment Schemes) (Exemptions) Order 2001; The Open Ended Investment Companies Regulations 2001.

Inland Revenue

Mandatory Electronic Payment for Large Employers, Payroll Services; National Insurance Contributions—Offshore Manning Taxation of UK Branches of Foreign Companies; Payments by Employers towards the incidental costs of Home working; Simplification of Employee Share Schemes; Stamp Duty in Disadvantaged Areas Extension of the Relief to all Non-Residential Property; Corporation Tax Relief and Employee Share Schemes ISAS—Simplified Voiding for Investor Error; Tax Law Rewrite Project—Income Tax (Earnings and Pensions) Bill; The New Tax Credits; National Insurance Contributions Bill; Fuel Scale Charge; Reform of the Taxation of Intangible Assets; Construction Industry Scheme; Research and Development Tax Credits for Large Companies/ Vaccines Research Relief; Exemptions for Gains and Losses on Substantial Shareholdings; Reform of the Corporate Debt, Financial Instruments and Foreign Exchange; Gains and Losses Regimes; Community Amateur Sports Club; Appendix to Enterprise Management Incentive.

Construction Industry Scheme: Issue of CIS5 (Partner) Certificates; Life Insurance Policies Etc.—Information Duties of Insurers.

HM Customs and Excise

Simplified Import VAT Accounting 2003; VAT Strategy: Joint and Several Liability 2003; VAT Strategy: Input Tax deduction without a valid VAT invoice 2003; Extension of the VAT Annual Accounting Scheme and the Flat Rate Scheme, and relaxations to the VAT Default Surcharge Scheme 2003; Oils Fraud Strategy 2002; VAT Flat Rate Scheme and changes to the Annual Accounting Scheme 2002; New VAT registration forms 2001; Proposal for a Council Directive Amending the Sixth VAT Directive to simplify, modernise and harmonise the conditions laid down for VAT invoicing 2001.

The costs associated to regulatory proposals are considered at the policy development stage. A Regulatory Impact Assessment is completed for regulatory proposals unless there are no or negligible costs.

An RIA considers the consequences of proposals, improving the quality of advice to Ministers and encouraging informed public debate. An RIA sets out the impact, in terms of costs, benefits and risks of the proposed regulation that could affect businesses, charities or the voluntary sector.

Research and Development Tax Credit

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much was allocated to small firms using the research and development tax credit in financial years (a) 2001–02 and (b) 2002–03; and if he will make a statement. [132884]

Dawn Primarolo: It is not possible to separately identify small firms from our data. However, it is possible to identify Small or Medium Enterprises (SMEs). Latest estimates of the total cost, on an accruals basis, of the research and development tax credit for 2001–02 and 2002–03 are available on the Inland Revenue's website at http://www.inlandrevenue.gov.uk/stats/tax_expenditures/g_t05_1.htm. For 2002–03, the first year that large companies were eligible to claim R&D tax credits, the estimated cost of support for companies which are defined as SMEs for the purposes of the tax credit is £200 million.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what reasons the Government imposes vehicle excise duty on vehicle ownership; and if he will make a statement. [132902]

John Healey: Vehicle Excise Duty (VED) helps ensure that all motorists contribute to the costs of maintaining and policing the road network. The VED system is also important in helping the enforcement of vehicle insurance and registration rules, and it enables discounts to be offered to help disabled drivers. The graduation of VED from March 2001 in relation to the carbon dioxide emissions and the pollution of cars has been important in helping to strengthen the signals for environmentally responsible behaviour by motorists.

Research Science

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people were employed in research science in each year since 1 January 1996. [132332]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mrs. Cheryl Gillan, dated 21 October 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question about people employed in research science since 1996 (132332)

The attached table shows the number of people employed in four occupational groups that comprise workers in research science. This data is derived from the Labour Force Survey (LFS) and is only available from Spring 2001, when the last major change to the Standard Occupational Classification (SOC2000) was implemented.

Estimates for previous years have not been given as they are not available on a consistent basis. This is because the Standard Occupation Classification (SOC)2000 classification was introduced to the LFS in spring (March to May) 2001 and is not comparable with the SOC90 classification used in earlier periods.

Vehicle/Fuel Taxation

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what assessment he has made of the impact on emissions of carcinogens from road vehicles of (a) company car tax, (b) other vehicle taxation and (c) fuel tax; [132836]

(2) what assessment he has made of the impact on emissions of oxides of nitrogen from road vehicles of (a) company car tax, (b) other vehicle taxation and (c) fuel tax. [132840]

John Healey: The Government has incorporated tax differentials into the company car tax, vehicle excise duty and fuel duty regimes to facilitate the use of alternative fuels and cleaner technologies to improve air quality.

Much of the reduction in pollution from road transport results from tougher emissions standards for new vehicles. The tax system provides some incentives for the earlier take-up of cleaner vehicles, as well as incentives for switching to less-polluting fuels and technologies.

Transport taxation is also intended to encourage the use of more fuel-efficient cars with lower carbon dioxide emissions.

Key air pollutants, including carcinogens, have reduced by around 50 per cent. over the last decade and are forecast to fall by a further 30 per cent. over the next decade. The specific information requested is not available; although further details of emissions of all pollutants from road transport are available from the National Atmospheric Emissions Inventory (www.naei.org.uk).

Written Consultation

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) consultation documents and (b) consultative drafts of legislation have been issued by his Department since January 2001; what proportion of these have observed Criterion 5 of the Code of Practice on Written Consultation; and if he will make a statement. [132882]

Ruth Kelly: A list of consultation documents issued since January 2001 can be found on the HM Treasury website at http://www.hm-treasury.gov.uk/consultations and legislation/. In 2001, a third of consultation documents met Criterion 5. In 2002 and to date in 2003, more than three-quarters have done so. Most of the consultations that did not meet Criterion 5 related to market-sensitive financial service areas. In those cases where the consultation period is due to be shorter than normal, the reasons for this are now routinely set out in the text of the document.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Foxes

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what methods of controlling the fox population her Department will recommend if the Hunting Bill receives Royal Assent. [133476]

Alun Michael: The Department's advice on fox control will remain unchanged if the Hunting Bill receives Royal Assent (assuming that it does so in its current form).

At present, shooting is the recommended method of fox control in rural areas. Snaring, which is also an effective technique when used by experienced personnel, may have advantages over shooting in certain situations.

Lethal control is not generally recommended in urban areas. Killing or relocating foxes usually only provides transient relief from the problems foxes cause, as vacant territories are rapidly reoccupied once the control measures cease. In addition, shooting and snaring are unlikely to be appropriate control methods for reasons of safety, and in the case of shooting, public disturbance. Advice on alternative strategies for preventing problems is given in the Department's "Urban Fox" leaflet (code WM08) which is available from the Defra website (www.defra.gov.uk/wildlife-countryside/vertebrates).

High-risk Chemicals

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has for the development of comparative risk assessment for high-risk chemicals; what the timescale is for each of the steps envisaged; and if she will list the chemicals to which it is intended to apply this system. [132454]

Alun Michael: When putting in place measures to reduce the risks of high-risk substances we consider the availability of substitutes and their hazards to ensure that the best option is taken. This is done following guidance set out by the EU and we currently have no plans to further develop this. The full examination to reduce risks—which includes this comparison—is divided into a five-stage process and generally takes between six and nine months. This process is applied to chemicals which have been demonstrated to be a high risk and examples of those completed include: short chain chlorinated paraffins, octa and penta bromodiphenyl ether, bis phenol A and nonyl phenol ethoxylate.

Pesticides

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment has been made of the costs of the safe disposal from farms of stocks of those pesticides which have been withdrawn from the market this year as a result of the review taking place under EU Agricultural Pesticides Directive 91/414; and if she will list the cost to (a) the Government, (b) farmers and (c) the pesticide industry arising from the review. [133108]

Alun Michael: Pesticides are regularly withdrawn from the market as a result of regulatory reviews or commercial decisions taken by crop protection companies. However, when there are not over-riding safety concerns a 'use up' period is provided. The purpose of this period is to allow the pesticide industry and farmers to use up existing stocks of the pesticide products concerned and thus avoid significant disposal costs. We believe that this is the best environmental option as well as minimising the costs for all parties.

The withdrawals of products under the EC review programme has been taking place progressively since 1995 although the largest batch of withdrawals is taking place this year. In all cases a use-up period has been provided. In anticipation of this years withdrawals the department undertook special publicity campaigns, both this year and last, supported by the crop protection industry and farmers organisations. These were designed to ensure that those affected used their stocks by the end of this year thus minimising the need for disposals.

Because of this costs would only arise at the end of this year for farmers or pesticide companies if they have failed to take advantage of the use up period and we do not envisage that there will be additional costs to Government.

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the information contained on the Pesticides Safety Directorate website on the mixing of individual compounds after sale in relation to Regulation 4 of the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986 and Regulation 4 of the Plant Protection Regulations 1997. [133502]

Alun Michael: The information on the Pesticide Safety Directorate's website describing the mixing of individual pesticides after sale refers to the published 'Guidelines on the Provision of Pesticide Mixing Services and Sale of Twin Packs and Kits'. These guidelines confirm the requirement that only pesticides formulated in accordance with approved formulations may be sold or supplied. However once sale has taken place a pesticide may legally be mixed with another pesticide or with other substances without the need for a further product approval. This is provided that the mixing process is carried out by the user or on behalf of the user, and that specific conditions of use set for the individually approved pesticides concerned are complied with. Many users choose to employ mixing services provided at retailer or distributor premises, or by mobile mixing services that visit farms. The mixing service guidelines stipulate that these services must be provided only after sale has taken place, that mixing must be carried out only in accordance with any restrictions placed on the individual pesticides used, and that mixed product should be used promptly.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

British Energy

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what level of public funds will be made available to British Energy in respect of the agreement announced in her written statement of 14 October 2003, Official Report, columns 10–12WS. [133310]

Mr. Timms: Government's underlying commitment is the same as it was last year. Up until restructuring, we have made the credit facility (currently £200 million) available to British Energy, which has been approved by the European Commission. That will be repaid by the company under the terms of the restructuring plan at no cost to the taxpayer. Post restructuring we will take financial responsibility for British Energy's historic spent fuel liabilities, with an average cost to Government of £150 to £200 million per annum for the next 10 years, falling thereafter. We will also underwrite British Energy's arrangements for funding decommissioning and uncontracted liabilities to the extent that British Energy's contributions are insufficient.

Christmas Opening

Andrew Selous: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the response to her request that retailers not open on Christmas Day 2002; and what action she proposes to take in relation to Christmas Day 2003. [133154]

Mr. Sutcliffe: A consultation of individual major retailers in summer 2002 indicated that the majority did not plan to open on Christmas Day in 2002 or in future years. However, it was apparent that opening by competitors or changes in customer demand would lead to plans being reviewed in some cases.

A public consultation on legislation to prohibit opening by large stores on Christmas Day took place earlier this year. This showed the majority of respondents in favour of maintaining the special nature of the day. The Government may introduce legislation as soon as parliamentary time permits.

Civil Relationships Registration

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant to her answer of 15 September 2003, Official Report, column 539W, on the civil relationships registration scheme, which significant rights and responsibilities have not been addressed in the consultation paper on civil relationships. [133324]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 20 October 2003]: The Government have so far not become aware of any significant rights and responsibilities that were omitted from the consultation paper on civil partnerships. We are still considering the many responses to the consultation paper and will publish a report in due course.

Fireworks

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the control of fireworks. [132583]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The Fireworks Act 2003, which received Royal Assent on 18 September 2003, will allow the Department to make regulations covering a range of firework issues which we are currently unable to regulate under the Consumer Protection Act 1987. These include restricting firework sales and use, licensing of retailers and controlling noise and nuisance.

We hope to implement those parts of the Act dealing with anti-social issues before Christmas. This means that we will create a curfew for the use of fireworks, create an offence for possession of fireworks by those under 18 years of age, and prohibit the supply of air bombs.

The Act's other principal provisions—setting a maximum noise limit for fireworks, licensing of suppliers, rules for public firework displays, importation of fireworks and training of display operators—require more detailed consultation with all the interested parties. We will start implementation of this part of the Act in the New Year.

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) when she expects to introduce regulations prohibiting the supply, purchase, possession and use of fireworks during anti-social hours; [132646]

(2) when she expects to introduce regulations to prohibit the purchase, possession and use of fireworks by those under 18 years; [132647]

(3) when she expects to introduce regulations to prohibit consumer sales for excessively noisy fireworks; [132648]

(4) when she expects to introduce regulations to license fireworks retailers. [132649]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The Department is committed to implementing and ensuring proper enforcement of the Fireworks Act 2003.

We hope to implement those parts of the Act dealing with anti-social issues before Christmas. This means that we will create a curfew for the use of fireworks, create an offence for possession of fireworks by those under 18 years of age, and prohibit the supply of air bombs.

The Act's other principal provisions—setting a maximum noise limit for fireworks, licensing of suppliers, rules for public firework displays, importation of fireworks and training of display operators—require more detailed consultation with all the interested parties. We will start implementation of this part of the Act in the New Year.

Interest Charges

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps her Department is taking to protect consumers from excessive levels of interest charged on (a) small loans, (b) credit cards and (c) store cards. [132861]

Mr. Sutcliffe: There are currently in excess of 200,000 businesses licensed under the Consumer Credit Act 1974 and monitoring the activities of all these businesses would create a significant burden on legitimate business.

The Consumer Credit Act 1974 contains provisions that allow a consumer to challenge an extortionate credit bargain. However, only about 30 extortionate credit cases are known to have reached the courts since the Act came into force and, of those, in only 10 did the court find the agreement to be extortionate.

I believe that these provisions have not operated effectively in enabling consumers to challenge unfair credit agreements and I intend to publish a White Paper this autumn, which will contain details of how I intend to make it easier for consumers to challenge unfair credit transactions.

Minimum Wage

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimates she has made of the costs to employers of standardising the minimum wage rate for all employees aged 18 and above. [131356]

Mr. Sutcliffe [holding answer 14 October 2003]: When the Low Pay Commission recommended in their 4th report that the rate for 18 to 21-year-olds should be increased to £3.80 an hour from October 2003, they took into account the need to maximise employment opportunities for young people in work. A significantly higher rate rise for young adult workers could have an impact on employment levels and this would make the cost to employers uncertain.

Newspapers

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to take action on monopoly power in the newspaper wholesale industry. [133613]

Mr. Sutcliffe: None. The investigation of anti-competitive behaviour is a matter for the competition authorities.

Post Office Card Accounts

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate she has made of the number of Post Office card accounts. [133171]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 20 October 2003]: I understand from the Department for Work and Pensions that as of 3 October 2003, 1.25 million customers had requested a Post Office card account and that the Government now expect the total number of card accounts to exceed the three million operating assumption. It is too early to make a firm prediction of the ultimate number of Post Office card accounts because it will depend on the pattern of customer choices.

Precious Metals Directive

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what voting method will be used by the European Union to decide whether to implement the Precious Metals Directive. [133063]

Mr. Sutcliffe [holding answer 20 October 2003]: Qualified Majority Voting will be used.

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what effect the Precious Metals Directive would have upon UK hallmarking of gold and silver. [133064]

Mr. Sutcliffe [holding answer 20 October 2003]: Third party testing and marking would no longer be mandatory in the UK, and manufacturers would be able to choose whether to mark their own goods or send them to an assay office for marking. A full Regulatory Impact Assessment (RIA) will be done if the draft Directive is agreed.

Road Haulage

Phil Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures are in place to regulate the activities of franchise operators in the road haulage industry. [132200]

Mr. Sutcliffe: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry is not aware of any measures that are in place to specifically regulate the activities of franchise operators in the road haulage industry.

Phil Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will conduct an inquiry into the activities of franchises, franchisors and recruitment agencies operating in the road haulage industry. [132202]

Mr. Sutcliffe: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has discretionary powers under the Companies Acts to make inquiries into companies when there appears to be sufficient grounds to do so, for instance, in cases of fraud or other serious misconduct.

The Department's Companies Investigation Branch is always ready to receive for consideration any information with regard to companies whose activities give cause for concern.

Employment agencies and employment businesses, including those supplying drivers for the road haulage industry, are required to meet minimum standards of conduct established under the Employment Agencies Act 1973 and associated regulations.

The Department's Employment Agency Standards Inspectorate is responsible for enforcing the provisions of the Act and would encourage anyone who has reason to believe an agency is not complying with these provisions to call the Employment Agency Standards helpline on 0845 955 5105.

TUPE Regulations

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the implementation of TUPE regulations with respect to (a) final salary pension schemes and (b) other pension rights. [132864]

Mr. Sutcliffe: An announcement by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions was made on 11 June 2003 to the effect that a degree of protection will in future be provided for occupational pension rights on transfer. My right hon. Friend intends to take forward these proposals through primary legislation when parliamentary time allows. I do not propose therefore to implement them through the forthcoming revision of TUPE regulations, on which I expect to consult publicly around the turn of the year.

Working Time Directive

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what studies her Department has made comparing the regulations to implement the working time directive in the United Kingdom with those in other EU member states, with particular reference to France; what plans she has to (a) improve the clarity and (b) reduce the length of the United Kingdom regulations; and if she will make a statement. [132852]

Mr. Sutcliffe: My officials are in regular contact with their counterparts from other member states, and share ideas for the implementation of the working time directive. They have followed developments in France with particular interest. However, direct comparison of the legislation is difficult because of the legal codes on which they are based.

I am fully committed to the Better Regulation principles of clarity in regulation. The Commission are currently reviewing elements of the working time directive and we will need to look at the UK regulations again in the light of that work. In consultation with the stakeholders we will look to see if there is scope to simplify and reduce the length of the regulations, but would need to balance any reduction in length against the corresponding potential reduction in clarity.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Teacher Salaries

Mr. Michael Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment he made of (a) teacher salaries in each local authority and (b) teacher salary costs as a percentage of overall education spending share, for each local authority when setting the Revenue Support Grant for 2003–04. [131685]

Mr. Miliband: The Department does not collect information on the distribution of teaching salaries by local education authority.

The calculation of Revenue Support Grant takes account of differing wage pressures across England and Wales through the area cost adjustment using data from the New Earnings Survey (NES). This contains information on the occupation and workplace of participants. Teaching professionals1 is one of the minor occupational classifications into which all NES participants are placed. The occupation of each individual in the NES at the minor level makes up 81 of the variables we examine in calculating the area cost adjustment. Full details of the ACA calculation are available on the ODPM website at http://www.local.odpm.gov.uk/finance/0304/acatechs.pdf

Academies

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what his policy is in respect of applications by individuals and organisations to establish and maintain academies solely intended for gifted and talented pupils. [131227]

Mr. Miliband: Academies are a key element of the Government's drive to raise standards and increase the diversity of education provision in disadvantaged and challenging areas. All academy proposals that have been approved to date have been for all ability schools. Any future proposal to establish an academy solely intended for gifted and talented pupils would be treated on its merits, subject to the Government's commitment that there may be no increase in (a) grammar schools, and (b) selection at 11 (depending on best definition of policy).

Euro

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much has been spent in each year by his Department in preparing for United Kingdom entry to the euro; how much his Department plans to spend on preparations for United Kingdom entry to the euro for each year from the current financial year up to and including 2005–06; and what estimates he has made of the total costs to his Department of changeover to the European Single Currency. [131603]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: I refer the hon. Member to the written reply to the same question given by my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary on 14 October 2003, Official Report, column 142W.

Further Education

Paul Holmes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many further education colleges have had their three-year development plans returned by their local learning and skills council with (a) an upward financial revision, (b) a downward financial revision and (c) no change; and if he will make a statement. [132856]

Alan Johnson: Discussions between local learning and skills councils and further education colleges and other providers about three-year development plans are on-going. The Learning and Skills Council (LSC) expect this process to be completed by the end of October. I have therefore asked the chief executive of the LSC to write to the hon. Member as soon as the planning dialogue is complete, providing the information requested and to place a copy of his reply in the House Library.

The introduction of three-year development plans allows colleges and other providers to plan on a more secure and predictable basis. Colleges and providers will set out their plans for improving the customer focus of their provision; raising standards of teaching and learning; and improving the capability of the workforce.

Resources will be allocated by the LSC based on a provider's success in meeting its targets. This provides clear incentives for colleges to improve their performance.

Paul Holmes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what specific funding his Department has provided to the Learning and Skills Council for further education colleges to meet targets set in relation to (a) the attainment of Level 3 qualifications and (b) meeting employers' needs; and if he will make a statement. [132857]

Alan Johnson: It is for the Learning and Skills Council (LSC) to determine for itself the right level of investment in the programmes and initiatives that it delivers. The Department does not provide specific funding to the LSC for further education colleges to meet targets set in relation to (a) the attainment of Level 3 qualifications, or (b) meeting employers' needs. The Department expects the LSC to use the funds allocated to it for learning participation and capital to allocate funds to colleges to help them meet these and other targets. Assumed learning participation funding for further education allocated to the Learning and Skills Council is £4,278 million in 2003–04; £4,625 million in 2004–05; and £4,987 million in 2005–06. Capital funding allocated by the Department to the LSC will rise by over 60 per cent. in real terms to over £400 million by 2005–06, compared with 2002–03. This will help providers to develop new, and enhance existing, vocational provision that is focused on meeting the skills needs of employers.

GCSEs

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills pursuant to his answer of 1 September 2003, Official Report, column 733W, and to his answer of 11 September 2003, Official Report, column 409W, when he will place the data requested in the Library. [132284]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Learning and Skills Council

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment he has made of the effect of the proposed budget for the next three years of the Learning and Skills Council, on (a) the number of people employed and (b) the level of service provided in (i) England and (ii) Portsmouth; and if he will make a statement. [129791]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The budget for the Learning and Skills Council in 2003–04 is £8.1 billion, rising to £9.2 billion in 2005–06. This substantial increase will allow the LSC to improve the range and quality of learning opportunities available to young people and adults in all parts of England. Within the LSC's budget I have allocated £218 million in each year for the LSC's administration costs and I have asked the LSC to find administrative economies so that it can manage with a flat cash administrative budget. The LSC is also undertaking a reshaping exercise which will build on its strengths, resulting in fewer staff but an enhanced capacity to improve services and deliver against targets. This is a matter for the LSC and Mark Haysom, the Council's Chief Executive, will write to the hon. Member with more information about the reshaping exercise and place a copy of his reply in the Library.

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills pursuant to his letter to the hon. Member for Wycombe of 21 July when he plans to lay a draft order in relation to complaints of maladministration against local learning and skills councils. [133599]

Alan Johnson: The Learning and Skills Council will be brought within the jurisdiction of the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration (The Ombudsman) shortly. Officials in my Department have been in contact with the relevant officials in the Cabinet Office to ensure that this happens as quickly as possible. I will write to the hon. Member when this happens.

Minister for Children

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the (a) areas of responsibility, (b) targets and (c) priorities of the Minister for Children are. [122339]

Margaret Hodge: I have responsibility within the Department for Education and Skills for policy on children, young people and families. The creation of the post of Minister for Children in June 2003 brought together within the DfES a number of key responsibilities including some from other Government Departments in order to improve the co-ordination of policy on children, young people and families. From September 2003, the title of this post was changed to Minister for Children, Young People and Families.

The accountability arrangements for PSA and supporting targets affected by this change are:

the transfer from the Department of Health of the PSA target on improving the life chances for children in care together with work on the adoption of looked after children; joint ownership of the PSA target on reducing the under-18 conception rate by 50 per cent. by 2010; and the Department of Health will retain the PSA target on improving life outcomes for adults and children with mental health problems with DfES having an important role in ensuring input from social care and other services.

I will also retain responsibilities for the Sure Start targets which aim to ensure that accessible and high quality child care, early education and other services are available for all young children and families.

My priorities are set out in the Green Paper, published in September 2003. We need to ensure we properly protect children at risk within a framework of universal services which support every child to develop their full potential and which aim to protect negative outcomes.

I will be reviewing all targets and structures are now being established within the Department to ensure that our policy ambitions are delivered in the most cost effective manner.

Modern Apprenticeships

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what his targets are for the number of modern apprenticeships to be provided; and how many have been achieved for each year since they were introduced. [133250]

Mr. Ivan Lewis [holding answer 20 October 2003]: The Public Service Agreement (PSA) for Modern Apprenticeships states that:

"By 2004, at least 28 per cent. of young people to start a Modern Apprenticeship by age 22".

The technical note for this target clarifies this to mean first-time entrants to Foundation or Advanced Modern Apprenticeships by those aged 16 to 21. The outturn will be starts, defined above, during the Learning and Skills Council (LSC) academic year 2004/05, expressed as a proportion of the most recent population estimate for that cohort from the Office for National Statistics (ONS).

While Modern Apprenticeships have a longer history, fit for purpose data for the PSA target have been compiled only since 2001/02:

Modern Apprenticeship starts

	Number	Percentage
2001/02	137,000	[1]22.8
2002/03	[2]144,900	[1]23.9

[1] Proportion calculated using ONS population estimates DME50 Table 4.
[2] Data for 2002/03 outturn are provisional; due to be finalised by the LSC in January 2004.

Physical Assaults

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many teachers have been attacked by (a) pupils and (b) parents in each education authority, in each academic year since 1997. [133700]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: In my answer to a similar question from the hon. Member on 8 September 2003, Official Report, column 148W, I stated that the number of serious injuries to primary and secondary school teachers in Great Britain caused by physical violence reported to the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) was as follows:

1996–97—83
1997–98—119
1998–99—124
1999–2000—135
2000–01—135
2001–02—110.

The injuries reported to the HSE are major injuries and those resulting in more than three days' absence from work as a result of assault. Information about who caused the injury is not available and the figures cannot be broken down by education authority.

School Funding

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills when he will make a statement on school funding for the next financial year. [133602]

Mr. Miliband: In his statement to the House on 17 July, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State outlined initial steps in responding to the practical concerns raised about the present system of funding schools, and promised a further report in the autumn. He expects to make that report shortly.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what recent representations he has received in respect of the funding of schools in Essex; and if he will make a statement. [133710]

Mr. Miliband: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations about school funding issues in Essex. He made a statement to the House on 17 July about changes we propose to make to restore stability to school funding in 2004–05 and 2005–06. We are currently working with national partners on the detail of his proposals and the Secretary of State will be announcing the outcome as soon as this work is complete.

School Places

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many children failed to gain a place at the school of their choice in (a) primary schools, (b) secondary schools, (c) special schools and (d) all schools in each year since 1997, broken down by local education authority. [133674]

Mr. Miliband: The Department does not keep statistics on how many children fail to gain a place at the school of their choice at primary, secondary and special schools. Individual local education authorities may have information. Collecting reliable data is difficult, because many parents apply for places at more than one school and it may not be clear which is their first preference. Research published by the Department in June 2001 suggested that, nationally, 96 per cent. of parents receive an offer of a place at one, at least, of the schools for which they express a preference.

School Transport

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what his policy is towards the funding of free school transport for pupils attending faith schools. [132810]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Education Act 1996 sets out the local education authorities (LEAs) responsibilities in providing free transport to school for pupils of compulsory school age. Section 509(1) requires LEAs to make arrangements for the provision of transport as they consider necessary, so that pupils can attend school. This transport must be free. Section 509(3) enables authorities to pay the whole of part of a pupil's travelling expenses.

LEAs must provide free transport to denominational schools, where pupils live beyond the statutory walking distances, where they are the nearest suitable school that pupils can attend. Where pupils live closer to a non-denominational school, LEAs will provide free transport to a denominational school of their choice if they consider that transport is necessary, and they may otherwise provide assistance with travel costs. This is an area where LEAs exercise local discretion, taking into account the religious beliefs of parents and local circumstances.

Our recent document, "Travelling to School: an Action Plan", set out our plans for boosting walking, cycling and bus use on the journey to school. We are planning to put legislation in place as soon as possible which will allow LEAs to trial new approaches to school transport.

We hope that one or more exemplar scheme will examine fresh approaches to denominational transport.

Sector Skills Councils

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills which sector skills councils are accredited; when they were accredited; and when the remainder will be operational. [132498]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: We are making good progress in setting up the Sector Skills Councils (SSCs). I expect the network of around 25 SSCs will be in place by summer 2004, as outlined in the recently published White Paper, "21st Century Skills. Realising Our Potential". Between April and October this year, four SSCs have been awarded full five-year licences to operate. They cover IT, Telecommunications and Contact Centres; Science, Engineering and Manufacturing Technologies; Construction and Active Leisure and Learning. Plans are well advanced for the development of proposals for a further 17 SSCs, including the five trailblazer SSCs. In addition, the SSDA continues to work with a number of other sectors to ensure the right coverage.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what discussions he has had with the Department for Trade and Industry about joint funding streams for (a) sector skills councils and (b) related training opportunities; and if he will make a statement with specific reference to the ceramics industry. [132496]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The Skills Strategy White Paper, "21st Century Skills, Realising our Potential", set out our intention that the DTI should jointly sponsor, with DfES, the Skills for Business Network.

Discussions are taking place at official level regarding the details of this arrangement, including funding. The Secretaries of State for Education and Skills and Trade and Industry will receive proposals for their consideration at the end of this year.

Although the ceramics industry does not meet the criteria for establishing a dedicated Sector Skills Council (SSC), the Sector Skills Development Agency (SSDA) is working with the Association of Ceramic Training and Development to put in place effective arrangements for bringing the ceramics industry fully within the Skills for Business Network.

Teacher Vacancies

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many teacher vacancies in each subject there were in (a) primary schools, (b) secondary schools, (c) special schools and (d) all schools in each year since 1997, broken down by local education authority; and if he will express the numbers as a percentage of all teachers. [133676]

Mr. Miliband: The tables showing the number of teacher vacancies in maintained secondary schools in England have been placed in the Libraries. Vacancies by subject are available only for secondary schools. The most recent data available at local education authority level are for January 2003. Vacancy rates are not available because data for the denominator (teacher numbers by subject, by local education authority) are not collected.

Teacher vacancies are defined as advertised vacancies for full-time permanent appointments (or appointments of at least one term's duration). This includes vacancies being filled on a temporary basis unless filled by someone with a fixed term contract of one term or more.

Truancy

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many prosecutions of parents per thousand pupils for truancy at school there were in descending order by local authority, in the latest year for which figures are available. [133048]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: Information about the number of prosecutions for truancy is not collected centrally.

Tuition Fees

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what representations he has received from vice-chancellors in Wales about proposals to introduce differential tuition fees for university students. [129408]

Alan Johnson: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations from various stakeholders in Wales about variable fees for university students.

University Medical Schools

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills pursuant to his answer of 6 October 2003, Official Report, column 1150W, on university medical schools (funding), which universities have received funding from the improving retention pot as a result of admitting full-time students under 21 with an A-level points score of less than 3 C grades to study medicine; how many such students each university has admitted; and how much of such funding each school has attracted. [133325]

Alan Johnson: The Higher Education Funding Council for England (HEFCE) allocated funds for the first time in 2003–04 to institutions to improve retention based on the profile of their students and an assessment of the risks of students failing to complete their studies. The HEFCE does not publish sensitive student or financial data at course level for individual institutions, but the institutions set out below received part of their funding from this exercise as a result of the profile of their medical students. Across these institutions, some 480 full-time medical students attracted a total of £126,092 in additional funding from the improving retention pot because they were under 21 years of age and their points score was less than the equivalent of 3 Cs at A level.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

House Tours

Mr. Evans: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission what the ticket revenue was in each of the years that the House has been opened to members of the public for guided tours; and what the staffing cost was in each year of (a) the tour guides, (b) ticket booth staff and (c) other staff costs. [132438]

Sir Archy Kirkwood: Revenue and costs for the four years that the House has been open during the summer to members of the public for guided tours are given as follows:

	2000 (trial)	2001 (trial)	2002	2003 (Estimated)
Net ticket revenue	80,357	185,568	440,000	482,900
Tour guide costs	93,497	171,928	185,000	230,000
Ticket booth staff	Costs of ticket booth staff not differentiated from 'other staff costs' until 2003			29,989
Other staff costs	65,948	77,235	85,000	Figures not yet available

Medical Services

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission what services are available to hon. Members in accessing (a) a nurse, (b) a general practitioner and (c) a mental health professional within the precincts of the Palace of Westminster. [132302]

Sir Archy Kirkwood: The Occupational Health, Safety and Welfare Service (OHSWS) in the Department of Finance and Administration is an advisory service provided to both Houses of Parliament. The OHSWS assesses the effects work has on health and offers specialist advice on all aspects of health and safety in the workplace.

A walk-in treatment and advisory service is located in Lower Waiting Hall and is available to hon. Members and Peers during parliamentary sessions between 9am and 5pm on Mondays to Thursdays and between 9am and 4pm on Fridays.

A medical screening service is also offered on a three yearly rolling programme and an earlier appointment can be requested if required. This service is located in 7 Millbank and has been provided without interruption for more than ten years.

The OHSWS currently has two doctors: a consultant occupational physician working one day a week and a medical adviser who works three days a week. There are three qualified nurses (one full-time, two part-time). In addition, the Occupational Health Manager is a qualified nurse, and is full-time. The House does not employ any mental health professionals, but the doctors maintain close links with consultant psychiatrists at St Thomas's Hospital from whom advice can be sought.

The House does not provide general practitioner services but the OHSWS is in discussion with a local practice about the possibility of providing an emergency GP service for Members and Peers. hon Members will be informed should such a service become available.

September Sittings

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission if he will estimate the additional expense to public funds of the two week September sitting of the House; and if he will make a statement. [131860]

Norman Baker: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission what extra costs have been incurred as a result of the sitting of the House in September, broken down by (a) staff costs, (b) costs relating to building works and (c) other costs; and if he will make a statement. [131867]

Sir Archy Kirkwood: The sitting of the House in September has not increased the total number of sitting days. The main costs of accommodation and staff were not affected appreciably by the two week return. The building work was planned, as far as was practicable, on the basis of the revised arrangements in order to cause minimum disruption. It is impossible to determine with any accuracy what the actual costs of alternative contracts might have been, but it is estimated that some £90,000 of additional House of Commons works-related expenditure was incurred directly by the change to the recess period, out of a total forecast spend of around £24 million. In addition, it is estimated that the income from public tours was about £40,000 less as the result of moving them to later in September.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Parliamentary Questions

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Solicitor-General when she will reply to question 128333 of 15 September from the hon. Member for Vale of York. [133596]

The Solicitor-General: The question was answered on 14 October 2003, Official Report, column 155W.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Bosnia

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many (a) casualties and (b) injuries have been recorded each month in Bosnia (i) during the mandate of the International Peacekeeping Force and (ii) since the establishment of the Stabilisation Force; and if he will make a statement. [131792]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: We do not hold this information. In regard to UK military personnel, there have been a total of 29 deaths since December 1995.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many de-mining programmes have been in operation in Bosnia per annum since 1997; how much aid his Department has contributed to each programme per annum (a) directly, (b) through the EU and (c) through the UN; and if he will make a statement. [131891]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The UK bilateral contribution to demining in Bosnia since 1997 is £1 million which was paid in 2000–01 into the International Trust Fund (ITF) for demining. The ITF is an international body of which the UN is a partner. These funds were used to support demining operations in the Kupres region of the country with priority being given to agricultural areas and areas being used for refugee return.

The following table shows the contribution from the EU to demining operations in Bosnia from 1998–2001 (figures obtained from the United Nations Mine Action Service (UNMAS) website).

	EU contribution to demining in Bosnia US$	Total UK share of EU funding (%)
1998	2,583,000	19.1
1999	5,640,000	17.75
2000	3,330,806	19.66
2001	5,293,412	18.9

DFID will make a further contribution to demining in Bosnia this year of £150,000 which will be paid via the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP). This is our first direct contribution to the UN for demining in Bosnia. These funds will be used to support capacity building of the National Mine Action Authority, improving national survey mechanisms, database co-ordination, development of transparent priority-setting processes, and improving senior and middle management skills through UNDP-sponsored training courses.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what de-mining programmes were (a) initiated and (b) directly run in Bosnia since 1997. [131892]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: Since 1997 National and International NGOs, the UN, the International Trust Fund for Demining (supported by various donors) working through the Bosnian mine action authorities have run programmes covering the following activities in Bosnia; advocacy and prevention, co-ordination, information, integrated mine action, mine awareness, mine clearance, research and development and victim assistance.

Ethiopia

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on the status of the food shortage in Ethiopia; and what provisions are being made to prevent it recurring in the longer term. [133563]

Hilary Benn: The August 2003 update of the Ethiopian Government/UN Emergency Assistance Requirements and Implementation Options stated that for the period August-December unmet requirements were 37,458 metric tonnes of pulses and vegetable oil, while cereal food needs were covered.

Our Country Assistance Plan for Ethiopia, which was published in March, outlines the various methods that we are using to take forward our longer-term food strategy. We are working with the Ethiopian Government and Ireland Aid to pilot new approaches to improving roads and transport in rural areas. We are also working at federal and regional level in Ethiopia to learn policy-relevant lessons about key food security issues; for example we have also supported a study of destitution and the policy options available to address this.

The Ethiopian Government has itself established a task force to address the issue of food insecurity.

Foreign Aid

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development which poor countries are considered to be committed to reform and therefore received or are due to receive increased allocations of direct budget support. [132098]

Hilary Benn: The UK will provide Direct Budget Support to a country where that country's government demonstrates a credible commitment to poverty reduction and where the development benefits of providing direct budget support outweigh the fiduciary risks, as outlined in the DFID guidelines "Managing Fiduciary Risk When Providing Direct Budget Support".

Countries where, subject to these criteria being met, allocations of direct budget support have increased or are expected to increase are India, Afghanistan (where we make contributions to the Afghanistan Reconstruction Trust Fund), Ethiopia, Ghana, Mozambique, Rwanda, Sierra Leone and Tanzania. Funding agreements in some countries are still being negotiated.

Fossil Fuels

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on his Department's policy towards the provision of loans and loan guarantees by multi-national banks to fossil fuel projects overseas; and what plans he has to amend his policy. [133632]

Hilary Benn: The UK is a shareholder in a number of multilateral Development Banks which provide loans and loan guarantees for fossil fuel projects. The Government's policy is to ensure that these institutions comply with their own policies and procedures in all projects for which they provide finance. In considering whether to provide loans or loan guarantees this should include an assessment of the possible social and environmental impacts. In addition, our policy is to fully understand the developmental implications of fossil fuel projects. We are particularly concerned that the management of revenues from such projects occurs transparently and with a positive developmental impact. We hope that initiatives such as the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative will help to achieve this.

Overseas Development Aid

Chris McCafferty: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when he expects the United Kingdom Government will reach the target of 0.7 per cent. of gross national product spent on overseas development aid; and if he will make a statement on the percentage allocated to reproductive health programmes. [132310]

Hilary Benn: The Government remain firmly committed to the 0.7 per cent. target. Although there is no timetable for reaching the target, the trend in the ratio of official development assistance (oda) to Gross National Income (GNI) has been upward since 1997, when it was 0.26 per cent. By 2005–06 the ratio will be 0.4 per cent. the highest since 1981.

DFID spent over £270 million on reproductive health and HIV/AIDS programmes in the financial year 2002–03. We regard reproductive health as an essential and inseparable element of good health. We believe that the best way to deliver this is for people to be given the right, freedom and support necessary to enable them to take full individual and personal control of their own fertility and reproductive health. Reproductive health continues to be a priority for DFID and we remain firmly committed to the 1994 Cairo International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD) target of achieving access to reproductive health for all by 2015.

The allocation of funds under the UK international development programme is decided on the basis of country programmes, agreed following discussions with partner governments, and also depends on the existence of effective partners in the country, either government, international or civil society organisations, to ensure that the funding is well spent and achieves its objectives.

DFID support for reproductive health is wide ranging. It covers HIV/AIDS programmes, prevention and treatment of sexually transmitted infections and maternal and adolescent health. Reproductive health also encompasses the services for family planning, contraception and childbearing that make an important contribution to increasing women's choice and opportunity and to preventing unplanned or unwanted pregnancy. Family planning services also provide an important opportunity to improve sexual health and in particular to increase women's access to methods that help prevent HIV infection. DFID's total expenditure cannot therefore be apportioned between HIV/AIDS and Family Planning, as many reproductive health programmes and projects contribute to both objectives (for example through the provision of information on family planning and HIV/AIDS prevention or the provision of condoms).

Refugee Camps

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development pursuant to his answer of 14 October, reference 131643, how many refugee camps are (a) directly run and (b) indirectly aided by UNHCR; and if he will make a statement. [132907]

Hilary Benn: UNHCR estimates there are nearly 116,000 Liberian refugees in the south of Guinea, including some 67,000 assisted in four camps managed by them. The rest are spontaneously settled in urban centres. UNHCR is registering newly arrived refugees in border areas and arranging for them to be transferred to the camps. They are coordinating with other agencies to provide food, water and sanitation to newly arriving refugees.

My reply of 14 October to the hon. Member should have made it clear that, while our support to refugees is through UNHCR and other agencies, and in that sense is not direct, £600,000 of our support to UNHCR this year was specifically allocated for Liberian and Ivorian refugees in Guinea. I apologise for my misunderstanding.

Reproductive Health

Chris McCafferty: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on the availability of reproductive health supplies globally; and what steps the Government is taking to increase availability. [132311]

Hilary Benn: Estimates suggest that 350 million couples worldwide lack access to modern family planning methods, and as many as 150 million women want to prevent or delay pregnancy but are not using any method of family planning.

The aim of family planning programmes is to enable couples and individuals to decide freely and responsibly the number and spacing of their children and to have the information and means to do so.

The Department for International Development (DFID) is one of the leading bilateral providers of condoms and other forms of contraceptives to developing countries. We are also supporting a number of male and female condom social marketing programmes. We are helping the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) to provide the widest achievable range of safe and effective family planning and contraceptive methods, including condoms to prevent HIV/AIDS. In January 2001, we provided UNFPA with a grant of £25 million to help meet immediate needs for reproductive health commodities, including condoms, in a range of countries facing immediate shortages. We have increased our core annual funding to UNFPA from £15 million to £18 million.

The Government have committed £16 million (over five years) to the Medical Research Council's Microbicide development programme. New technologies such as the female condom and microbicides will be an important step forward. They will give women the power to protect themselves from unwanted pregnancies and sexually transmitted infections.

The Government champions reproductive health issues at a country level, including through support for UNFPA. DFID works through Sector Wide Approaches (SWAPS) and Direct Budget Support as ways of supporting countries' Poverty Reduction Strategies. Within these processes it is important to ensure that sufficient attention is given to reproductive health issues, for example the assured supply and availability of reproductive health commodities. In many circumstances DFID is also continuing to ring-fence its support for reproductive health and HIV/AIDS work, including for example social marketing programmes. DFID spent £31 million in 2002–03 on activities within SWAPS that had support for reproductive health services as one of their objectives.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development pursuant to his answer of 14 October 2003, Official Report, column 74W, on reproductive health, what the structure of the Open Health Institute in Russia is; and if he will make a statement. [133200]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The Open Health Institute is a Russian non-governmental organisation which works to resolve the most pressing health problems facing the Russian population. It was established in January 2003 as an independent NGO and previously was part of the Open Society Institute (Soros Foundation) in Russia. It continues to have a close affiliation with the Open Society Institute, from which it currently receives core funding. DFID is providing £4.2 million to OSI/OHI for three years from September 2001 for a project which aims to reduce the transmission of HIV among injecting drug users and commercial sex workers in a network of over 40 harm reduction sites in Russia. The project was most recently reviewed in September 2003 and its outcomes are expected to be largely achieved by the project's end in August 2004.

DFID's collaboration with the Open Health Institute is a valuable part of the Department's HIV prevention programme in Russia. The purpose of the programme is to influence the Russian Government and society to make a timely and effective response to HIV/AIDS by targeting vulnerable groups. There are over 250,000 officially-registered HIV cases in Russia, but the real number may be significantly higher. This is one of the fastest-growing HIV epidemics in the world.

Southern African Development Community

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development pursuant to his answer of 13 October, reference 131644, how much of the £7.65 million committed to the Southern African Development Community's work on HIV/AIDS has already been provided; what the per annum break-up for the provisioning of the committed amount is; when the commitment amount was last reviewed; when a new commitment will be made; and if he will make a statement. [132909]

Hilary Benn: Of the £7.65 million committed to SADC, £2.79 million has already been provided. The indicative per annum budget breakdown in the Programme Memorandum was as follows—year 1, £1.09 million; year 2, £1.295 million; year 3, £2.045 million; year 4, £2.065 million and year 5, £1.155 million. But actual disbursement is flexible, based on the needs of the programme.

The commitment amount was last reviewed in late 2002 and will be considered again during a review of the programme in the first half of 2004. As the current commitment runs until 2006, no further commitment to this particular programme is planned at this time.

Sudan

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will make a statement on the recent peace talks in Sudan. [133560]

Hilary Benn: We are optimistic about the prospects for peace. There is a good chance of agreement this year. There are outstanding problems which need to be resolved, on power and wealth sharing, the three conflict areas (of Southern Blue Nile, the Nuba Mountains and Abyei) and ceasefire and security issues. But discussion of these issues has now begun. On 25 September, the parties signed a Framework Agreement on Security Arrangements during the Interim Period. We will continue to offer the parties and mediators our full support and advice and remain actively involved in helping them reach a comprehensive peace agreement. Sudan will remain a priority for our diplomacy.

We have committed to over £220 million (including UK's share of EC food aid) to Sudan since 1991, predominantly for humanitarian purposes. Since the start of the peace process, we have broadened our assistance to Sudan to include direct support for this process and for rehabilitation work where possible. Funds for Sudan in 2002–03 total £20 million, including £5 million from the Africa Conflict Prevention Pool.

With others in the international community, we are now planning for recovery, rehabilitation and reconstruction when there is peace. We are considering what support we can provide in Sudan immediately following a peace agreement, to ensure that the Sudanese people see early benefits of peace. We are also considering how we might support Sudan in the longer term. For example, re-integration of displaced persons, refugees, and armed forces; support for improvements to governance in Sudan; and relief of Sudan's huge debt arrears.

We recognise that a sustained international effort will be needed to help Sudan after a peace agreement and remain determined to play a full part in it.

Tanzania

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment he has made of food shortages in (a) Tanzania and (b) the Singida region. [133556]

Hilary Benn: The Government of Tanzania carried out an initial crop assessment in May followed by further assessment in July. DFID has accepted the findings of the latter which identified 1.9 million people in 16 areas, including 135,000 in Singida region, as being particularly vulnerable to food shortage following the failure of the June harvest. DFID continues to await the formal appeal for assistance being coordinated by the WFP on behalf of the Government of Tanzania.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much aid his Department has given and is giving to meet the food shortages in (a) Tanzania and (b) the Singida region. [133557]

Hilary Benn: During the current year DFID has made £60 million available through direct budget support to the Government of Tanzania to support its Poverty Reduction Strategy, which includes provision for food security. In response to recent shortages, the Government of Tanzania has begun to distribute food from its strategic grain reserve in 16 areas (including Singida) identified as being particularly vulnerable. DFID continues to await the formal appeal for assistance being coordinated by the WFP on behalf of the Government of Tanzania.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Disability Bill

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when he expects to publish the Disability Bill. [133083]

Maria Eagle: We will publish a draft Disability Bill later this year with the intention that it will undergo pre-legislative scrutiny. The draft Bill would amend the Disability Discrimination Act (DDA) to make fundamental improvements to disabled people's rights in areas like the public sector, premises, transport, private clubs and the definition of disability.

This is the next step toward meeting our 2001 Manifesto commitment to extend basic rights and opportunities for disabled people. It builds on other legislation we have already introduced, including the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 (Amendment) Regulations 2003, which were approved by Parliament on 1 July. Those regulations make significant and far-reaching changes to the DDA which will, among other things, bring within scope of its employment provisions a further 1 million small employers, 7 million jobs and 600,000 disabled people already working in those jobs. The final step toward meeting our Manifesto commitment will be when a Disability Bill is passed in this Parliament.

By the end of this Parliament, we will have taken forward the most significant package of changes to civil rights for disabled people ever seen.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Truswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what steps he has taken to ensure that people with learning disabilities are not deprived of housing benefit as a result of their accommodation being registered under the Care Standards Act 2000. [133166]

Mr. Pond [holding answer 20 October 2003]: Housing benefit is generally withdrawn when accommodation becomes registered under the Care Standards Act 2000. The Department of Health is responsible for providing appropriate funding, through local authority social services, for places in accommodation registered under the Act.

However entitlement to Housing Benefit may be retained in certain cases where the accommodation would not have been required to be registered under the previous Registered Homes Act 1984.

Middlesbrough Pathfinder Project

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what progress has been made in relation to the Middlesbrough Pathfinder Project; and if he will make a statement. [133707]

Mr. Pond: As a result of their commitment to restructure the regional housing market through the Tees Valley Market Renewal Project, Middlesbrough Council have reconsidered their decision to take part in testing the Local Housing Allowance.

They recognise the benefits of the Local Housing Allowance and would have continued their involvement had it not been for this commitment. We are disappointed with this outcome, given the amount of work that has been put in by both the council and ourselves, but we respect what was a difficult decision for Middlesbrough and the reasons behind it. Their withdrawal in no way alters our commitment to proceed with the remaining nine Pathfinders.

Pensions

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what powers his Department has to reclaim duplicate payments of retirement pension paid because of official error. [133565]

Malcolm Wicks: Social Security legislation does not provide for recovery of such duplicate overpayments arising as a result of official error. Although these duplicate payments are not recoverable under Social Security legislation, repayment can be sought under common law in exceptional circumstances.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions in how many cases order books including payment of pension credit have been issued where the previous order book for retirement pension had not been cancelled; what the value of duplicate payments was in such cases; how many such duplicate payments have been made to those receiving direct payments into an account and of what value; and if he will make a statement. [133566]

Malcolm Wicks: We are aware that a number of duplicate order books were issued in the South West Region in June 2003. Although it is not possible to say precisely how many cases were involved, corrective action was taken to prevent any further cases and we are satisfied that the number was small. Payment arrangements have been corrected where cases have been identified. Pension Credit has been payable only from 6 October and information on duplicate payments is not yet available.

SCOTLAND

Bechtel

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the contracts for consultancy and work carried out by Bechtel in each year since 1997, stating in each case (a) the nature of the work, (b) the value of the contract and (c) the duration of the contract; and if he will make a statement. [133019]

Mrs. McGuire: The Scotland Office was established on 1 July 1999. Since that date no consultancy or other work has been carried out by Bechtel for the Office.

CABINET OFFICE

Government Websites

24. Miss Begg: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what steps the Government is taking to ensure that the design of government websites is focused on the needs of the general public. [132955]

Mr. Alexander: The Cabinet Office publishes "Guidelines for UK Government Websites", a best practice guide for the design and management of websites.

The guidelines were last updated in December 2002 to reflect advancements in technology and to clarify and extend the range of advice.

Public Appointments

Rob Marris: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what age restrictions there are on public appointments. [132956]

Mr. Alexander: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier to my hon. Friends the Members for Preston (Mr. Hendrick) and South Ribble (Mr. Borrow).

Ministerial Responsibilities

Mr. Chope: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if he will revise the list of ministerial responsibilities published by his office in July so that the Ministries are set out in the same alphabetical order as in previous editions of the same publication. [133535]

Mr. Alexander: The List of Ministerial Responsibilities (LMR) is now available in both electronic and paper form. LMR now lists Departments in alphabetical order consistent with the style adopted in previous editions. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House and the Vote Office. A copy is also being sent direct to the hon. Member.

DEFENCE

AWE Aldermaston

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the purposes are of the refurbishment of buildings and other infrastructure at AWE Aldermaston; and what estimate he has made of the final cost. [132439]

Mr. Ingram: The refurbishment and replacement of older facilities and the decommissioning of those no longer required at AWE is an on-going programme of work to meet safety, regulatory and operational requirements. This work also offers potential environmental and efficiency benefits.

The costs of this work are included in the overall incentivised price of the 25-year AWE Management and Operation contract. It will be for AWE to determine the scope and level of investment necessary to maintain the infrastructure that will underpin the ability both to deliver the requisite contract outputs and to generate the efficiencies that we expect the incentivised arrangements will produce.

Challenger 2 Tank

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what future plans there are for the digitalisation of the Challenger 2 Main Battle Tank fleet; what the predicted cost of digitising the Challenger 2 Main Battle Tank fleet is; and when the digitisation of the Challenger 2 Main Battle Tank fleet is due to start. [133708]

Mr. Ingram: The digitisation of Challenger 2 will be achieved through the installation and integration of Bowman radios, Platform Battlefield Information Systems Application (P BIS A) and the Commander's Crew Station Screen with the current fire control and sighting systems within the tank. This work will be completed by the Design Authority Alvis Vickers Ltd. The approved cost for the Bowman project is £2.073 billion (resource cost, VAT inclusive, for the Demonstration and Manufacture phases) and the approved cost for the Combat Infrastructure and Platform BISA (CIP) project is £410 million (P BISA is an integral part of the CIP project). Both projects involve digitisation of a number of platforms over-and-above Challenger 2, it is therefore not possible to determine the elements attributable to a specific platform. The programme to digitise the Challenger 2 fleet is due to start in January 2004.

Colchester Garrison

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether (a) the Ministry of Defence and (b) Her Majesty's Treasury will receive a payment from Annington Homes as a result of the sale of former Ministry of Defence dwellings and land at the Colchester Garrison; and if he will make a statement. [132816]

Mr. Caplin: Under the terms of the 1996 Sale Agreement between the Ministry of Defence and Annington Homes, the Exchequer benefits from a Profit Share arrangement when properties that have become surplus are returned to the owners (Annington) and sold. This arrangement applies for the first 15 years following the 1996 sale and is based on a sliding percentage scale of the profit made by the Company after allowable overheads have been deducted.

Compensation Claims

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much compensation has been paid by his Department in each year since 1990. [132736]

Mr. Caplin: Records going back to 1990 on how much compensation has been paid by the Ministry of Defence are not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, the information sought in relation to compensation paid, which includes legal costs, since financial year 1997–98 is shown in the following table.

	Compensation paid (£million)
1997–98	70
1998–99	76
1999–2000	83
2000–01	88.5
2001–02	91.5
2002–03	104

The increase in the value of settlements in recent years is mainly attributable to changes in the level of general damages recommended to the courts by the Judicial Studies Board and a change in the multiplier used to calculate future losses as directed by the Lord Chancellor. For a breakdown of the figures, as well as further details regarding compensation issues associated with the Ministry of Defence, I refer my hon. Friend to the Department's Claims Annual Report, a copy of which is placed in the Library of the House each year.

Postal Services

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to continue with free postal and parcel services for armed forces personnel on detached duties abroad. [133157]

Mr. Ingram: A scheme to allow only those personnel deployed on Operation Telic to be sent small packets up to 2 kg in weight free of charge commenced on 17 April 2003. The service is kept under review.

Ministry of Defence Police

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the accountability of the Ministry of Defence Police. [132445]

Mr. Caplin: The Ministry of Defence Police (MDP) are accountable to the Secretary of State, and therefore to Parliament for their actions. The role of the MOD Police Committee is now comparable to that of a police authority, mirroring best practice where appropriate. The committee focuses on strategic advice and governance, and holds MDP to account on a wide range of issues including complaints and discipline and the use of the extended jurisdiction granted to the MDP under the Anti-Terrorism, Crime and Security Act 2001. A number of independent members sit on the committee.

The Chief Constable's Annual Report and Accounts as well as his annual Key Targets are in the public domain. The Chief Constable now also provides an annual Operational Report. When this is available a copy will be placed in the Library of the House. The Chief Constable can be called before Select Committees if required and constituents of Members of Parliament may raise questions with the Secretary of State for Defence and the Chief Constable on the force and its activities.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department expects to publish the second stage of the Quinquennial Review of the Ministry of Defence Police; and if he will make a statement. [132446]

Mr. Caplin: We have no plans to publish material relating to the second stage of the Ministry of Defence Police Quinquennial Review, as most of the issues relate to internal Ministry of Defence Police matters. This concerned governance and accountability, with particular reference to the MOD Police Committee.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the timetable is for implementing provisions of the Police Reform Act 2002 concerning the Ministry of Defence Police; and if he will make a statement. [132447]

Mr. Caplin: The Police Reform Act 2002 includes four sections that are specific to the Ministry of Defence Police (MDP). Three sections of the Police Reform Act 2002 have been implemented already. These allow for MDP officers to serve with other police forces under the direction of the chief officer of the force with which they are serving; place inspections by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary on a statutory basis; and allow potential recruits to the MDP to use firearms without a certificate for the purpose of assessment.

The final section concerns disciplinary procedures for the MDP, and the process to change these procedures is nearly complete. I expect the new procedures to be laid before Parliament early next year.

Pilot Training

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the time interval is between pilots completing fast jet training and beginning operational conversion unit training in respect of the (a) Tornado GR4, (b) Tornado F3, (c) Harrier and (d) Jaguar. [132551]

Mr. Ingram: Following completion of fast jet training, all pilots from the RN and the RAF are selected to join a specific Operational Conversion Unit (OCU). The length of time pilots wait to join their allotted OCU depends on the availability of spaces at the OCU.

During these periods, trainees are attached to units to enhance their general service knowledge. Refresher training is normally undertaken at RAF Valley in the event of time intervals exceeding 20 weeks between the completion of flying training and the formal start of the OCU.

Recruitment

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the involvement of a recruitment company in the enlisting into Her Majesty's armed forces people from Fiji. [132807]

Mr. Caplin: I am not aware of any involvement of a recruiting company currently connected with the enlistment of Fijian citizens into the United Kingdom armed forces.

Royal Naval Personnel (Family Contact)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how often (a) submariners and (b) other Royal Naval personnel are able to contact their families when on operations; and under what circumstances contact is restricted. [128118]

Mr. Caplin: All personnel deployed outside UK waters or Northern Europe on a Permanent Joint Headquarters "named" operation for seven days, or a Fleet operation or exercise for two months, are eligible to the benefits of the Operational Welfare Package, free of charge. This comprises 20 minutes of telephone time per week; one e-mail per week (which may be increased if operational circumstances permit); and unlimited postal aerogrammes.

Telephone calls and e-mails are sent using satellite communications, which may be restricted from time to time at the discretion of the local commander for reasons of operational security. Also, satellite communications cannot be used by submerged submarines, so use of these facilities is restricted to time on the surface or in port. Aerogrammes can only be delivered or sent when the ship or submarine receives a mail delivery/collection.

In the case of Vanguard Class ballistic missile submarines, which spend the whole of their deployed time submerged, none of the above methods can be used, but personnel on board are able to receive "familygrams" sent via Flotilla HQ at Faslane. These are restricted to 40 words per week at the moment, although we are currently considering increasing this limit.

Iraq

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 1 September 2003, Official Report, column 910W, whether his Department has had discussions with the (a) World Food Programme and (b) International Committee of the Red Cross about security at the Ministry of Trade warehouse in Basra. [129802]

Mr. Ingram: The Department for International Development is responsible for liaison at departmental level with non-governmental organisations operating within Iraq. It is usual procedure for local commanders to discuss matters such as these with representatives of NGOs. Because representatives of the World Food Programme and the International Committee of the Red Cross have now withdrawn from Iraq and due to the roulement of UK armed forces personnel, I cannot confirm when security arrangements at the Ministry of Trade warehouse in Basra were discussed.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many atropine Combopens each soldier had in his possession at 202 Field Hospital at the start of the conflict in Iraq. [133709]

Mr. Ingram: At the start of the conflict atropine Combopens were not issued to individual personnel of 202 Field Hospital (Volunteer) (202 Fd Hosp (V)), but 420 were distributed across several locations in the Hospital complex. By the end of March a further 1,200 were issued to 202 Fd Hosp and each member of the unit was personally issued with 2 Combopens.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what work his Department is doing to locate, identify and repatriate Kuwaitis who remain in Iraq from Iraq's invasion in 1990. [117032]

Mr. Ingram: None. However, the Coalition Provisional Authority (CPA) is making significant efforts to implement UN Security Council Resolution 1483 which calls for continuing efforts to locate, identify and repatriate all Kuwaiti and Third-State Nationals. Mass grave sites continue to be found across Iraq which may contain human remains from a number of groups of Iraqi society as well as foreign nationals. United Kingdom forensic experts have visited mass grave sites and a strategy is being drawn up which will enable the CPA to protect sites and secure evidence. There are a number of UK CPA secondees working to support the collection of witness statements and testimonies and train Iraqi organisations in the relevant skills.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Maze Prison

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will support the transformation of Maze Prison in County Antrim into a tourist attraction or a site that could be used by European countries as an outreaching post for the US tourism market. [128572]

Mr. Pearson: The Government appointed a Consultation Panel in March this year to consider and bring forward proposals for the regeneration of the Maze Prison and adjacent Ministry of Defence site. The Panel will be trawling widely for ideas and proposals to regenerate these very valuable sites. Having considered and taken advice on the proposals received, the Panel will make recommendations to Government both on how the sites can be used to promote social and economic regeneration and on the appropriate regeneration vehicle for taking the work forward.

Age Discrimination

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what his policy is on tackling age discrimination in Northern Ireland. [131856]

Mr. Spellar: We plan shortly to issue for consultation, proposals for legislation which will tackle age discrimination in employment and training. These proposals will be in line with the requirements of the EU Employment Framework Directive.

Policy development is continuing within the context of the single Equality Bill on extending protection against age discrimination to the provision of goods, facilities and services. A consultation on the single Equality Bill is planned for the end of 2003.

The Promoting Social Inclusion working group on Older People is also planning to issue their 'Strategy for Older People in Northern Ireland' for consultation before the end of the year.

Ambulance Service

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he is taking to improve ambulance response times in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [133183]

Angela Smith: One of my Priorities for Action in 2003–04 is that the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service should by 31 March 2004 have an Accident and Emergency ambulance at the scene of 50 per cent. of 999 calls in 8 minutes, and at the scene of 95 per cent. of 999 calls in 18 minutes in the Eastern Board area, 21 minutes in the Northern, Southern and Western Board areas.

I have already made capital funding available to the Ambulance Service to replace and add to its vehicle fleet, and revenue funding to recruit and train the necessary additional staff, to enable these targets to be met.

In addition in February this year it was announced that some 29 million would be available over the next five years from the Strategic Investment Programme to continue to take forward the development of a modern ambulance service which can respond quickly to emergency situations and provide vital clinical care to patients.

Belfast City Airport

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his plans for the future policing of the Belfast City Airport. [133300]

Jane Kennedy: The policing arrangements at Belfast City Airport are being enhanced following a recommendation from the Chief Constable of the PSNI. This move is seen as a necessary and prudent measure to ensure the airport has the appropriate level of security. As is the case at other important economic facilities in Northern Ireland, levels of security at BCA are kept under continual review.

Carpets International (UK) Ltd.

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he has taken to assist Carpets International (UK) Ltd. since it went into receivership; and if he will make a statement. [133188]

Mr. Pearson: Since Carpets International (UK) Ltd. went into receivership on 20 August 2003, officials from Invest NI, the Department of Employment and Learning and the Social Security Agency have maintained close links with all relevant parties associated with this case.

Invest NI received a project plan from a management buy out (MBO) team on 17 October 2003. This plan is currently being appraised. As regards the employees made redundant by the company, links have been made available to them to local job agencies, job clinics and the Social Security Agency. I am also aware that local employers have offered positions to suitable applicants from the Carpet International plants at Killinchy and Donaghadee.

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the likelihood of a successful outcome for a management buy-out at Carpets International; and if he will make a statement. [133235]

Mr. Pearson: Officials from Invest NI met the management buy out (MBO) team from Carpets International, Donaghadee and their advisers on Friday 17 October 2003 having been in touch with them on a number of previous occasions. At that meeting Invest NI was presented with the MBO team's business plan. The business plan is being appraised by Invest NI and it would be inappropriate to make an assessment at this early stage.

Elderly Mentally Infirm Unit Places

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to increase the number of elderly mentally infirm unit places in Northern Ireland. [132470]

Angela Smith: It is a matter for each Health and Social Services Board to determine the need for any service in their area and to commission that service within the resources available to it.

The Northern HSS Board is currently undertaking a review of services for older people with mental health problems, and will use the findings to determine level of need in their area. A report is due in March 2004.

The Eastern HSS Board has no plans to increase number of elderly mentally infirm places at present.

The Southern HSS Board has plans to support an additional 40 elderly mentally infirm people using a supported living model.

The Western HSS Board has recently sponsored the development of 20 nursing placements, and is currently planning for the provision of a further 30 places in a Housing with Care Unit. It has also identified further need for additional EMI places within a supported living model, and is planning a review of provision to quantify this.

Although it is not possible to provide an exact Northern Ireland total, it was estimated in 2002 that there are 2,500–3,000 permanent places available for, or occupied by, persons with dementia (equivalent to elderly mentally infirm persons) regardless of the source of funding. At the moment there is no evidence that there is a need to increase the number of elderly mentally infirm unit places in Northern Ireland.

Equality Commission

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to assess the Northern Ireland

Equality Commission's (a) ability to carry out its activities and (b) value to the public purse following the report of the Northern Ireland Auditor General; and if he will make a statement. [128296]

Jane Kennedy: The Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister is responsible for approving the Equality Commission for Northern Ireland's three year Corporate Plan and annual Business Plan. The Department monitors and assesses the Commission's progress against these agreed targets and objectives and ensures that action is taken on recommendations arising from the annual audit of accounts by the Northern Ireland Audit Office. The Equality Commission publishes an Annual Report detailing performance against its agreed objectives which is laid before Parliament.

EU Constitution

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the implications for Northern Ireland of the proposed European Union constitution. [131858]

Mr. Pearson: Treaty changes to bring the institutions and policies of the European Union up to date, in particular in view of the enlargement of the EU next year, will be negotiated by member state governments at the Inter-Governmental Conference, which begins on 4 October in Rome.

In terms of the likely implications of changes for Northern Ireland, the situation will continue to be kept under review through the normal channels operating between Northern Ireland and the relevant Whitehall Departments.

Fair Employment and Treatment Order

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to review exemptions for certain employees from the provisions of the Fair Employment and Treatment (Northern Ireland) Order 1998. [131862]

Mr. Spellar: The exceptions in the Fair Employment and Treatment (Northern Ireland) Order 1998 for employment for the purposes of a private household and for charities as employers will be removed and the exception for the employment of schoolteachers will be restricted to teacher recruitment with effect from 2 December 2003 in order to comply with the EU Employment Framework Directive.

The Equality Commission for Northern Ireland is currently undertaking an investigation with a view to putting forward recommendations on action necessary to further equality of opportunity in the employment of teachers in schools. These recommendations will be considered in the context of the single Equality Bill.

On 22 September, the Government announced a review of the effectiveness of the temporary provisions of the Police (Northern Ireland) Act 2000 which provide for 50:50 recruitment and lateral entry to the Police Service of Northern Ireland. These temporary provisions, which are due to expire in March 2004 unless they are renewed, include an exception to the Fair Employment and Treatment Order. Government will carry out a wide-ranging consultation on this issue which is due to come to a close on 19 December this year.

Farming

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many pedigree and commercial producers have attended (a) training programmes and (b) cattle management programmes in each of the last three years, broken down by parliamentary constituency. [133346]

Mr. Pearson: The information requested is as follows:

Training Programmes

The College of Agriculture, Food and Rural Enterprise provides a wide range of training programmes for all farmers in a number of subject areas. In general courses can be classified into five main areas:

Practical skills courses,

Legislative courses,

Technical courses,

Environmental training courses,

Business management training courses.

Training programmes are available to farmers, farm family members and farm workers. The number of pedigree and commercial producers attending these programmes is not recorded by CAFRE. The total number of people attending training programmes across Northern Ireland in the last three years is:

2000–01—6,153 participants

2001–02—6,046 participants

2002–03—9,281 participants

Information on participants is not available by parliamentary constituencies.

Cattle Management Programmes

The number of pedigree and commercial producers, by County, who have attended Breed Cattle Improvement learning programmes since delivery commenced in October 2002 is illustrated in the following tables:

2002–03

Numbers of producers	Pedigree	Commercial
Antrim	56	130
Armagh	17	89
Down	36	116
Fermanagh	52	80
Londonderry	34	142
Tyrone	52	234
Total	247	791

2003–04

Numbers of producers	Pedigree	Commercial
Antrim	0	13
Armagh	0	24
Down	0	19
Fermanagh	0	26
Londonderry	0	25
Tyrone	0	68
Total	0	175

Currently there are 60 pedigree producers and 111 commercial producers participating in learning programmes. A further 101 commercial producers have been invited to commence training before the end of October.

Delivery of the Cattle Health Management learning programmes commenced in May 03. The number of producers who have attended learning programmes is illustrated in the following table. Participants on this learning programme are not recorded by their commercial or pedigree status.

Numbers of producers	Completed training	Currently in training
Armagh	14	0
Down	25	26
Fermanagh	0	15
Londonderry	12	17
Tyrone	27	35
Total	94	93

A further 111 producers have been invited to commence training before the end of October.

Invest Northern Ireland

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the total value was of funding allocated by Invest Northern Ireland in (a) grants and (b) equity, in each of the last three years. [133341]

Mr. Pearson: During 2002–03 Invest NI offered assistance through letters of offer totalling £125.6 million, of which £8.2 million was in the form of equity. For 2001–02 Invest NI's legacy agencies issued £80 million through offers, of which £3.7 million was equity based. For 2000–01 a total of £107.7 million was offered, £2.8 million in the form of equity.

Fish Farms

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the value was of funding allocated to assist Northern Ireland's inland fish farms to improve their international competitiveness in each of the last three years. [133342]

Mr. Pearson: The information available is set out in the following table.

	EU funding (£ million)
2001	0.208
2002	0.313
2003	0.208
Total	0.729

Organ Retention

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the proposed new informed consent document will be available for public comment. [132475]

Angela Smith: New consent forms and information on post mortem examinations have been drafted and will form the basis of a 13-week consultation process, which will commence in January 2004. The Department will promulgate these documents together with other new guidance and information to a wide range of key stakeholders, including relatives, and invite their views and comments, which will be analysed following the completion of the consultation process. The documents will also be made available on the Department's website.

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what form of informed consent documentation is being used in Northern Ireland pending the revision of the Human Tissue Act 1961. [132476]

Angela Smith: Trusts were issued with interim guidance on post mortem examination by the Chief Medical Officer in March 2000. This was updated in May 2003. The guidance states that consent should be obtained through the use of a form, normally signed off by the next of kin, which provides clear written information about:

what the examination entails.

which organs and tissues may be retained and why.

how this might impact on the funeral arrangements.

whether archiving for research or legal reasons is required.

Copies of the consent form should then become an integral part of the post mortem record, placed in the deceased patient's notes and given to the relative who signed it.

Broadly similar forms are used by all Trusts. New forms have been drafted and will form part of a consultation exercise beginning in January 2004.

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on progress with the revision of the (a) Human Tissue Act 1961 and (b) the Anatomy Act 1984. [132478]

Angela Smith: In 2001–02 England and Wales undertook a fundamental and broad review of the law on human organs and tissues taken from adults or children (including foetuses and stillborn children), either during surgery or after death. This review encompassed the two pieces of legislation mentioned by the hon. Member, for which the Northern Ireland equivalents are the Human Tissue Act (Northern Ireland) 1962 and the Anatomy (Northern Ireland) Order 1992.

A public consultation document, "Human Bodies, Human Choices", was launched in July 2002 and copied to key stakeholders in Northern Ireland. This work not only achieved broad consensus on the way forward but also demonstrated that the system of regulation being proposed, under a Human Tissue Authority, could apply equally to Northern Ireland as to England and Wales, in very much the same way as the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority operates at present.

Work is well advanced on preparing new legislation covering England, Wales and Northern Ireland. The Chief Medical Officer for Northern Ireland issued a summary of these proposals for information on Friday 17 October. It can be viewed at the Department's website: www.dhsspni.gov.uk.

Modern Apprenticeships

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the take-up rate of modern apprenticeships in Northern Ireland was in each of the last five years, broken down by (a) industrial sector, (b) gender and (c) parliamentary constituency. [132794]

Jane Kennedy: The information requested is in the following tables.

Modern apprenticeships

Multiple Sclerosis

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to extend (a) beta interferon and (b) glatiramer therapy for Multiple Sclerosis sufferers in Northern Ireland before the end of 2003. [132473]

Angela Smith: Extra staff have now been recruited specifically to enhance the delivery of services for Multiple Sclerosis patients. It is expected that a considerable number of the patients on the current waiting list will be started on treatment by the end of the current financial year. The suitability of a specific therapy for an individual patient is a matter for the clinicians concerned, in consultation with the patient.

Electoral Identity Cards

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many electors had obtained photo identity cards by (a) 1 May, (b) 29 May and (c) 1 September. [133288]

Mr. Spellar: The number of Electoral Identity Cards issued by each of the dates specified is as follows:

(a) 1 May—55,024

(b) 29 May—66,605

(c) 1 September—79,762

Policing of Airports (Belfast City) Order

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which bodies were consulted prior to the laying of the draft Policing of Airports (Belfast City) Order 2003 on 10 July 2003; and which bodies were consulted prior to its withdrawal during the summer recess. [133298]

Jane Kennedy: Prior to laying the draft Policing of Airports (Belfast City) Order 2003, consultation took place with the Chief Constable of the Police Service of Northern Ireland, the Policing Board and the authorities at Belfast City Airport. The draft Order was withdrawn following consultation with the Chief Constable and the airport authorities.

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland for what reasons the draft Policing of Airports (Belfast City) Order 2003 was withdrawn. [133299]

Jane Kennedy: I agreed to withdraw this Order once I had been assured that the Belfast City Airport Authority would make provision for an armed policing presence in accordance with the Chief Constable's recommendation.

Post-mortem Information

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the progress of the post mortem information leaflet intended for supply to all households in Northern Ireland. [132477]

Angela Smith: Over 600,000 of the leaflets have now been issued. A further 2,952 leaflets will be sent out over the period 17–22 November. The Royal Mail has advised that the distribution of a leaflet to every household in Northern Ireland will be competed by 23 November 2003.

Rheumatoid Arthritis

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many rheumatoid arthritis sufferers have commenced (a) Remicade and (b) Enbrel treatment during the current year in Northern Ireland. [132464]

Angela Smith: This year to date, six rheumatoid arthritis sufferers have commenced treatment with Remicade and a further six have commenced treatment with Enbrel.

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to extend (a) remicade and (b) enbrel therapy for rheumatoid arthritis sufferers in Northern Ireland before the end of 2003. [132474]

Angela Smith: Extra recurrent funding has been provided, which has enabled the first phase of a three-phase project to commence, allowing a significant expansion in these therapies to suitable patients by the end of this year. The decision on the appropriate therapy for an individual patient is a matter for the clinician concerned, in consultation with the patient.

Social Housing

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many new build social houses were commenced and completed in each of the last five years, broken down by location. [120153]

Mr. Spellar: The following table details the number of new build starts and completions by District Council Area for the five years 1998–99 to 2002–03.

Social housing: Starts and completions for past five years

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Analogue Transmission

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will publish the timetable for the ending of the analogue system of television transmission. [132798]

Mr. Caborn: The Digital TV Action Plan sets out a series of actions to ensure that the criteria set for switchover are met so the Government can, if we choose, take the decision to proceed to full switchover by ordering the switching off by 2010 of analogue terrestrial transmissions. Details of the switchover criteria are contained in the Action Plan, which can be found on the website: www.digitaltelevision.gov.uk

Brewster Sessions

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many licences will be considered by Brewster Sessions in 2004, broken down by percentage represented by (a) hotels, (b) restaurants, (c) pubs and (d) others; what proportion of applications were refused by the Brewster Sessions in each of the last five years; and what the cost to industry of applications to the Brewster Sessions was in the last year for which figures are available. [133149]

Mr. Caborn: We estimate that the costs to applicants for renewal of their licences at the last triennial Brewster Sessions was about £11 million, including fees and legal support costs, of which £4.65 million was paid in fees.

The Brewster Sessions at which justices' licences are renewed is a triennial event which last took place in 2001. There have therefore been only two such sessions in the last five years. At these sessions, licensing committees consider objections made by the police, local authorities and local residents to the continuation of licences for a further three years.

The percentage of on-licensed premises which are residential or residential/restaurant licences (hotels) is 7.5 per cent. of restaurants, 18.5 per cent. of public houses, 71 per cent. and of other licences, 3.5 per cent. The total number of on-licensed premises was 110,000 at the end of June 2001, these being the last available figures. In addition, there are some 45,000 off-licensed premises.

There are no figures collected centrally of the proportion of applications for renewal refused by the licensing justices sitting at the Brewster Sessions.

Images of England Project

Mr. Djanogly: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many people are being included in the Images of England project at the National Monuments Record of English Heritage. [132276]

Mr. Caborn: The Images of England project is creating a 'point in time' photographic record of England's 370,000 listed buildings. A wide range of buildings and other structures, from houses and barns to telephone boxes, churches, gravestones and cinemas, are included in the statutory lists of buildings of special architectural or historic interest.

The project is not seeking to photograph people associated with the listed buildings and English Heritage does not generally hold (or seek) information about how many individuals inhabit those that are private dwellings.

Mr. Djanogly: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many people have applied requesting exemption from the Images of England project at the National Monuments Record of English Heritage. [132277]

Mr. Caborn: As of the end of September 2003, English Heritage has received 4,508 applications for exemption relating to less than 1.5 per cent. of the 370,000 listed buildings.

Mr. Djanogly: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the annual cost is of the Images of England project at the National Monuments Record of English Heritage. [132278]

Mr. Caborn: The average annual cost of the Images of England project (taken until the end of the 2002–03 financial year and excluding the pilot project) is £897,000, 75 per cent. of which is provided through a grant from the Heritage Lottery Fund. The average annual cost to English Heritage over the same period is therefore £224,000.

Maritime Archaeology

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make a statement on developments in maritime archaeology since responsibility was transferred from her Department to English Heritage; and what further developments are planned. [132599]

Mr. Caborn: Since being given responsibilities for maritime archaeology, English Heritage now provides the Secretariat to the Advisory Committee on Historic Wreck Sites, and has re-tendered the contract for archaeological diving services.

English Heritage is also currently reviewing the priorities for its wider responsibilities for maritime archaeology in England, and advances have been made in understanding the issues relating to the protection, enhancement and preservation of two of those wrecks in England designated under the Protection of Wrecks Act 1973, in the form of Desk Based Assessments. Further such assessments are planned in the future.

In addition, English Heritage has been able, in partnership with other Government Departments and agencies, to raise the awareness of industry and regulators about the need to take the submerged historic environment into account when planning developments.

Tourism (North-East)

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what measures the Department is taking to encourage tourism in the north-east. [133217]

Mr. Caborn: This Department has allocated £50 million to VisitBritain in 2003–04 for the promotion of Britain overseas and to promote England to the domestic market. Although the north-east benefits from this activity, funding for VisitBritain is not allocated for individual regions, but promotes the country as a whole in a way which maximises the impact of its campaigns in individual markets.

Additionally, DCMS is providing funding to One North East of £330,000 for 2003–04 for tourism development in line with its regional tourism strategy and within the national framework.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Child Soldiers

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures are in place (a) to stop the exploitation of children as soldiers and (b) to bring those responsible to justice. [133559]

Mr. Rammell: We are working with other UK Government Departments, other governments, the non-governmental community and the multi-lateral system (including UN and regional mechanisms) to prevent, reduce and resolve armed conflicts. We consider this to be the most effective way of stopping the exploitation of children as soldiers.

Work is on-going to integrate child-specific issues into post-conflict truth and justice mechanisms to that end, examples being in Sierra Leone and Rwanda. Furthermore, the Rome Statute establishing the International Criminal Court recognises the enlistment or use of children under the age of 15 years to be a war crime, and the ICC provides a means by which to prosecute such offences.

In June 2003, the UK ratified the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflict. The Protocol, ratified by 64 countries worldwide, increases the protection afforded to children by prohibiting their participation in armed conflict.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures are in place to end human rights violations in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. [133558]

Mr. Mullin: The UK strongly condemns all abuses of human rights in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (DRC) and the climate of impunity which exists there. We have worked hard, with international partners, for an end to the regional conflicts which perpetuated the appalling human rights situation. Instruments available to tackle human rights abuses include:

continued diplomatic dialogue with the DRC authorities;

the presence of the United Nations Organisation Mission in Congo (MONUC—who have specialist human rights staff);

the democracy support institutions set up alongside the Transitional National Government in Kinshasa (including the National Human Rights Observatory and the Truth and Reconciliation Commission). The UK is actively considering ways in which it can support the work of these institutions; the valuable work of the many human rights NGOs operating in the DRC.

The Government also note the announcement in July 2003 by the Chief Prosecutor of the International Criminal Court that he intends to follow closely the situation in the DRC.

Uganda

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the effect on (a) security and (b) the humanitarian situation in Uganda of the fighting between government forces and the Lord's Resistance Army. [133564]

Mr. Mullin: We are deeply concerned that the security and humanitarian situation in the North and North-Eastern regions of Uganda continues to deteriorate as a result of the recent escalation of violence by the Lord's Resistance Army.

We understand the Ugandan Government's need to take military action to restore security but have repeatedly urged the Ugandan Government to ensure the humanitarian implications of their military campaign are given the highest priority. We continue to encourage the government to explore complementary methods of bringing the conflict to an end. The United Kingdom gave £2.5 million last financial year for humanitarian assistance to Uganda and is currently allocating a further £3 million.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what discussions the Government have held with the England and Wales Cricket Board regarding the planned tour of Zimbabwe by England in 2004; [132569]

(2) what representations the Government has made to the International Cricket Council (ICC) concerning future tours to Zimbabwe by the England cricket team; what advice was received from the ICC; and when; [132570]

(3) which of his Ministers have held discussions with the England and Welsh Cricket Board concerning the planned tour by the England cricket team to Zimbabwe in 2004; and when the meetings were held; [132571]

(4) what the Government's policy is on the decision by the English Cricket Board to tour Zimbabwe in 2004; and what advice his Department is planning to give English supporters about travelling to Zimbabwe; [132575]

(5) what advice the England and Wales Cricket Board sought from his Department regarding the planned tour of Zimbabwe by England in 2004; and what advice he has given them. [132576]

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made concerning next year's proposed England cricket tour to Zimbabwe; and if he will make a statement. [132582]

Mr. Straw: The England cricket team's tour of Zimbabwe scheduled for late 2004 is a matter for the UK cricket authorities.

FCO Ministers have had no contact with the England and Wales Cricket Board (ECB) or International Cricket Council (ICC) about next year's tour.

FCO officials have spoken with ECB officials and stand ready to further brief the ECB, as and when required, on the political situation inside Zimbabwe and on safety and security issues.

English supporters, like all travellers to Zimbabwe, are advised to refer to our regularly up-dated travel advice.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the level of employment of child soldiers in Zimbabwe. [133562]

Mr. Mullin: The official minimum age for entry into the Zimbabwean armed forces is 18 years. We are not aware of the Zimbabwean armed forces systematically recruiting below this age.

The Zimbabwean "National Youth Service" was established in 2000. Nominally a voluntary training scheme for vocational skills, disaster management, patriotism and moral education, it is widely understood to operate as a youth militia for the ruling party. By the end of 2002 an estimated 9,000 young people had undergone formal training in this scheme in five main camps and up to 20,000 were trained less formally elsewhere. This allegedly included weapons training. In July 2003, the Zimbabwe Defence Minister announced plans to formally integrate weapons training in the scheme's programme. The stated catchment age for the National Youth Service is 12–30 years.

The "National Youth Service" is now one of the most commonly reported violators of human rights in Zimbabwe. There are also numerous credible reports of young people in training camps being abused.

We deplore the political violence which is prevalent in Zimbabwe and will continue to work with our international partners to bring about a return to good governance and a respect for human rights, including the rights of the child, there.

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his assessment is of the current economic and political situation in Zimbabwe. [132245]

Mr. Mullin: The situation in Zimbabwe continues to deteriorate. Last month saw the closure of the only independent daily newspaper, and last week saw the arrest of up to 200 trade unionists for peacefully demonstrating. As this year's meagre crop runs out, half the population will depend on food aid. The Zimbabwean people continue to struggle with hyper-inflation, mass unemployment, and shortages of cash, food and fuel. The source of the problem is clear: bad governance and bad policies. We will continue to support all those working for peaceful change in Zimbabwe and a return to democracy, accountable government and respect for human rights.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to ensure that journalists from the United Kingdom have access to Zimbabwe. [132785]

Mr. Mullin: We deplore Zimbabwe's draconian media legislation. We have made it clear that the expulsion of foreign journalists only serves to further damage Zimbabwe's reputation. We have also underlined that free speech and a free press are among the essential prerequisites for the restoration of Zimbabwe's relations with the international community.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to ensure an end to the harassment of the political opposition within Zimbabwe. [132786]

Mr. Mullin: We have consistently condemned the Mugabe government's harassment of the opposition, independent media and civil society. With our strong support, the EU has imposed sanctions on the ZANU (PF) leadership. The Commonwealth has suspended Zimbabwe from its Councils. We have encouraged Zimbabwe's neighbours to press ZANU (PF) to stop its violence towards the opposition. We will continue to support all those working peacefully for a return to a democratically elected government which respects human fights and the rule of law.

Arjan Erkel

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Russian Government on efforts to secure the release of Arjan Erkel, from Medicins Sans Frontieres, in Dagestan. [132915]

Mr. Rammell: Officials take all appropriate bilateral opportunities to raise this with the Russian authorities. Officials last raised the case of Mr. Erkel in Moscow on 6 October. We and other EU partners fully support the efforts of the Government of the Netherlands to ensure the safe release of Mr. Erkel.

Burma

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Government of Burma regarding (a) Aung San Suu Kyi and (b) human rights in Burma. [133574]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have had numerous discussions with the Burmese authorities about the detention of Daw Aung San Suu Kyi and wider human rights abuses in Burma, most recently on 1 September when I met the Burmese Ambassador. This has been supplemented by representations by the British Embassy in Rangoon.

European Treaties

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what occasions since 1973 the UK has asserted its national law as against its obligations under European treaties. [132935]

Mr. MacShane: The jurisprudence of the European Court of Justice since the case of Costa v. ENEL (case 6/64) has clearly established the principle that no provision of national law may be invoked to override Community law. In Costa v. ENEL the Court ruled that:

> "the law stemming from the Treaty ... [cannot] be overidden by domestic legal provisions ... The transfer by the states from their domestic legal systems to the Community legal system of the rights and obligations arising under the Treaty carries with it a permanent limitation of their sovereign rights against which a subsequent unilateral act incompatible with the concept of the Community cannot prevail."

Iraq

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the future UN role in the reconstruction of Iraq. [133159]

Mr. Rammell: The Government remain committed to a vital role for the UN in Iraq, as provided for by Security Council Resolutions 1483 and 1511.

Security Council Resolution 1511, passed unanimously on 16 October 2003, encourages further participation by the UN and the international community in assisting Iraq, including in the political processes leading to the formation of a representative government.

Following the terrorist attack on the United Nations Headquarters in Baghdad on 19 August, the UN's efforts in Iraq have inevitably been scaled back. We are in discussion with the UN on the security measures needed to ensure that the UN is able to strengthen its vital role in Iraq.

Cyprus

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current position in the Loizidou case. [132579]

Mr. MacShane: The Government supports the implementation of the relevant judgments of the European Court of Human Rights and the efforts currently under way in Strasbourg to achieve this.

An outcome which would satisfy the Committee of Ministers that the judgments of the Court had been properly respected is within our grasp. We urge all concerned to spare no effort to achieve this within the next few days, for the good of the plaintiff, of Turkey's good name in the Council of Europe, of Cyprus and of the region as a whole. Such an outcome would be fully in the spirit of the proposals for a comprehensive settlement put forward by the UN Secretary General. Agreement on the basis of the Annan Plan would provide the shortest route to compensation for Greek and Turkish Cypriots who, like Ms Loizidou, have been deprived of the use of their property and other rights.

North Korea

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the discussions he and members of his Department have had since 1997, with representatives of the Governments of (a) the US, (b) Australia, (c) South Korea, (d) Japan, (e) China, (f) Russia and (g) India on the issue of missile testing in North Korea; where each discussion took place; what concerns were raised by (i) him, (ii) members of his Department and (iii) their respective counterpart(s); and if he will make a statement. [132543]

Mr. Rammell: We regularly discuss North Korea's nuclear programmes and missile proliferation with Australia, South Korea, Japan, China and Russia, both at ministerial and official level. We shall continue to work with international partners towards a peaceful settlement on the Korean peninsula, and to urge North Korea to return to compliance with its international obligations.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the peace process in Sri Lanka. [133060]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 20 October 2003]: We support the Sri Lankan peace process both politically and practically, and welcome the remarkable progress that has been made since February 2002 when the current ceasefire came into effect. Although the peace talks are currently suspended, the ceasefire is holding. Proposals for an interim administration in the North and East have been put forward by the Government of Sri Lanka, and we hope that the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE) will shortly table a counter-proposal that will enable all parties to return to the negotiating table.

Tibet

Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last raised human rights in Tibet with his Chinese counterparts. [132855]

Mr. Rammell: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary raised Tibet, and the human rights situation in China, when he met Chinese Foreign Minister Li Zhaoxing on 25 June. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister also raised Tibet with the Chinese leadership during his visit to China on 20–22 July.

Turkey

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures he is taking to help restore the ceasefire between the Kurds and the Turkish Government. [132239]

Mr. MacShane: We welcome the Turkish "Reintegration Law", passed on 29 July, which enables those associated with a terrorist group, including PKK/KADEK, to renounce the organisation and return home, and introduces lighter sentences for those accused of PKK/KADEK associated crimes. It is encouraging that this is beginning to be implemented.

Properly implemented, this will complement Turkey's efforts to ensure that the human rights of all groups within Turkey, including the Kurds, are protected.

Visas

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the total visa income was in August. [131884]

Mr. Mullin: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is unable to disaggregate UKVisas income as between July and August. UKVisas income for the two months combined was £22,887,111.

Uzbekistan

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Uzbekistan on imprisonment, torture and executions of religious and political opponents of the Government; and if he will make a statement. [132553]

Mr. Rammell: We are deeply concerned by reports of imprisonment, torture and executions of religious and political opponents of the Uzbek Government. We take every opportunity to raise human rights issues bilaterally with the Uzbek authorities, including raising individual cases of religious and political persecution. For instance, I raised human rights issues with the Uzbek Ambassador on 8 October.

We frequently work with EU Partners and within the OSCE to raise our concerns by way of EU statements in Brussels and Vienna and demarches by EU Heads of Mission. The UK supported the EU statement at the OSCE Permanent Council on 17 July condemning the recent executions of individuals whose cases were under consideration by the UN Human Rights Committee and calling on Uzbekistan to use OSCE expertise in implementing the UN Special Rapporteur's recommendations. Our Embassy in Tashkent is actively involved in human rights issues and is currently working with human rights organisations, the OSCE, UNDP and other Embassies to push Uzbekistan to develop and implement a National Action Plan to Combat Torture.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on (a) the standard of human rights and (b) the democratic process in Uzbekistan. [132554]

Mr. Rammell: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Truro and St. Austell (Matthew Taylor) on 20 June 2003, Official Report, column 437W.

Since then, I raised human rights issues with the Uzbek Ambassador on 8 October, urging the Uzbek authorities to implement the UN Special Rapporteur for Torture's recommendations immediately. Bilaterally, and through the EU and the OSCE, we shall continue to press Uzbekistan to take greater steps towards democratisation and respect for human rights. We stand ready to assist Uzbekistan develop and implement its action plan to combat torture. While we welcome the Uzbek government's verbal and written commitments on human rights issues, we shall continue to press for tangible improvements and evidence of institutional reform.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the reasons are for the recall of the British Ambassador to Uzbekistan; what representations he has received on the early return of the Ambassador; when the Ambassador will return to Tashkent; and if he will make a statement. [132555]

Mr. Rammell: Her Majesty's Ambassador to Uzbekistan is currently in the UK where he has been receiving medical treatment. It would not be right for me to make further public comment on the private circumstances of an individual member of staff.

HEALTH

Age-related Macular Degeneration

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate the Government have made of the number of people whose sight will be affected following the Government's decision to delay implementation of NICE's guidelines to make photo-dynamic therapy available to those suffering from age-related macular degeneration. [132691]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 20 October 2003]: We are not delaying implementation of the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) guidance on photo-dynamic therapy (PDT). Patients are already receiving PDT treatment on the national health service and will do so in increasing numbers in the coming months.

In reviewing the final appraisal determination, the NICE Guidance Executive also considered whether there were grounds for advising the Department to vary the three-month direction. They considered there were grounds to do so on this occasion.

It was the Department's assessment, informed by evidence submitted to NICE, that the NHS would be unable to implement the guidance in full within the usual three-month period. We have previously varied the direction on five occasions when it was required to implement effectively the guidance to provide the service to patients.

The guidance issued to primary care trusts on PDT asks that PCTs should make funds available within nine months. We expect implementation to have been fully achieved within this time frame with all eligible patients having access to available treatment. PCTs may complete implementation earlier should their service planning enable them to do so.

Within the nine months allowed for full implementation, commissioners are expected to expand the service in a planned way to ensure there is sufficient capacity which is appropriately located to meet patient need, a fully trained workforce and access to expert diagnostic services. This will include the creation of new, and the expansion of existing, PDT centres and expert reading centres.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of community health councils will be fully operational on 1 November; and if he will list those that will no longer be operational on that date. [132692]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 20 October 2003]: 98 per cent. of community health councils (CHCs) will still be operational on 1 November.

Three CHCs (Bassetlaw, Southern Derbyshire and Hounslow) will be closed. In these cases, arrangements have been made for members of the public to access information and advice from neighbouring CHCs.

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the staffing level of community health councils was on (a) 1 January, (b) 1 April and (c) 1 July. [132693]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 20 October 2003]: The staffing level of community health councils (CHCs) was 732 on 1 January, 680 on 1 April and 572 on 1 July.

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer of 17 September 2003, Official Report, column 843W, on community health councils, what the staffing levels on 1 November will be as a proportion of the full-time staffing strength before the decision to abolish the councils was taken. [132760]

Ms Rosie Winterton [holding answer 20 October 2003]: It is expected that about 54 per cent. of the full staff complement will be working in community health councils on 1 November.

Mental Health

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which mental health trusts are unable (a) to offer a crisis resolution service and (b) to provide funded accommodation for service users taken into care under section 136 of the Mental Health Act 1983. [131024]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Information is not available in the requested format. Information on the distribution of crisis resolution teams in operation on 31 March 2003 according to strategic health authority boundaries is provided in the table.

Fabry's Disease

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many primary care trusts pay for the prescribing of Fabrazyme; and which do not pay for it; [133575]

(2) what guidance has been issued on the treatment of Fabry Disease; [133576]

(3) what guidance has been issued to (a) primary care trusts and (b) NHS acute hospitals trusts on prescribing Fabrazyme. [133577]

Dr. Ladyman: No central guidance on the treatment of Fabry's Disease or on the prescribing of Fabrazyme has been issued to primary care trusts or acute hospitals.

The Prescription Pricing Authority only collects prescription information on drugs dispensed in the primary care setting. We have no record of Fabrazyme being dispensed in the community in England. Information is not collected centrally on drugs dispensed in secondary care so we would be unable to say if it had been prescribed in a hospital setting.

Although the forthcoming national service framework for long term conditions will not deal directly with Fabry's Disease it is expected to set standards that will improve support and care for people with long term conditions and disabilities.

Neurological Conditions

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many people in (a) Chesham and Amersham, (b) Buckinghamshire and (c) England suffer from neurological conditions; [132329]

(2) what plans he has to monitor the number of people with neurological conditions in (a) Chesham and Amersham, (b) Buckinghamshire and (c) England. [132330]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The information requested is not collected centrally. We do not ask the national health service to collect data on the incidence of individual conditions such as neurology because of the enormous range of conditions and diseases that exist.

I have no plans to monitor the number of people with neurological conditions. The administrative burden of developing and maintaining a diseases and conditions database would be expensive and would divert resources away from the main function of the NHS, which is the treatment of patients.

NHS Dentistry

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much, and what percentage, of the NHS budget was spent on NHS dentistry in (a) 1992, (b) 1997 and (c) the latest 12 months for which figures are available. [121993]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The gross national health service spend on the general dental service (GDS) and personal dental services (PDS)[1] and the proportion this represents of total gross NHS expenditure for 1992–93, 1997–98 and 2001–02 are shown in the following table.

NHS dental services: Gross[2] expenditure on NHS dental services, 1992–93, 1997–98 and 2001–02—England

	Gross NHS dental service expenditure[3] (£ million)	Gross NHS dental service expenditure[3] as percentage of total gross NHS expenditure
1992–93	1,306	4.4
1997–98	1,348	3.6
2001–02[4]	1,674	3.2

[1] All years give GDS expenditure. 2001–02 also includes PDS expenditure. PDS pilots began in 1998 and a proportion of GDS expenditure was moved into a separate budget to reflect this. Spend on PDS pilots has been included in the 2001–02 figures. This includes spending on Trust-led pilots as well as PDS/GDS.
[2] Gross expenditure is the total expenditure on the service before the deduction of patient charge income.
[3] All years give GDS expenditure. 2001–02 also includes PDS expenditure. Expenditure on community and hospital dental services has not been included in this table; information on the total funding for these services is not collected centrally.
[4] Figures for 2001–02 are on a resource basis. This change in accounting practice had the effect of increasing the levels of expenditure attributed to that year. As a result the NHS expenditure total increased by about £200 million compared with the cash system used for previous years.

The amount of money drawn down through the GDS funding arrangements is determined by the amount of work dentists carry out on NHS patients. The rate of increase of spend has been moderated by an increase in the number of dentists treating patients privately. The proportionate spend on dentistry has also been affected by the major additional investment across the NHS in recent years; total NHS expenditure has increased at a faster rate than expenditure on dentistry.

The gross NHS GDS expenditure shown above for 2001–02 does not include the £35 million Modernisation Fund and £6 million Dentistry Action Plan Payments.

The Health and Social Care (Community Health and Standards) Bill currently before the House proposes the introduction of local commissioning for NHS dental services. Funding currently held and administered centrally would then become part of primary care trusts' general allocations. Unlike the current arrangements, resources would remain with the PCT should a dental practice reduce its level of commitment to the NHS. In the longer term, allocations will need to take oral health inequalities into account.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

British Summer Time

Bob Russell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make British Summer Time permanent throughout the year. [132808]

Mr. Sutcliffe: I have been asked to reply.

There are no current plans to change the way British Summer Time operates.

The start and end dates of summer time are harmonised across EC member states through a European Directive. The Directive provides for summer time to be one hour ahead of winter time but does not determine what these times are.

Brickworks Development (Upchurch)

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will publish (a) the Lawful Development Certificate and (b) the Appeal file for the site at Fourbun Field, Otterham, Quay Lane, Upchurch. [133600]

Keith Hill: An Inspector issued a lawful development certificate on 8 May 2001 for the use of land at Four Gun Field, Otterham Quay Lane, Upchurch, Kent for the purposes of a brickworks including ancillary open storage. A copy of the appeal decision and certificate will be available in the library of the House. The appeal file was destroyed 12 months after the appeal decision was issued in line with normal procedures.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will estimate the total revenue which would be raised by local authorities from charging (a) 100 per cent. council tax rate and (b) 100 per cent. business rate on second homes. [132449]

Mr. Raynsford: Approximately £160 million per year would be raised by English local authorities if 100 per cent. council tax were charged and collected on all second homes. This represents an additional £80 million because there is currently a 50 per cent. discount on council tax for second homes. However, because owners of second homes would have no reason to provide this information if discounts were to be entirely ended, the yield in future years would be increasingly difficult to estimate. This would, of course, affect the scope for individual local authorities to benefit directly from the reduction of discounts on second homes.

In addition, some second homes let as self-catering holiday homes are subject to business rates because it is intended that they are let as holiday accommodation for more than 140 days in a year. Business rates are usually charged at 100% for such properties, although figures the revenue raised from them are not available.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister does not have sufficiently detailed records to be able to calculate what would be raised if all second homes were subject to non-domestic rates rather than council tax.

Microsoft (Licensing Fees)

Norman Lamb: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much was paid to Microsoft in licensing fees by his Department and its agencies in each of the last three years; and how much has been budgeted for (a) 2003–04 and (b) 2004–05. [130667]

Yvette Cooper: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister was created on 29 May 2002. The following table summarises Microsoft licensing fees incurred by the Office since its creation, and those incurred by Agencies for the period requested:

Agency	Spend 2000–01	Spend 2001–02	Spend 2002–03
ODPM Central	n/a	n/a	346,800
Fire Service College	Prior to 2002, licenses supplied from the Home Office		6,940
The Rent Service	0	0	0
QEII Conference Centre	6,200	11,900	7,200
Planning Inspectorate	13,000	185,000	67,000

Budgets for spend in 2003/04 and in future years are withheld on grounds of commercial confidentiality.

Milton Keynes/South Midlands Study

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister which organisations are represented on the Infrastructure Delivery Board convened by the Minister responsible for the Milton Keynes and South Midlands Growth Area; when the Board will first meet; and at what frequency he expects the Board to meet thereafter. [132173]

Yvette Cooper: Building on the work of the existing Milton Keynes and South Midlands Steering Group, the proposed Milton Keynes and South Midlands Inter Regional Board will seek long-term commitment to delivery through high level executive membership from relevant agencies. The board, to be chaired by my right hon. Friend the Lord Rooker, would include representatives of areas of infrastructure delivery including: environment, industry, housing, water, transport, education, health, Regional Development Agencies and Regional Planning Bodies, relevant local authorities and delivery vehicles. Some other organisations will also be invited on specific topics. The board is expected to meet two to three times a year and, for the first time in its new role by the end of 2003.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether the Infrastructure Delivery Board for Milton Keynes and South Midlands will consider both capital and revenue implications of planned growth. [132174]

Yvette Cooper: The role of the proposed Milton Keynes and South Midlands Inter Regional Board will be to influence the investment of others, which will include both capital and revenue implications of planned growth.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Communications Masts

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the possible biological effects of terrestrial trunked/radio pulsing rates emanating from (a) handsets and (b) masts; what scientific research he collated to make this assessment; and how his Department's code of best practice applies the findings in respect of siting masts close to schools. [131942]

Ms Blears: In 2001, the National Radiological Protection's Board independent Advisory Group on Non-ionising Radiation (AGNIR) published a report on "Possible health effects from Terrestrial Trunked Radio (TETRA)". The report concluded that it was unlikely that the specific features of TETRA handsets and repeaters could pose a risk to health.

The AGNIR report also concluded that signals from TETRA masts are not pulsed and confirmed that TETRA masts are similar to other mobile phone masts in terms of health and safety. There are no plans to issue specific guidance on the siting of TETRA masts close to schools.

The AGNIR experts' recommendations for further research were taken forward by the Home Office. Recent results from the Defence Science and Technology Laboratory show that signals from TETRA handsets have no effect on calcium exchanges in cells—the main concern about TETRA technology. Further information on TETRA health and safety issues is available at www.homeoffice.gov.uk/docs/tetra.html

National Alcohol Strategy

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the national alcohol strategy. [131936]

Ms Blears: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister commissioned the Strategy Unit (SU) to undertake a project to develop an alcohol harm reduction strategy for England. I am the Sponsor Minister for the project.

The SU published its interim analysis on 19 September and it is available on the unit's website www.strategy.gov.uk. The final report, which will set out the cross-governmental alcohol harm reduction strategy for England, is due for publication later in the year. Implementation of the strategy will begin according to timetable in 2004.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) failed asylum seekers and (b) non-asylum seekers have been deported in each quarter of each of the last three years; to which countries they have been returned; and if he will make a statement. [131979]

Beverley Hughes: Deportations are a specific subset of removals alongside persons subject to administrative removal, removal due to Illegal entry action or those refused entry at port and subsequently removed. Information on the destination of enforced removals is not available. Table 1 shows the number of principal asylum seekers who were removed from the United Kingdom between 2001and the first quarter of 2003—the latest available data—by nationality. This information is not available for removals made in 2000.

Information on the removal of persons other than asylum seekers is not available by nationality or by quarter. 37,665 non-asylum cases were removed from the UK in 2000, 39,850 in 2001 and 54,720 in 2002. These figures include those persons who departed 'voluntarily' after enforcement action had been initiated against them.

Information on the removal of asylum applicants is published quarterly, and on the removals of other immigration cases is published annually. The next quarterly publication will be available from the end of November 2003 on the Home Office Research Development and Statistics Directorate web site at http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average rate of response is by relevant embassies in replacing lost or damaged documentation of asylum seekers in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement. [132387]

Beverley Hughes: The exact information requested is not available and could only be gathered at disproportionate cost by detailed examination of individual casefiles. This is because applications for documentation by the Immigration Service are not broken down to reflect those which arise as a result of lost or damaged documents.

The documentation of those persons who fail to be removed from the United Kingdom is an important issue and the Immigration Service Documentation Unit (ISDU) was established in order to facilitate and organise the provision of documentation in such cases. ISDU liaises closely with foreign Embassies and High Commissions in order to secure the issue of travel documents and to reach agreement on the associated processes.

Every country has its own procedures, criteria, and requirements which must be met in order to establish identity and nationality and these procedures, and the timescales associated with them, vary from nationality to nationality.

Given the wide differences between individual countries any averaged figure would be misleading and therefore unhelpful.

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers in (a) Scotland and (b) England and Wales are awaiting deportation as a result of vandalised documentation. [132388]

Beverley Hughes: The information requested is not available and could only be obtained by examination of individual case-files at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to prevent the destruction of travel documents by asylum seekers who aim to delay their deportation. [132389]

Beverley Hughes: On the 28 August 2003 my righ hon. Friend the Home Secretary made a statement that he would be considering new legislation to tackle asylum seekers who destroy their travel documents in order to delay their removal from the United Kingdom. That legislation is still under consideration, and it is expected that we will be making a further statement about this matter in due course.

Brinsford Young Offenders Institution

Dr. Vis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many children in Brinsford Young Offenders Institution have been placed in the segregation unit since January; and for how long. [130239]

Paul Goggins: Provisional data on the number of children held in segregation at Brinsford young offender institution from January to August 2003 is shown in the following table. This has been split to show the number of times the segregation unit was used for (a) less than seven days, (b) for longer than seven days and (c) for longer than 28 days during this period. The length of stay is dependent on the reason and will vary from no more than a few hours to a carefully prescribed number of days.

Correspondence

Ian Lucas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letter and email dated 16 April and 23 April from Andrew H. Coveney of CP Pharmaceuticals, Wrexham. [120955]

Fiona Mactaggart: The issues raised in the letter and emails of 16 and 23 April were confirmed as being resolved on 30 June 2003.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letter dated 14 August 2003 from the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan regarding his constituent, Mr. S. Chemlakh of Fraserburgh. [132552]

Beverley Hughes: I replied to the hon. Member on 14 October 2003.

Crime Statistics

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the decision was taken to alter the basis for measuring performance against his Department's targets for the reduction of (a) burglary and (b) vehicle crime from recorded crime statistics to the British Crime Survey; which bodies and individuals were consulted before he authorised this change; and what form the announcement of this change took. [131804]

Ms Blears: The decision was taken by Home Office Ministers during the process of establishing Home Office Public Service Agreement targets for the period 2003–04 to 2005–06; announced by way of written ministerial statement on 25 March 2003, Official Report, column 8WS.

Criminal Cases Review Commission

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will outline the case ordering and priority ranking that is used by the CCRC in determining which cases to review. [128849]

Paul Goggins: In case ordering and priority ranking, a distinction is drawn between applications for a case review for those in custody and those who are at liberty or dead. Cases are generally reviewed in date order of receipt, with in-custody cases generally being assigned one year of priority over at-liberty cases. In-custody applicants requesting reviews of their sentences will generally be assigned priority over those applying for reviews of their convictions. Factors such as age and ill health of applicants and witnesses, and the possibility of deterioration of evidence, are also taken into account. Priority is also assigned to cases that the Commission believes to be of particular significance to the criminal justice system.

Criminal Records Bureau

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what the average time has been for processing a check by the Criminal Records Bureau, broken down by category of worker; [129842]

(2) what the average time is which it is expected the Criminal Records Bureau will take to check on new staff seeking to work in the long-term care sector. [129843]

Paul Goggins [holding answer 15 September 2003]: I am unable to provide data to the hon. Member on the average time taken to process Criminal Records Bureau (CRB) checks, broken down by category of worker because there are no IT procedures at present to extract these data from the CRB database.

However, I can confirm that the average turnaround times for Standard and Enhanced Disclosures across all business sectors is 24 days. Service turnaround times for Standard and Enhanced continue to exceed the CRB target of 90 per cent. of Standard Disclosures within two weeks and 90 per cent. of Enhanced Disclosures within four weeks. The CRB expects to process the checks for new care home workers within this service standard. In July 2003, the average turnaround was 93.1 per cent. for Standard Disclosures and 93.5 per cent. for Enhanced Disclosures. Over the last four weeks, output has exceeded intake: 142,932 applications have been received and 145,117 have been issued. Since 11 March 2002, the CRB has issued over 2,364,312 Disclosures.

Deaf Prisoners

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action is being taken to improve the support and welfare of deaf prisoners. [129921]

Paul Goggins: The Prison Service has policies in place to try to ensure that deaf, and indeed all, disabled prisoners are able to participate fully in prison life and that their needs in terms of rehabilitation, maintaining family ties, and support generally, are met. Ensuring staff awareness of the needs of deaf prisoners remains a high priority for the Prison Service: disability and deaf awareness and communication skills for staff are included within diversity training across the Service.

Prisons are encouraged to employ British Sign Language (BSL) interpreters where necessary, for example, in adjudication hearings and in parole interviews. Although it is recognised that not all deaf and hard of hearing people use BSL, more staff in prisons are being trained in basic BSL skills and a small number of staff are more highly qualified and experienced signers.

Staff and managers in prisons are also becoming more aware of the need to ensure that deaf prisoners are able to access offending behaviour programmes, and are starting to explore alternative ways of delivering these programmes.

Great importance is placed on the maintenance of family ties for all prisoners; it is recognised that for deaf prisoners, this requires adjustments such as provision of textphones, and quiet areas and induction loops in visits halls to enhance the quality of visits. Wherever possible, prisons develop links with community groups, some of which support and visit deaf prisoners.

Dr. Ali Dizaei

Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on ministerial involvement in, and reports received by, Ministers during the stages of (a) investigation and (b) prosecution of Dr. Ali Dizaei. [131662]

Ms Blears: The only ministerial involvement in this case has been as a result of responding to parliamentary questions or correspondence from Members of Parliament or briefings on progress. Specific requests are then made to the MPS Secretariat for factual information to support Ministers' replies. This routine procedure—which allows Ministers to answer MPs' inquiries—was followed in response to all PQs and correspondence submitted in this case.

Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the warrants issued on police applications listed allegations that were charges leading to the prosecution of Dr. Ali Dizaei. [131663]

Ms Blears: The Commissioner of Police for the Metropolis informs me that none of the allegations, in respect of which warrants were issued, resulted in charges leading to prosecution of Dr. Ali Dizaei.

Dungavel

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average number of children resident at Dungavel Immigration Removal Centre has been during the last 12 months. [131556]

Beverley Hughes: Information on the average number of children resident in Dungavel Immigration Removal Centre during the last 12 months and the average length of time for which detainees were held is not yet available in the form requested and could be obtained only by examination of individual case-files at disproportionate cost.

Minors are detained only in two limited circumstances: first, as part of a family group whose detention is considered appropriate; second, when unaccompanied, while alternative care arrangements are made and normally just overnight. While the detention of families with children is very regrettable, it nevertheless remains necessary in appropriate cases in order to maintain an effective immigration control and to tackle abuses of the asylum system.

Identity Cards

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many responses he has received to his consultation exercises on identity cards; and if he will make a statement. [131681]

Beverley Hughes: The consultation period on entitlement cards and identity fraud formally ended on 31 January 2003. We received a total of 4,942 individual responses from companies/organisations and from individual members of the public.

A further 5,031 responses from individual members of the public were sent in via the STAND website.

We have been carefully analysing all the responses received and are in the process of preparing a detailed summary of the responses, which we will be publishing. It is right that we take time to consider these thoroughly before making an announcement.

Illegal Immigration

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next plans to meet the French authorities to discuss (a) illegal immigration from France and (b) trafficking of illegal immigrants across Europe. [131980]

Beverley Hughes: There is extensive co-operation between the two Governments and Ministers meet regularly to discuss issues of mutual concern. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary met the French Minister of the Interior on 19–20 October.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of (a) the use of freight searching equipment, and (b) steps taken by the French authorities to return failed asylum seekers to the Balkans. [131981]

Beverley Hughes: The effectiveness of using UK freight searching equipment in France has been clear for some time. There has been during 2003, the capacity to search 100 per cent. of freight vehicles passing through Calais and the number of clandestines encountered by Immigration Officers in the South East District (SED) has fallen drastically as a result. Locally collated management information (which may be subject to revision and correction) indicates a fall of 72 per cent. in monthly detections by SED, from 975 in September 2002 to 270 in June 2003.

New detection technology has also now been deployed in Belgium at Zeebrugge and Ostend and will be rolled out to other ports in Northern France. The deployment of UK detection technology in continental Europe has been a key measure in reducing asylum applications from 8,770 in October 2002 to 3,610 in June 2003.

The French are continuing to operate an efficient system for dealing with asylum applications and failed asylum seekers are being removed to their countries of origin, including the Balkans. The French are currently bringing in new legislation to tighten up their immigration rules.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for the (a) issuing and (b) loaning of high-technology UK freight searching equipment to port-cities in (i) the United Kingdom and (ii) Europe; what equipment is in place; and if he will make a statement. [131983]

Beverley Hughes: There are no current plans to issue or loan freight-searching technology to port operators in the United Kingdom. Freight searching to detect clandestine arrivals is carried out in the United Kingdom by the UK Immigration Service.

As part of the measures to reduce the number of unfounded asylum applications in the United Kingdom, a programme is under way to loan and deploy UK-owned detection technology to port operators and carriers overseas.

We have deployed people detection technology at the ports of Calais and Coquelles. At Calais there is the capability to screen 100 per cent. of embarking freight vehicles. Following the tightening of security at Calais, we are taking steps to deploy at other continental ports including in France, Belgium and Holland, vulnerable to the displacement of clandestine activity.

Additionally, a UK owned scanner is currently on loan to the Belgian authorities and is deployed by the Belgian Federal Maritime Police. In line with the UK commitment to work with European partners to combat illegal immigration, UK owned technology is also currently on loan to the Irish and German authorities.

Immigration and Asylum

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what factors underlay decisions about the number of United Kingdom immigration officers employed in ports in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Europe; what the role is of UK officers in non-United Kingdom ports; and if he will make a statement. [131982]

Beverley Hughes: The information is as follows:

(a) Port staffing levels in the United Kingdom are determined by a number of factors;

Current and projected numbers of passenger arrivals;

For seaports the number of freight vehicles that will require searching

An assessment of the casework generated from the arriving passenger traffic

Projected numbers of asylum seekers that will require interview on arrival

(b) Officers are currently deployed to the following European ports to operate juxtaposed immigration controls:

Gare du Nord, Paris;

Gare du Midi, Lille;

Frethun, Calais;

Coquelles (Eurotunnel)

Officers will be deployed to Calais ferryport, Calais Hoverport, Dunkerque, and Boulogne following the conclusion of the Anglo-French treaty for the implementation of frontier controls at the seaports of both countries on the Channel and North Sea. This will take place towards the end of November 2003.

Save in respect of asylum claims and suspensive rights of appeal all these controls operate on the same basis as immigration controls operated at UK ports.

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement about judicial involvement in the immigration and asylum system. [132235]

Beverley Hughes: The Government are committed to providing a firm, fast and fair asylum and immigration system. The reforms we introduced through the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum (NIA) Act 2002 have helped to deliver a significantly faster and more efficient system, which benefits both the taxpayer and those seeking legal entry or asylum in the United Kingdom. However, the Government believe that there are still too many examples of asylum applicants lodging groundless appeals to frustrate the asylum process and delay removal. Therefore, as my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary stated on 22 May 2003, we are drawing up further legislative measures to limit the scope for making unfounded appeals, including the possibility of moving to a single tier of appeal.

Kent Police

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many (a) police constables, (b) sergeants and (c) inspectors were transferred from the Kent Police Force to the Metropolitan Police Force in each of the last five years; [131701]

(2) what the vacancy rate was for (a) police constables, (b) sergeants and (c) inspectors in each of the last five years for the Kent Police Force area; [131702]

(3) how many police officers have retired from Kent Police Force in each of the last five years; and what the average age of retirement was. [131759]

Ms Blears: There have been no compulsory transfers of officers between the two forces. Information about the officers who have chosen to transfer from Kent County Constabulary to the Metropolitan Police Service (MPS) between 1998–99 to 2002–03 is in Table 1. This information has been provided by the Acting Chief Constable (Mr. R. Ayling QPM). I am also told that during the last five years a total of 37 officers transferred from the MPS to Kent. At the end of August Kent County Constabulary had 3,520 officers, a record number and 260 more than in March 1997.

No information is collected centrally about the age of retiring police officers. Table 2 sets out the number of retirements as a whole for each year from 1998–99 to 2002–03 and, separately, shows the number of medical and ordinary retirements, from the Kent County Constabulary.

Details of vacancy levels in police forces for the last five years are not available centrally.

Table 1: Transfers from Kent County Constabulary to Metropolitan Police

	Constable	Sergeant	Inspector	Other	Total
1998–99	—	2	—	1	3
1999–2000	1	—	—	—	1
2000–01	1	—	—	—	1

Migrants

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the numbers of migrant participants in the new Sector Based Schemes covering food processing and hospitality. [130500]

Beverley Hughes: The figures for the number of Sectors Based Scheme (SBS) work permits that have been approved from the launch on 30 May 2003 to 31 June 2003 covering food processing and hospitality are given in the table:

SBS permits issued

	Number
Total	1,269
Food manufacturing sector	1,214
Hospitality sector	55

Work Permits (UK) is currently discussing with key stakeholders how effectively the scheme is operating, and these discussions will inform the way forward from the end of January 2004 onward (when the current quota is due to expire).

Military Deaths

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the result was of the police investigation into the death of Private Alison Croft at Dalton Barracks in Abingdon, Oxfordshire, on 28 September 2002. [132188]

Ms Blears: I understand that Thames Valley Police have submitted a file to the Coroner on this case. It would therefore be inappropriate for me to comment further.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the result was of the police investigation into the death of Private Tesoni Vakacakaudrove at the Defence School of Transport, Leconfield, on 6 October 2002. [132189]

Ms Blears: I understand that following a major investigation by Humberside Police into the death of Private Vakacakaudrove the Coroner inquest returned a verdict of accidental death.

Police Community Support Officers

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many police community support officers are now in post (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in West Yorkshire; [132340]

(2) how many police community support officers will be in post by 21 December. [132341]

Ms Blears: As of 1 October 2003 there were 1,934 Community Support Officers (CSOs) in England and Wales. Of these 96 CSOs had been recruited by West Yorkshire Police. I have also been informed by West Yorkshire Police that currently Huddersfield have 10 CSOs and will have 18 by the end of March 2004.

We estimate there will be 2,200 Community Support Officers in post in England and Wales by 21 December 2003, rising to over 2,500 by 1 April 2004. We are on track to reach the National Policing Plan target of 4,000 CSOs by the end of 2005.

Police Investigations

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether it is standard practice for police authorities to keep the report of investigations into their own officers confidential; and under what circumstances a police authority would publish such a report. [132222]

Ms Blears: Generally, in investigations into criminal allegations involving either a member of the police or a member of the public, it is standard to keep investigation reports confidential. The same applies to investigations into complaints against police officers.

It is for police authorities to decide whether to publish reports of investigations: they might choose to do so if they considered that the public interest in disclosing a report's contents outweighed the public interest in preserving its confidentiality.

Police Targets

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will review the target setting framework within which the police services work. [132342]

Ms Blears: The National Policing Plan, due for publication in November, will confirm the levels of improvement in performance required, by individual police forces and authorities, to deliver the existing Public Service Agreement targets (which cover the period April 2003—March 2006; published in Cm 5571). It will be for individual police forces and authorities to ensure that these requirements are reflected in their local strategic and annual policing plans.

Prisons

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications to release on temporary licence have been made this year and in each of the last five years in (a) all prisons in England and Wales and (b) each individual prison in England and Wales. [130534]

Paul Goggins: The Prison Service does not collect the numbers of applications for release on temporary licence. However, the numbers of releases on temporary licence listed by type of establishment and by type of licence are published in Prison statistics England and Wales 2001 (Cm 5743), which is held in the Library.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the prisons that have prison visiting facilities which are (a) permanent and (b) temporary; [131208]

(2) which of the prisons that have prison visiting facilities include facilities which cater for (a) people with disabilities and (b) children; [131209]

(3) which prison visiting facilities have been (a) refurbished, (b) built and (c) relocated within the last five years; and what the cost was of the work undertaken; [131210]

(4) which prison visiting facilities are included in an improvement programme; what the nature of the improvements planned is in each case; and what the cost is of work to be undertaken. [131211]

Paul Goggins: The Prison Service has a statutory obligation to encourage and assist prisoners to maintain outside contacts. In recognition of the important role that visits can play in achieving this, as well as the benefits for prisoners' successful resettlement, all prisons have permanent visiting areas. Over 90 establishments provide additional facilities such as visitors' centres.

Prison Governors are required to comply with the duty under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 to provide adequate facilities for people with disabilities and to make 'reasonable adjustments' to existing facilities. In particular, visitors to prison must be able to access all visits facilities. All establishments are currently assessing their facilities, but there is no central record of work conducted. Over 80 prisons provide play areas for children and an increasing number also offer extended day visits. Our policy is to encourage establishments to provide such facilities wherever possible, subject to individual operational and resource considerations.

Individual governors initiate refurbishments to prisons costing less than £50,000 and the expenditure is incurred from their local budgets. Information on where such refurbishments have taken place and the costs involved are not held centrally. All newly built and contracted-out prisons are required to have a visitors' centre, distinct from visits halls, under the terms of their contract and the costs of building these range from around £25,000 to £200,000.

Prison Service policy is to provide adequate facilities and these are under constant review. However, as most improvements are not centrally resourced, there is no comprehensive record of work carried out, or of the associated costs.

Probation Service

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many pilot projects were conducted in the Probation Service in each of the last 10 years. [124959]

Paul Goggins: Central records go back until 1999. The table sets out for each year since 1999 the number of pilots which were commenced in that year. A number of pilots will have run for more than a year, but are shown only against the year in which they started.

	Number of pilots
1999	31
2000	14
2001	10
2002	43
2003	46

Quad Bikes

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints were made to Merseyside Police about illegal quad bikes in the last 12 months; and how many prosecutions resulted. [131962]

Ms Blears: Detailed figures for the whole of last year are not available. I understand, however, from Merseyside Police that they estimate there were, over the summer months, around 1,000 complaints relating to the misuse of quad bikes in the force area. These resulted in about 100 prosecutions and cautions.

Over the summer months Merseyside Police undertook a specific operation against quad bike riders causing a nuisance. This operation specifically led to 17 prosecutions and 16 vehicles being seized under the provisions of section 59 of the Police Reform Act 2002.

Richard Thomas

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place a copy of the report of the inquiry into the conduct of ex-acting chief constable Richard Thomas of Gwent Police in the Library. [132221]

Ms Blears: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for the Home Department does not hold a copy of the report of the inquiry into the conduct of Richard Thomas, ex-acting chief constable of Gwent Police. The report is the property of Gwent Police and I am informed that they have no plans to publish it in any form.

CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

Euro

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how much has been spent in each year by his Department in preparing for UK entry to the euro; how much his Department plans to spend on preparations for UK entry to the euro for each year from the current financial year up to and including 2005–06; and what estimates he has made of the total costs to his Department of changeover to the European Single Currency. [131595]

Mr. Leslie: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend the Financial Secretary to the Treasury gave on 14 October 2003, Official Report, column 142W.

Voter Registration

Chris Ruane: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many (a) adults and (b) adults registered to vote there were in each parliamentary constituency in descending order according to the disparity between the two figures. [133049]

Ruth Kelly: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Chris Ruane, dated 21 October 2003:

As National Statistician and Registrar General for England and Wales I have been asked to reply to your recent question, asking how many (a) adults and (b) adults registered to vote there were in each parliamentary constituency in descending order according to the disparity between the two figures. (133049)

I am placing in the House of Commons Library a table which shows the count of adults (that is persons aged 18 and over) in each Parliamentary Constituency in England and Wales, taken from the published 2001 Census Report for Parliamentary Constituencies, compared with electoral register data from February 2001. It has been sorted in descending order, according to the disparity between the two. There are a number of reasons, which I have outlined below, why these counts can vary so greatly and why some constituencies have more registered voters than the Census counted resident adults. Therefore, the data has been sorted, with the constituency showing the greatest number of adults not on the electoral register at the top, and the constituency showing the greatest number of adults registered to vote but not resident in that constituency according to the Census at the bottom.

The Census and electoral register data are not directly comparable for a number of reasons. These include definitional differences in the way the sources are compiled, differences in the timing of the data for each source being collected, and the delay in people being removed from the electoral register in a constituency after they move away from the area. In addition to this, it is possible for people to be on the electoral register in more than one constituency or none at all.

Chris Ruane: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs if he will list the local authority registration departments that are (a) adopting and (b) not adopting the best practice electoral registration procedures outlined in the Electoral Commission report of 2002, "Making an Impact". [133055]

Mr. Leslie: This information is not collected by my Department. The independent Electoral Commission is planning to undertake and complete early next year research building upon reports it has published in the past year, including "Making an Impact", in order to promote best practice guidance on tackling under-registration. The Government will consider carefully this research which we understand is intended to lead to the establishment of a national framework for the continued monitoring of electoral registration rates. The Electoral Commission is responsible for offering advice and guidance to electoral registration officers on these and other matters and will continue to encourage registration through various promotional activities.

Chris Ruane: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what research on registration rates he has commissioned in the past three years; and what future research he intends to commission on this subject. [133056]

Mr. Leslie: Research on registration rates has not been carried out by this Department or those responsible for electoral matters during the past three years. The independent Electoral Commission, set up in 2000 with a remit to keep under review electoral law and practice, has carried out such research since then publishing reports examining the local promotion of electoral registration and voter engagement among black and minority ethnic communities. Arising from its more recent report, "the Electoral Registration Process" the Commission is planning to undertake and complete early next year a further research project to identify the extent and nature of under-registration in particular communities in Britain as well as reviewing the operation and impact of rolling registration. The Government welcomes this proposal and will give due consideration to any further recommendations the Commission may make as it does to all of the Commission's recommendations concerning electoral registration arrangements.

Chris Ruane: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs if he will list the authorities that have initiated proceedings against individuals who fail to register to vote. [133057]

Mr. Leslie: This information is not collected centrally. The Representation of the People Act 1983 requires electoral registration officers (EROs), appointed by local authorities for the purpose, to compile the electoral register. Regulation 23 of the Representation of the People Regulations 2001 permits an ERO to require any person to give information required for the purposes of that officer's duties in maintaining registers of parliamentary and local government electors. It is an offence punishable upon conviction by a fine not exceeding £1,000 for a person to fail to comply with a request for information from an ERO, or to give false information to an ERO. Prosecutions for non-compliance are initiated at local discretion.

Chris Ruane: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs if he will set out the Department's assessment of the main reasons for substantial falls in electoral registration rates in the UK over the past six years. [133058]

Mr. Leslie: The Government are concerned at the apparent drop in electoral registration in recent years. We are aware of a number of possible contributing factors, but do not wish to prejudge the conclusions of the independent Electoral Commission which is planning to undertake and complete next year research on this subject, building on reports it has published in the past year. The Government welcome this proposal and will give due consideration to any further recommendations the Commission may make as it does to all of the Commission's recommendations concerning electoral registration arrangements.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 22 October 2003

PRIME MINISTER

Dr. David Kelly

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Prime Minister what disciplinary action he has taken against his official spokesman, Mr. Tom Kelly, in respect of his spokeman's remarks to journalists about the late Dr. David Kelly. [133459]

The Prime Minister: My official spokesman unreservedly apologised to Dr. Kelly's widow and her family. Lord Hutton is conducting an inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the death of Dr. David Kelly and the Government are awaiting his report.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Local Government

9. Helen Jackson: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the future financing of local government administration. [133441]

Phil Hope: In April this year, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister launched a review into the current balance of funding for local government. The review has recently completed a period of extensive consultation, and we are now considering a range of options.

Local government has received a record 25 per cent. increase in Government grant in real terms since we took office in 1997—compared with a real terms cut of 7 per cent. under the last four years of the party opposite's time in office.

Leisure Facilities

10. Mr. Todd: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what guidance he gives to local authorities on the obligations of housing developers to provide sports and leisure facilities. [133442]

Yvette Cooper: Planning Policy Guidance note 17 on Open Space, Sport and Recreation (2002) states that local authorities should ensure provision is made for local sports and recreational facilities where planning permission is granted for new developments, especially for housing.

These facilities can be secured through planning obligations, also known as Section 106 agreements, which are agreed between developers and local planning authorities.

Council Housing

11. Mr. Allen: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will fund council housing departments on the same basis as arm's length management organisations; and if he will make a statement. [133443]

Keith Hill: My hon. Friend asks if the Government will fund council housing departments on the same basis as Arms Length Management Organisations, and the answer to that is no.

As my hon. Friend is aware, the funding available for social housing, although greatly increased under this Government, is inevitably limited; and we wish to use it in ways that will most improve the lives of tenants.

The evidence is that Arms Length Management Organisations enhance the quality of service to tenants. It provides the extra funding needed to improve their homes and the local environment; and it enables the local authority to focus on its strategic housing role.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the average council rent is for those (a) local housing authorities with non-transferred housing stock and (b) local council areas where housing stock has been transferred to housing associations and other bodies. [133766]

Keith Hill: A table showing the rent comparison by local authority area and English region is available in the Libraries of the House.

East Midlands Councils

12. David Taylor: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what recent representations he has received about the impact on councils in the East Midlands of the new formula funding arrangements. [133444]

Mr. Raynsford: The East Midlands received £220 million more this year than last, an increase of 7 per cent. in general grant and, along with the West Midlands, the largest increase of any region in England. We have not subsequently received many representations from the Midlands. During the earlier consultation on changes to the local government finance system, 20 representations from local authorities and Members of this House were received which related to the East Midlands.

Commonhold and Leasehold Reform Act

13. Huw Irranca-Davies: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the impact of the Commonhold and Leasehold Reform Act 2002. [133446]

Keith Hill: The Commonhold and Leasehold Reform Act 2002 provides a fairer balance between the rights of landlords and leaseholders. Key provisions of the Act, applying to England, were introduced on 30 September 2002. These included a new Right to Manage, improved rights for leaseholders to challenge unreasonable charges and improved tribunal dispute resolution procedures.

For details of commencement dates in Wales, which I understand are after those of England, I would advise my hon. Friend to speak to the Welsh Assembly.

Council Tax

14. Tom Brake: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what recent assessment he has conducted of the impact of council tax on pensioners. [133447]

Phil Hope: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has not conducted such an assessment. However, council tax benefit, administered by the Department for Work and Pensions, is available to help low income pensioners pay their council tax. Council tax benefit is paid to around 3.9 million households in England, of which around two million are pensioners. With the recent introduction of pension credit, some 1.6 million pensioners will gain benefit and 310,000 will be entitled to benefit for the first time.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will publish the advice that he has offered to Kent County Council on their desire to fix the level of council tax increases for pensioners at the rate of inflation. [133638]

Mr. Raynsford: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister arranged for a copy of my letter of 6 October 2003 to Kent County Council to be available in the Library of the House.

Behavioural Neurosciences Centre (Cambridge)

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he (a) received and (b) expects to publish the Inspector's report into the planning appeal against South Cambridgeshire District Council's refusal of planning permission for a Behavioural Neurosciences Centre at Huntingdon Road, Cambridge. [133445]

Keith Hill: This report was received in the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister on 17 March 2003. It is under active consideration and my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister will issue a decision as soon as possible.

Flooding

David Taylor: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what powers parish councils have to pay for flood prevention schemes. [132480]

Mr. Raynsford: Section 137 of the 1972 Act permits parish councils to spend up to a given amount in a financial year on items that are 'of direct benefit to their area' in relation to which no other powers of expenditure exist. Flood prevention schemes might be regarded as such an item.

Primary responsibility for flood prevention measures is borne by other public bodies, however, with responsibility for ordinary watercourses generally falling to district and unitary councils.

Housing Developments

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what steps he is taking to ensure that major new housing development is adequately served by public transport. [133418]

Keith Hill: All major housing development is assessed against PPG13 as part of the planning system, which requires full account to be taken of the provision of, and effects on, public transport.

In addition, in the four growth areas identified in "Sustainable Communities: Building for the Future", proposals for growth are set out in proposed changes to Regional Planning Guidance, which is subject to consultation and examination in public. As part of this process we are working very closely with the Department for Transport to assess the transport implications and needs of future housing provision. One of the purposes of the RPG process is to test sustainability of proposals for new housing in the Growth Areas, including access to good public transport for new developments.

Housing Stock Transfers

Mr. Drew: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the role that the Audit Commission plays in advising local authorities who are undertaking large scale voluntary transfer of their housing stock. [133636]

Keith Hill: Where the Audit Commission, through the district audit service, is an authority's external auditor, it is a resource that is available to an authority. Therefore, it could advise on the implications of, and risks that, an authority faces in implementing any of the options for delivery of the decent home target for social housing, one of which is to undertake a large scale voluntary transfer.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will publish the advice given to local authorities on communications strategies for those authorities which are undertaking large scale voluntary transfer of their housing stock. [133637]

Keith Hill: Advice to local authorities on drawing up their communication strategies for Large Scale Voluntary Transfers is contained in section 4 of the Housing Transfer Manual 2003, published in March 2003.

Voluntary Tenancy Deposits

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what proportion of (a) landlords and (b) tenants have signed up to the voluntary tenancy deposit pilot scheme. [133605]

Keith Hill: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister estimates that 16,000 tenancies were covered by the voluntary tenancy deposit pilot scheme. Not all of these were located strictly within the five pilot areas, so that the estimated take-up rate of 7 per cent. is subject to a margin of error.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment his Department has made of the value of making membership of a tenancy deposit scheme a legal requirement for (a) landlords and (b) tenants. [133606]

Keith Hill: Last autumn, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister issued a consultation paper on options for Government intervention in landlords' and letting agents' handling of tenancy monies. This included an assessment of having a mandatory scheme (or schemes). The assessment was based partly on the evaluation of the pilot Tenancy Deposit Scheme carried out by the University of York.

TRANSPORT

Airport Capacity (South-East)

John McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department has made of the need for further terminal capacity at Heathrow Airport in the event that a third runway is built. [133330]

Mr. McNulty: For all options for additional capacity that were studied in SERAS, including those on which the Government consulted, an assessment was made of the scale of facilities needed to cater for the forecast additional throughput (eg passenger and freight handling, maintenance, aircraft stands, aprons, cargo, car parking). Layout plans based on those assessments were produced and their impacts appraised. Paragraph 6.6. of "The Future Development of Air Transport in the United Kingdom—South East" made clear that these layouts were not definitive proposals. Detailed design will be a matter for the relevant airport developer.

John McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he plans to stop any further developments at Heathrow, if a third runway is approved. [133331]

Mr. McNulty: The air transport White Paper later this year will provide a framework of Government policy looking forward to 2030, including where any new airport capacity should be provided.

John McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether decisions on terminal capacity for the options set out in the SERAS consultation paper will be made without public consultation. [133332]

Mr. McNulty: For each of the options presented in the consultation document, the layouts illustrated allowed for adequate terminal capacity to be provided. The precise location of terminal and other facilities would be determined as part of the planning process for any relevant airport development.

John McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps his Department will take immediately following the publication of the White Paper on the future of airport expansion in the UK later this year. [133334]

Mr. McNulty: Action by the Department following publication of the White Paper will depend on the decisions announced in it.

Bechtel

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list contracts for consultancy or work carried out by Bechtel in each year since 1997 stating in each case (a) the nature of the work, (b) the value of the contract and (c) the duration of the contract; and if he will make a statement. [133854]

Mr. McNulty: The Department was formed on 29 May 2002 and has not awarded any contracts to Bechtel.

Blue Badge Scheme

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what plans he has to propose legislation on the Blue Badge Scheme following the recommendations of the Disabled Persons' Advisory Committee; [133504]

(2) what progress has been made towards the formation of a central database of Blue Badge holders; [133505]

(3) how much money was raised from charges for applications for Blue Badge disability vehicle stickers in each year since 1990; and what percentage each of these figures represents of the estimated cost of administering the badges in those years; [133506]

(4) how many people have been prosecuted for abuse of the Blue Badge disability vehicle sticker system in each year since 1990; [133511]

(5) what discussions he has had with the Scottish Executive regarding new common guidance on the issuing of Blue Badge disability vehicle stickers. [133512]

Mr. McNulty: Following the review of the Blue Badge Scheme, we are taking forward DPTAC's recommendations through changes to primary and secondary legislation, research and in new guidance to local authorities on the Scheme.

We are pursuing a suitable legislative slot for those changes requiring primary legislation. In the meantime, we have begun work on those recommendations which require amendments to secondary legislation and we will also be letting a number of research projects (including one looking at the feasibility of establishing a central database) shortly. New guidance, which will cover all aspects of the Scheme, will be issued when changes have been introduced.

In taking forward the review, the Department has, and will continue to, work closely with colleagues in the Devolved Administrations. In terms of the new guidance, they will be involved throughout its development.

Timing for introduction of the changes will be subject to the outcome of the research, consultations and the parliamentary process as appropriate. I am not able at this stage to give a firm timetable, but would reassure the hon. Member that we are firmly committed to introducing the changes at the earliest possible opportunity.

The administration of the Blue Badge Scheme is the responsibility of local authorities. Under the regulations they can charge up to £2 for each badge they issue to contribute to their administrative costs. The level of the fee is being reconsidered following the recent review of the Scheme.

Although the Department and the Devolved Administrations currently ask for information as part of their annual Blue Badge statistical survey of local authorities, details do not extend to the funds collected by individual local authorities or their overall administrative costs. Neither does the statistical information include the number of prosecutions for abuse of Blue Badges. There is no legal requirement for local authorities to hold such records or to make them available to the Department.

Lingo-cellulosic Feedstock

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what products would be included in the lingo-cellulosic feedstock materials referred to in the Budget; [133284]

(2) what production systems he has examined on the production of bioethanol from lingo-cellulosic feedstock materials. [133285]

Mr. McNulty: Various production techniques are currently being developed which could allow the production of biofuels from diverse feedstocks including wood, straw, grass and municipal green waste. As set out in the Energy White Paper, published in February 2003, the Government are keen to support the development of these technologies because they have the potential to deliver significant carbon savings over conventional transport fuels. My officials are in regular contact with representatives from a number of companies, both in the UK and elsewhere, which are developing these new technologies.

Network Rail

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to the statement of the Under-Secretary of State for Transport, the hon. Member for Plymouth, Devonport (Mr. Jamieson) of 3 June 2003, Official Report, column 41W, what assurance he has received from Network Rail that it will comply with the consultation and notification arrangements in respect of vegetation management. [132783]

Mr. McNulty: Network Rail advises that it is currently concluding the implementation of the revised local consultation process set out in the 3 June 2003 adjournment debate.

Railways

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the improvements to railway stations in Wales, broken down by (a) location and (b) cost in each of the last five years; and what the proposed improvements are for the next three years. [133054]

Mr. McNulty: In September 2002 £2.4 million was provided by the Strategic Rail Authority (SRA) for the installation of 'Inform Cymru' at 46 stations in Wales; in April 2002 £99,000 for additional car parking spaces, improved security and better passenger facilities at Haverfordwest Station; and £1.1 million for a new waiting room, toilet with disabled access, CCTV and Customer Information Service/PublicAnnouncement (CIS/PA) at Trefforest Station.

The new Wales & Borders franchise agreement which was signed on 20 October 2003 provides £400,000 for improving car parks, including those at Cardiff Central (Wood Street) and Newport. Under the Vale of Glamorgan scheme the Welsh Assembly Government (WAG) is meeting the costs for the building of the two new stations at Rhoose and Llanwit Major. The Vale of Glamorgan line is expected to re-open in December 2004. The Welsh Assembly Government has also set aside £4.5 million for Wales & Borders to improve 47 of their stations before April 2004. The Ebbw Valley scheme, which provides for up to six new stations, is still under consideration by the Welsh Assembly Government.

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he asked the Strategic Rail Authority to consider how the Great Eastern Main Line capacity can be increased; and what the response was. [133360]

Mr. McNulty: The Directions and Guidance to the Strategic Rail Authority, first published on 11 April 2002, require it "to develop a policy for the utilisation of network capacity"—a copy is available in the Library of the House. The Strategic Rail Authority has developed a 'Capacity Utilisation Policy' to determine the most efficient use of the existing network. Individual 'Route Utilisation Strategies' (RUS) are being developed which will help inform the need for new services or infrastructure. The SRA plan to consult on the RUS for Greater Anglia in spring 2005.

Vehicle Emissions

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many registered vehicles run on hydrogen in the UK. [133704]

Mr. McNulty: At the present time there are only a small number of prototype/demonstration vehicles running on hydrogen, worldwide. Transport for London will shortly begin demonstration trials of hydrogen fuel cell buses on public bus routes, with financial support from the Government's New Vehicle Technology Fund, as part of a European-wide demonstration programme, Clean Urban Transport for Europe (CUTE). Ford will be carrying out trials of hydrogen fuel cell and internal combustion cars next year.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many tonnes of (a) fine particulates and (b) ultrafine particulates were emitted into the atmosphere in the UK by the (i) diesel powered vehicle parc, (ii) petrol powered vehicle parc and (iii) road fuel gas vehicle parc in the latest year for which figures are available. [133705]

Mr. McNulty: The following table, based on data from the National Atmospheric Emissions Inventory, presents emissions of particulate matter by fraction, in kilotonnes, from road transport in 2001.

Emissions of particulate matter by fraction (kilotonne)

		Vehicle type
Particulate fraction		Diesel	Petrol	Road fuel gas
Coarse	PM_{10}	26.9	3.17	0.02
Fine	$PM_{2.5}$	25.94	3.06	0.02
Ultrafine	$PM_{0.1}$	13.42	1.58	0.01
	Vehicle kilometres covered (billion)	135.4	354.8	1.7

PM_{10} includes all particles with an aerodynamic diameter of less than 10m (likewise $PM_{2.5}$ includes all particles smaller than 2.5m, and so on), thus the finer particle totals are a subset of the coarser particles.

Figures for $PM_{2.5}$, PM_1 and $PM_{0.1}$ are estimated from those for PM_{10} and the mass fractions in these size ranges available for different emission sources and fuel types. These figures assume the following:

100,000 LPG vehicles in parc, travelling the same distance per year as passenger cars (industry source); emissions from LPG vehicles assumed to be same as average PM factor for petrol vehicles (no PM emissions data available for LPG vehicles); and 850 HDVs running on CNG (industry source), their emissions of PM being 90 per cent. lower than a Euro II HDV running on diesel.

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he has in place to reduce the emissions of ultrafine particles from the UK vehicle parc. [133706]

Mr. McNulty: The Government place a high priority on reducing emissions of air pollutants from road transport. Emissions of particles (PM_{10}) from road transport have reduced by some 50 per cent. over the last decade as a result of progressively tighter vehicle and fuel quality standards. Emissions of ultrafine particles from road transport are much harder to measure. The UK has been at the forefront of an international programme to develop appropriate ways of measuring emissions of these small particles. Once this has been completed, the Government will be in a position to take further steps, should the health evidence indicate that this is necessary.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) untaxed and (b) uninsured vehicles he estimates were on UK roads in each year since 1997. [133727]

Mr. McNulty: Estimates of unlicensed vehicles in use on the road are obtained through periodic roadside surveys. The results in Great Britain and in Northern Ireland for the years in which surveys were undertaken were:

Thousand

	Great Britain	Northern Ireland
1994	1,559	—
1996–97	—	63
1999	1,522	70
2002	1,757	77

Note:

The figures for Northern Ireland include vehicles in the private light goods, and the heavy goods vehicle categories. The figures for GB include all licence categories.

DfT does not have reliable information on the number of vehicles in use on the road without valid insurance.

Road Building

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidance he has issued to the Highways Agency and local authorities to encourage the use of recycled rubber in road building and surfacing. [132669]

Mr. McNulty: The Code of Practice for Maintenance Management, of which the Department is a co-author, strongly recommends local authorities to maximise the use of products made from recycled materials in order to develop and support local markets for these.

The Government are actively fostering the development of new applications for tyre crumb in both asphalt and concrete roads, through research by the Universities of Dundee, Liverpool, and Nottingham. Additionally, the Highways Agency is supporting a project monitoring the performance of recycled shredded tyre toppings in French drains.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Agriculture and Fisheries Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what the outcome was of the Agriculture and Fisheries Council on 13 October; what the Government's stance was on the issues discussed, including its voting record; and if she will make a statement; [133016]

(2) what the outcome was of the Agriculture and Fisheries Council on 13 October; what the Government's stance was on the issues discussed, including its voting record; and if she will make a statement. [133592]

Margaret Beckett: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary represented the United Kingdom at a meeting of the Agriculture and Fisheries Council in Luxembourg on 13 October. No Ministers from the Devolved Administrations or Northern Ireland were present.

The main items for substantive discussion were on Fisheries, the most important of which was agreement of a proposal for a regulation on the management of fishing effort in Western Waters. As you know this proposal had been on the table for some time but its adoption had been held up while the Presidency struggled to find a compromise acceptable to as many of the key member states as possible—the UK, Ireland, France, Spain and Portugal. In the event the compromise adopted was acceptable to ourselves, France and Portugal but was opposed by Spain and Ireland, with Belgium abstaining.

The agreed regulation makes provision for an effort-based regime with member states' effort allocations to be based on fishing activity in the reference period 1998–2002. Management zones are to be based on ICES sea areas. This means there is no separate management zone for the Irish Sea as we wished but the Council and Commission have made a joint statement to the effect that fishing effort in previously restricted areas will be closely monitored. In other respects the final outcome is one that offers the UK significant improvements over the text originally tabled last December. These include, in particular:

the exclusion of under 15 metre vessels from the scope of the regime in all areas except in a special biologically sensitive area off the south west coast of Ireland ("the hake box") where it will apply to all vessels over 10 metres;

the list of vessels able to fish in Western waters is not restricted to those with a previous history of doing so;

except for when entering and exiting the hake box, vessels will no longer have to hail in and out on entry and exit from Western waters zones, so substantially reducing industry's compliance costs;

there are arrangements for adjusting member states' effort allocations to let them take their quotas in full or increase fishing activity on non-quota stocks; reduction in the number of fisheries from 5 to 3—demersal, scallops and edible/spider crabs.

The compromise text on the table therefore represented a very good outcome for the United Kingdom with all our major areas of concern being addressed.

There was also a brief presentation by the Commission of proposals to manage fishing in the Mediterranean which the Council will return to at a later date.

On agriculture, there was a brief discussion of the Commission's outline ideas for reform of the cotton and olive oil regimes. Producer member states emphasised the importance of both crops to their farming sectors and the need to maintain a significant level of production-linked aid to ensure continued activity in the sectors. The United Kingdom joined other non-producers in arguing for changes in these regimes to follow closely the pattern of reforms agreed in June for others. In particular, a substantial level of decoupling should be the norm, with the option for more if member states wished to move in that direction.

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) if she will make a statement on the steps to be taken to cut carbon dioxide emissions by 60 per cent. by 2050; [131068]

(2) if she will make a statement on implementation of the energy policy of cutting emissions of carbon dioxide by 60 per cent. by 2050. [131069]

Mr. Morley: The Government has set a domestic goal to reduce carbon dioxide emissions by 20 per cent. below 1990 levels by 2010. The policy framework for delivering this goal is set out in the UK Climate Change programme.

In the Energy White Paper, we accepted the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution's (RCEP) recommendation that the UK should put itself on a path towards a reduction in carbon dioxide emissions of some 60 per cent. from current levels by about 2050. The Energy White Paper sets out long-term strategies and shorter-term policies to put us on this path. The Sustainable Energy Policy Network comprising units from Central Government, energy regulators, devolved administrations and key delivery organisations will ensure that these goals and policies are delivered. Part of this is a cross governmental network reporting to a Ministerial Committee co-chaired by the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs and the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. Further details of the implementation plans are set out on SEPN's website http://www.dti.gov.uk/energy/sepn/index.shtml.

To put ourselves on course to cut the UK's carbon dioxide emissions by 60 per cent. by 2050, we will need to achieve cuts of around 15–25 million tonnes of carbon (MtC) by 2020 in addition to the carbon savings from existing policies including the Climate Change Programme. The actual measures needed to reach this goal will be shaped by economic and technological developments. However, in reducing carbon dioxide emissions the government's priority is to strengthen renewables and energy efficiency.

Environmental Sustainability

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) if she will make a statement on her Department's policy on environmental sustainability; [131064]

(2) what measures are in place to protect natural capital sources classed as vital to environmental sustainability. [131065]

Mr. Morley: The Department's policies on sustainable development and protecting natural resources are set out in the departmental report and in Defra's sustainable development strategy 'Foundations for our Future' and other policy documents on the Defra website.

Fluoridation

Mr. Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what research she has undertaken into the impact of fluoridating water supplies on the aquatic environment; and if she will make a statement. [132772]

Mr. Morley: A review of the effect of fluoride on a range of aquatic life was carried out for the Environment Agency when deriving a non-statutory environmental quality standard (EQS) for fluoride in water, which was published in 2000. The review drew on research carried out by a range of recognized scientific laboratories and the majority of available data indicated that effects on aquatic life from fluoride occur at concentrations between 9.0—350mg/l.

Where fluoridation schemes are in place, fluoride is added to maintain a concentration of 1.0 mg/l in drinking water which is well below these levels. Any discharges will be further diluted upon entry to the aquatic environment through the process of collection and treatment of waste water.

Food Labelling

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on introducing labelling of country of origin for each constituent ingredient of pre-cooked food products. [132304]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I have been asked to reply.

Origin labelling rules are agreed at European Union level. The Government is not aware of any plans to introduce origin labelling rules for each constituent ingredient of food products. The Food Standards Agency is, however, actively pressing for changes to labelling requirements to improve information on origin of fresh and frozen meat and the meat ingredient in food products.

River Cherwell

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will place in the Library a copy of the full report entitled, River Cherwell Catchment Monitoring Study 1998–2000 Project Report. [133109]

Alun Michael: The River Cherwell Catchment Monitoring Study 1998–2000 Project Report concerns a study undertaken on behalf of Rhone-Poulenc Agriculture to quantify farmyard contamination of surface waters. As the report belongs to Rhone-Poulenc Agriculture (now Bayer CropScience) and has not been published it is not possible to place a copy in the House Library.

Rural Enterprise Scheme

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what the budget was for the Rural Enterprise Scheme, broken down by region in each year since the scheme was established; [132625]

(2) how much money has been paid in grants under the Rural Enterprise Scheme, broken down by region, in each year since the scheme was established. [132626]

Margaret Beckett: The following table shows: (i) the original programme budgets, (ii) revised budgets reflecting in-year reallocations in order to maximise the use of the programme funding available, and (iii) grant paid in respect of the Rural Enterprise Scheme for 2001–02 and 2002–03:

£ million

	2001–02			2002–03
Regions/Unit	Original budget	Revised budget	Spend	Original budget	Revised budget	Spend
North East	0.5	0.4	0.2	0.7	1.2	1.0
West Midlands	1.0	0.8	0.6	1.4	2.1	2.0
South West	1.5	1.2	0.2	2.0	2.5	1.9
North West	1.0	0.8	0.3	1.3	1.6	1.3
East Midlands	1.1	0.9	0.4	1.5	2.5	1.7
East of England	1.0	0.7	0.5	1.1	1.7	1.4
Yorks and Humber	1.0	0.7	0.3	1.2	1.8	1.9
South East	0.7	0.6	0.3	1.0	1.7	1.6
National	0.2	0.1	0	1.8	0.5	0.2
Total	8.0	6.2	2.8	12.0	15.6	13.0

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the running costs were of the Rural Enterprise Scheme, broken down by region, in each year since the scheme was established (a) in cash terms and (b) as a percentage of the scheme's budget. [132627]

Margaret Beckett: The Rural Enterprise Scheme (RES) is delivered by Defra's Rural Development Service (RDS), but running costs are not available broken down by both scheme and region. In 2001–02 many RDS operational staff made a substantial contribution to work related to the foot and mouth disease outbreak and were not employed on their normal duties for much of the year. In consequence, it is not possible to provide an accurate figure for RES running costs in 2001–02.

In 2002–03 RES accounted for 75.7 staff years of RDS effort at a total estimated cost of £2.6 million. RDS running costs are not funded from RES programme expenditure, however £2.6 million expressed as a percentage of the final RES budget for 2002–03 is 16.7 per cent. It is important to note that 2002–03 running cost expenditure relates not just to the in-year budget, but also to the assessment and approval of projects which will incur expenditure in subsequent years; forward funding commitments at the end of 2002–03 amounted to £15.4 million.

Solar Power

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what grants are available to (a) public landlords and (b) owner-occupiers to install solar power in housing; and how many properties in Leeds have received such assistance. [132734]

Mr. Timms: I have been asked to reply.

There are two Government schemes supporting the installation of solar panels in houses. The first is the £20 million First Phase of the Major Photovoltaics Demonstration Programme (PV MDP). 50 per cent. grants are available to individual householders for small PV systems, and 60 per cent. to public bodies, including social housing groups, for medium-large scale installations. The second is the £10 million Clear Skies initiative, which offers flat rate grants of around £500 to individuals wishing to install solar water heating panels, and grants of up to 50 per cent. to community groups.

So far, under the PV programme, one householder in Leeds has received a grant and two applications for medium—large scale installations have been approved. They are for Park Lane College and the Ridings Housing Association.

Under Clear Skies, no applications have been received from public landlords in Leeds for solar water heating on housing, although two grants have been awarded for solar on community buildings. For individual households, three have received assistance.

For more information on these schemes please see: www.solarpvgrants.co.uk and www.clear-skies.org

Soya Milk

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs on what basis soya milk was withdrawn as an undesirable food for babies and young children; and on what basis it was recommended for premature babies. [129759]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I have been asked to reply.

Soya milk drinks and soya based infant formulas have not been withdrawn and are still available. The Department's advice is that soya-based infant formula should only be given on the advice of a doctor or health visitor and can be prescribed for babies allergic to cow's milk. It is not recommended for premature babies.

Waste Management

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to introduce new charging arrangements to finance the Environment Agency's work in the current financial year and afterwards on (a) implementation of the Water Framework Directive, (b) development of the Revised Bathing Waters Directive, (c) regulation of the spreading of sewage sludge on agricultural land, (d) the reduction of agricultural waste and mines and quarries waste and (e) exemption from Waste Management Licensing. [129356]

Margaret Beckett: The charging arrangements are as follows:

(a) Implementation of the Water Framework Directive

The Environment Agency's costs of implementing the Water Framework Directive during the current financial year are funded by a combination of grant in aid and income from charges for consents for discharges to controlled waters and for water abstraction licences. Similar arrangements will apply during the implementation of the Directive.

(b) Revised Bathing Waters Directive

During the annual review of the Environment Agency's charges, an assessment will be made, both for the current and future financial years, as to whether extra charges for effluent discharges will be needed to fund development of the Revised Bathing Waters Directive.

(c) The Sludge (Use in Agriculture) Regulations 1989

These regulations are currently being revised. The revised draft regulations on the spreading of sewage sludge on agricultural land provide for the Environment Agency to recover its regulatory costs through charges and as part of these regulations a new charging scheme is being developed to take effect on implementation of the revised regulations which is expected in 2004.

(d) Reduction of Agricultural and Mines and Quarries Waste

The regulations applying to the Waste Framework Directive's controls to agricultural and non-mineral mines and quarries waste are currently being drafted and will be issued for public consultation. The Environment Agency's Waste Management Licensing Charging Scheme will apply to the recovery or disposal of these types of waste under a licence as it currently applies to other types of waste. We do not propose to apply charges to the recovery or disposal of agricultural waste under a registered licensing exemption. Regulations will be in place by mid 2004.

(e) Exemption from Waste Management Licensing

Draft Regulations to implement the review of the exemptions in Waste Management Licensing Regulations 1994 provide for the Environment Agency to extend charging to six existing exemptions and one new exemption for the burning of dunnage at the dockside. The existing exemptions affected are:

land treatment

use of waste for land reclamation use and storage of building waste composting storage and spreading of sewage sludge waste recovery at sewage treatment works.

It is intended that charges should be incorporated into the Agency's Waste Management Licensing Charging Scheme to take effect on the Regulations' implementation. The draft Regulations were issued for public consultation on 19 June with a view to being implemented early in 2004.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Analogue Transmission

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans she has to assist those receiving television through communal systems when the analogue system of transmission ends; and if she will make a statement. [132799]

Mr. Caborn: We recognise the importance of those living in multi-occupancy dwellings being able to access digital television services. The Digital TV Project Team is looking at how digital equipment will operate in such dwellings and how best to promote digital television among landlords responsible for communal systems. We will consider whether any specific measures are needed in this area before switchover begins. We have published an information leaflet aimed at encouraging landlords to take up digital television. A copy can be found on the website: www.digitaltelevision.gov.uk.

New Opportunities Fund

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much capital the New Opportunities Fund has directed to (a) Birkenhead, (b) Wirral and (c) Merseyside since its inception. [133589]

Mr. Caborn: According to information supplied by distributors for the Department's Lottery Awards Database, the New Opportunities Fund has awarded

£3,744,140 to the Birkenhead constituency, £16,536,709 to the Wirral Local Authority area and £62,371,292 to Merseyside.

Youth Development (Football)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport pursuant to her Answer on 28 April 2003, Official Report, column 188W, on Youth Development (Football), when the Government will begin to contribute the money that has been committed to the Football League's Youth Development Scheme. [133243]

Mr. Caborn: All of the clubs in the Football League's Youth Development Scheme have already received the first quarter payment for the new football season 2003–04. All the funding partners have agreed in principle to funding the scheme until 2005–06 and we are currently discussing the details with the funding partners.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Fertilisers

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the effectiveness of competition in the manufacture and supply of fertilisers. [132662]

Jacqui Smith: The Department of Trade and Industry has not looked at this issue.

British Trade Promotions

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate she has made of the cost of promoting British branding and identity overseas in the last year for which figures are available; and what element of this expenditure promotes (a) Welsh, (b) Scottish and (c) Irish branding and identity as a distinct component of that of the United Kingdom as a whole. [131946]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: British Trade International, through the activity of Invest.UK and Trade Partners UK, contributes circa £900,000 towards the promotion of the branding and identity of the United Kingdom as a whole.

The Devolved Administrations and the Regional Development Agencies have their own budgets for overseas promotion.

Construction Industry

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much Quality Mark work was taken up by the construction industry in each year since its introduction. [132846]

Nigel Griffiths: The total declared turnover for Quality Mark warranty purposes in 2002 was £17 million. In 2003 the declared turnover has been approximately £21.5million up to the present time. The value of work undertaken through affiliating scheme members is not yet available.

Electricity

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what level of installed electricity generation capacity above (a) average demand and (b) peak demand was available in 2002–03; and what level she expects will be (i) available and (ii) available but mothballed in (A) 2003–04, (B) 2004–05 and (C) 2005–06. [132434]

Mr. Timms: In the winter of 2002–03, installed generating capacity for England and Wales was 67.6 GW. Actual peak demand was 54.8 GW and adjusting this to average cold spell (ACS) weather conditions and adding back estimated voluntary demand reduction at peak, gives a figure of 55.1 GW. Peak demand under average winter weather is reckoned by National Grid Company (NGC) to be about 96 per cent. of peak demand under ACS conditions.

In the July 2003 Update to their Seven Year Statement, NGC published the following projections for ACS demand and installed capacity:

	GW
	ACS demand	Installed capacity
2003–04	55.9	65.1
2004–05	56.8	66.9 to 67.2
2005–06	57.7	67.7 to 68.9

The range of projections shown for installed capacity reflects the extent to which plant not yet under construction comes forward. The projections for installed capacity do not allow for any plant closures not yet announced, for return of currently mothballed plant, or for new generating capacity yet to enter transmission contracts with NGC.

PowerGen announced on 19 August 2003 its intention to return a 650 MW unit at Grain to service for the coming winter. It also announced on 15 October 2003 that it had started work that could bring a further 650 MW unit at Grain back for this winter. On 16 October 2003, International Power announced its intention to return a 250 MW unit at Deeside to service from 20 October 2003. NGC will take these announcements into account for the October 2003 Update to the Seven Year Statement, due to be released later this month.

Further information on the prospects for gas and electricity security for the coming winter, and on the outturn for last winter, can be found in the "Winter Operations Report", issued by National Grid Transco (NGT) on 14 October 2003, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. That report estimated that there is some 4.2 GW of mothballed generating capacity capable of returning to service within 24 months or less, of which 0.8GW could be returned in less than three months. However, the report does not take account of the announcements of 15 and 16 October 2003 referred to above.

All figures for installed capacity include the full capacity of the interconnectors with France and Scotland.

NGC consider ACS conditions as a level of demand that has a 50 per cent. probability of occurring within any winter. Since 1990, actual peak demand has never exceeded ACS corrected peak demand, although this may be due in part to voluntary demand reduction at peak periods.

The NGC Seven Year Statement, and updates to it, can be found at: www.nationalgrid.com/uk/library/documents/sys_03/dcfault.asp

Fireworks

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what discussions she has had with (a) representatives of the fireworks industry, (b) local authorities and (c) police representatives since the passing of the Fireworks Act 2003; [133509]

(2) what plans she has to make use of her powers under the Fireworks Act 2003. [133510]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The Department is committed to implementing and ensuring proper enforcement of the Fireworks Act 2003. We hope to implement those parts of the Act dealing with anti-social issues before Christmas. Discussions have taken place with the fireworks industry with regard to enshrining the voluntary air bombs ban in legislation under the Act.

Discussions have also taken place with local authorities and police representatives on the creation of a curfew for the use of fireworks between the hours of 11pm and 7am and creating an offence for possession of fireworks by those under 18 years of age respectively.

The Act's other principal provisions—setting a maximum noise limit for fireworks, licensing of suppliers, rules for public firework displays, importation of fireworks and training of display operators—require more detailed consultation with all the interested parties. We will start implementation of this part of the Act in the new year.

HSE Inspectors

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether bonus arrangements for Health and Safety Executive inspectors include a target to reach a certain number of prosecutions per year. [132903]

Mr. Browne: I have been asked to reply.

Health and Safety inspectors are not paid bonuses for achieving target numbers of prosecutions in any year.

Imports (Asia)

Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the value was of goods imported from (a) the People's Republic of China, (b) India and (c) Japan into the (i) United Kingdom and (ii) European Union in the last year for which figures are available. [132750]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: According to figures published by Eurostat, UK and European Union imports of goods from the People's Republic of China, India and Japan in 2002 were as follows.

UK and EU imports of goods from China, India and Japan, 2002

£ million (current prices)

	UK	EU
China	10,539	51,196
India	1,845	8,175
Japan	8,339	42,876

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many industrial tribunal cases have been brought in each year since 1997. [132863]

Mr. Sutcliffe: Statistics on the number of Employment Tribunal applications are collated on a financial year basis.

Employment Tribunal applications for Great Britain

Knowledge Economy

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps she has taken to implement recommendation 15 of the Cross-Cutting Review of the Knowledge Economy published in December 2000; and if she will make a statement. [131988]

Ms Hewitt: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to her by my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary on 15 October 2003, Official Report, column 282W.

Manufacturing

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what investment has been made in research and development in manufacturing in the UK since 1997. [133135]

Jacqui Smith: The Office for National Statistics Business Enterprise Research and Development survey provides the following data on research and development in manufacturing in the UK since 1997:

Expenditure on research and development performed in UK businesses in the manufacturing sector, 1997–2001

£ million

	Cash terms	Real terms (2001 prices)
1997	7,608	8,360
1998	8,142	8,707
1999	8,995	9,392
2000	9,231	9,429
2001	10,040	10,040

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on her plans for supporting manufacturing. [133136]

Jacqui Smith: The Government's Manufacturing Strategy published in May last year, identified seven key areas of activity for Government and industry that are crucial for manufacturing success. We are taking action in all of those areas to support UK manufacturers.

For example, the Manufacturing Advisory Service has been a real success as a major source of advice and support for small and medium sized manufacturers. Since it launched in April 2002, the Manufacturing Advisory Service has handled over 17,000 inquiries from manufacturing companies and has carried out over 3,000 diagnostic and advisory visits. Over 1,000 firms have benefited from in-depth consultancies to help them improve their productivity. The total value added benefit to firms helped by the Manufacturing Advisory Service is £18 million.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate her Department has made of the supply of manufacturing labourers throughout the United Kingdom. [132853]

Jacqui Smith: Official statistical sources, such as the Labour Force Survey and Employers Surveys, do not provide estimates of the supply of manufacturing labourers.

There were 3.7 million workforce jobs in the manufacturing industry in the UK in June 2003.

Mine Shafts (Householders' Insurance)

David Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the proposed insurance scheme and related matters for householders whose properties are affected by mine shafts. [133555]

Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 21 October 2003]: At the end of last month, the Coal Authority launched an initiative to provide alongside every residential mining report it produces, insurance cover which will mitigate against any loss of property value, up to a maximum of £20,000, attributable to any material change of the mining information revealed in any subsequent mining report on the same property. At the same time the Authority introduced an interpretive mining report service which will provide more detailed analysis and advice about mine entries including a risk assessment as to whether, in the expert opinion of the Coal Authority, the main building of a property is inside or outside the possible zone of ground movement from any reported mine entry.

The Coal Authority has developed these services under the auspices of the Department's Mineshafts Working Group, established last year to explore initiatives which might ameliorate the blighting effect which the proximity of historic coal mineshafts is perceived to have on certain properties, particularly in the West Midlands. The Coal Authority is also investigating the scope for development of non-invasive detection techniques capable of locating mining features in built-up environments. The Authority continues to work closely with property practitioners at a local level with a view to raising awareness of the very low statistical risk which historic mineshafts represent.

Mobile Phone Companies

Jeff Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether mobile telephone companies are categorised as statutory undertakers using the same criteria as apply to electricity and gas companies. [133181]

Mr. Timms: 'Statutory undertaker' is a concept found in a wide range of legislation across different sectors. In the electronic communications sector, a person or undertaking (such as a mobile telephone company) is not likely to satisfy any definition of 'statutory undertaker' unless they have had the electronic communications code applied to them by a direction by Ofcom pursuant to section 106 of the Communications Act 2003. The electronic communications code gives certain powers to operators vis-a-vis the installation of apparatus. The criteria which Ofcom must consider in deciding whether or not to apply the electronic communications code to a person or undertaking are set out in section 107(4) of the Communications Act 2003. The position in the gas and electricity sectors is different, as gas and electricity still have a licensing-based regime, whereas electronic communications does not.

National Investment Bank

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will establish a national investment bank to oversee industrial development and assist growth industries. [133138]

Jacqui Smith: I have no such plans. A range of facilities are offered by Government, the devolved Administrations and Regional Development Agencies to assist businesses reach their full growth potential.

Norwich Airport

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to assess the sale of Norwich airport for value for money. [131216]

Mr. McNulty [holding answer 14 October 2003]: I have been asked to reply.The Government do not plan to assess the sale of Norwich airport. It is the duty of the Directors to act in the best interest of the company, and thereby in the best interest of the shareholding authorities. Moreover, the sale would be subject to scrutiny by the District Auditor.

Post Office Card Accounts

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what activity her Department is undertaking to publicise the Post Office card account. [133387]

Mr. Timms: None. The promotion of Post Office products and services is a matter for the company. Post Office Ltd. is providing information to customers and guidance to sub-postmasters on the range of banking options available at post offices, including the Post Office card account.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the impact of customers opening Post Office card accounts on the viability of sub-post offices. [133388]

Mr. Timms: The number of customers who will eventually choose to open a Post Office card account is difficult to predict, at this stage. However, the Post Office card account is only one of a range of banking options available at post offices. All the major high street banks are providing access to a basic bank account through post offices. In addition, the Alliance and Leicester, Barclays and Lloyds/TSB are providing electronic access at post offices to all their current accounts—some 20 million accounts in total. The Post Office also provides cheque based banking services for customers of the Cooperative bank and the internet banks, Smile and Cahoot. The Post Office is in discussion with the banks to modernise these services and to extend commercial arrangements to cover other financial institutions. Universal banking services, together with the Post Office's plans for an expansion of commercial banking arrangements, should lead to an increase in the number of people using post offices to do banking transactions. Wider access to bank accounts at post offices opens up a very much larger market than benefit recipients alone, and this should benefit sub-postmasters both directly and through increased footfall.

Post Office Closures

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many proposed post office closures under the Urban Reinvention Programme have been reversed following public consultation. [133507]

Mr. Timms: Decisions on post office closure proposals under the urban reinvention programme following public consultation are an operational matter for Post Office Ltd. and I have asked the Chief Executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Unsolicited E-mail

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans she has to protect British businesses from unsolicited e-mails; and if she will include measures to protect businesses when the relevant EC Directive is implemented later this year. [132850]

Mr. Timms: The EU Directive on Privacy and Electronic Communications has been implemented in the UK by the Privacy-and Electronic Communications (EC Directive) Regulations 2003 (SI 2003 No 2426), which come into force on 11 December this year. The Regulations will introduce opt-in consent requirements for unsolicited e-mail marketing to individual subscribers, including sole traders and some partnerships. The Government decided not to extend the opt-in consent right to corporate subscribers (including limited companies) because of concerns about the impact on business to business marketing, but the Government's response to consultation on the new rules has made it clear that we are prepared to review this in the light of working experience of the new rules.

Subscribers of all kinds will benefit from a requirement in the Regulations not to send commercial e-mail which disguises or conceals the identity of the person on whose behalf it is sent, or does not provide a valid address to which a request that communications cease may be sent.

Tariffs

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant to her answer of 16 June 2003, Official Report, column 50W, on trade tariffs, what strategic controls are placed on British exports to non-EU countries. [133318]

Nigel Griffiths: The Strategic controls that are routinely placed on British exports to non-EU countries are set out in:

1. The Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, as amended.
2. Council Regulation (EC) No. 1334/2000, as amended.
3. The Dual Use Items (Export Control) Regulations 2000, as amended.

Waste Electrical and Electronic Goods Directive

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the likely effects of the introduction of the WEEE Directive on small retailers; what estimate she has made of the number that are likely to be put out of business because of the Directive; and how many retailers have contacted her Department to express their concern. [132865]

Mr. Timms: The Government are concerned to implement the WEEE Directive with a light regulatory touch, consistent with achieving its environmental goals. We would not expect small retailers to be put out of business because of this Directive.

The Government consulted widely on this Directive earlier this year following its entry into force and received responses from a range of organisations and individuals, including 54 retailers or their representative organisations.

The UK successfully negotiated flexibility in the Directive's provisions on retail takeback and the Government are now considering how to take advantage of this in its implementation. In this context, it is in discussions with retailers, including the British Retail Consortium.

The Government intends to publish its proposals for implementation of the Directive, including retail take-back, later this autumn for consultation. After this, it will issue draft implementing Regulations for consultation next spring.

DEFENCE

Afghanistan

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to increase UK military support for the Provincial Reconstruction Team in Mazar-e-Sharif and the five surrounding provinces in Afghanistan consequent to United Nations Resolution 1510. [133163]

Mr. Ingram: I anticipate the UK-led Provincial Reconstruction Team based in Mazar-e Sharif will increase slightly in size by the end of the year. This expansion is part of the planned evolution of the Provincial Reconstruction Team and is coincidental to UNSCR 1510.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many rounds of depleted uranium ammunitions have been fired in Afghanistan by UK troops; how many rounds of depleted uranium ammunition have been recovered during UK-led clean-up operations; and if he will make a statement. [133714]

Mr. Ingram: Depleted uranium (DU) ammunition has not been used by Allied Forces in recent operations in Afghanistan and hence there has been no need for clean-up. I do not have information on its use by other nations or forces in past conflicts in Afghanistan.

Military Deaths

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to the statement made by Surrey Police on the conclusion of their investigations and his Answer of 16 September 2003, Official Report, column 705W, on Deepcut and Catterick barracks, if he will order an independent public inquiry into the way that unnatural deaths at Catterick and Deepcut barracks have been investigated; and if he will make a statement. [133398]

Mr. Ingram: Responsibility for investigating unnatural deaths at army barracks lies with the appropriate civil police authorities. The Surrey Police have suggested, in the context of their investigation of deaths at Deepcut, that a broader inquiry into army deaths may be warranted. Her Majesty's Coroner has yet to complete his work in relation to the Deepcut deaths and the Surrey Police have yet to produce their final overarching report. The case for a public inquiry will need to be considered in the light of these events and other studies already completed.

Defence Fire Service

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people are employed in his Department's fire service. [133428]

Mr. Ingram: Within the Ministry of Defence there are currently around 2,370 military and civilian personnel employed in fire fighting and related duties in both the UK and overseas. Precise details of current day-to-day manning levels are not held centrally as personnel below the officer grades in the civilian defence fire service are locally recruited.

Gulf War Syndrome

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the letter from the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Ministry of Defence to Lord Morris of Manchester of 9 October, on vaccines used for UK troops deployed in the 1990–91 Gulf War; and what steps he is taking to prevent recurrence of the problems identified. [132897]

Mr. Caplin [holding answer 20 October 2003]: The text of the letter (reference: D/MIN(DP)/WB/13/1/2/3) was published in the House of Lords on 9 October 2003, Official Report, columns WA 67–79. A copy of the letter was placed in the Library of this House on 10 October.

Subsequent analysis of the 1990–91 Gulf Conflict revealed shortcomings at the time in medical record keeping and medical preparedness. In October 2001 the Ministry of Defence published the paper: "Medical Records in the Gulf" which explained how the Service medical documentation system was used during that conflict and the generic reasons why a medical record may no longer exist. The paper is available on the internet at: http://www.mod.ukyissues/gulfwar/info/m

Since that conflict, we have made significant improvements in medical record keeping through the introduction of a new operational medical record. This does ensure that health events while on deployment are more systematically recorded than in the past. Care is taken to ensure that accurate records are maintained by recording all vaccinations on individuals' medical records. Further improvements in medical record keeping will be achieved over the next few years with the progressive introduction of new information technology systems. A number of personnel were not up to date with their Service standard vaccinations. Our policy guidance has been modified to ensure that all troops are now immunised routinely. In June 2002, we announced that our Voluntary Immunisation Programme against anthrax would be expanded, in phases, to the whole of the Armed Forces, including reserves and those essential civilians who were likely to deploy on operations, beginning with those units that were held at the highest readiness. This takes account of lessons identified post the 1990–91 Gulf Conflict.

Hutton Inquiry

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) for what reason he authorised the creation of an environment intended to simulate that of hearings of the Hutton Inquiry at the Civil Service College at Sunningdale; on what date the authorisation was given; and what the cost of the exercise was; [133112]

(2) how many officials who appeared at the Hutton Inquiry were given coaching and training prior to their public appearance; and at what cost. [133113]

Mr. Hoon: I did not authorise the creation of any facility, at Sunningdale or elsewhere, to simulate the hearings of the Hutton Inquiry, and no Ministry of Defence officials were given coaching or training prior to their giving evidence to the Inquiry.

Manning Control Points

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reason no soldiers have been discharged following manning control reviews in the last 17 months; and if he will make a statement. [133353]

Mr. Caplin: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend the Member for Kirkcaldy (Dr. Moonie) gave on 5 June 2003, Official Report, columns 507–08W.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether all soldiers subject to discharge at their manning control point have been shown their AFB130A (Application for Discharge) and allowed to appeal against the Commanding Officer's decision before the soldier's discharge is approved by the army; and if he will make a statement. [133354]

Mr. Caplin: Soldiers who have been recommended for discharge under Queen's Regulations for the Army 1975 Para 9.413, 'Not Required for a Full Army Career', are shown their Army Form B130A and are given an opportunity to appeal against the recommendation.

Mr. Terry Jeans

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make an exception to the next-of-kin rule to facilitate the attendance of Mr.Terry Jeans at the trial in Croatia of the people alleged to have murdered his son. [133732]

Mr. Caplin: In July 2002 public funds were exceptionally made available to enable Mr. Jeans to be present at the trial of those accused of killing his son. It was made clear to Mr. Jeans at that time that this action constituted a one-off payment for a final trip to Croatia which in no way constituted a precedent. It was also made clear to Mr. Jeans that the Ministry of Defence could not envisage making any further public funds available to support him. This remains the position.

Official Travel

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many official overseas visits each Minister in the Ministry of Defence has made in each year since 1997. [132123]

Mr. Caplin: A list of all visits overseas undertaken by Cabinet Ministers costing £500 or more during each financial year since 1997 is available in the Libraries of the House. The lists provide details of the dates, destinations and purposes of all such visits and the costs of Ministers' travel and accommodation where appropriate.

I also refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 16 July 2003, Official Report, columns 327–28, to my hon. Friend the Member for Warwick and Leamington (Mr. Plaskitt).

Service Families (Voting Arrangements)

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements are in place to allow families of Scottish soldiers stationed outwith Scotland to vote in Scottish elections; and if he will make a statement. [133653]

Mr. Caplin: It is the individual responsibility of each member of the Armed Forces and their family to register to vote annually. Scottish service personnel outwith Scotland, and their spouses, can choose to register as service voters by means of a service declaration, but they can then only vote by proxy. Those, including eligible children, who choose to register on their local electoral register will be able to vote either by post or proxy if they are overseas or away from Scotland during any election, provided they have registered to vote in Scotland. Every effort is made by ships, units, and stations to give reasonable assistance to personnel overseas to register or vote in line with their individual electoral registration choice.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

School Exclusions

Huw Irranca-Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make it his policy to permit schools in England and Wales to receive (a) financial and (b) legal support from their local education authority in dealing with legal action taken against the school by outside parties in respect of fixed-term exclusions. [133359]

Mr. Miliband: There is existing provision with the regulations governing school funding for schools to receive contingency financial assistance from their local education authority if the costs of legal action, or amounts awarded by a court, cannot be met from a school's budget share without damaging pupils' education. Legal support may be purchased by a school either from the authority under a service level agreement or from an independent source.

A-Level Grades

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what percentage of pupils in England achieved A-levels in (a) mathematics and (b) English achieved grades A or above in (i) the best performing local education authority and (ii) the worst performing local education authority in 2002–03. [133671]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested is given in the following tables:

Mathematics

Percentage of A level passes in mathematics that were grade A in 2003	Local education authority	Percentage
Highest percentage	Reading	61.0
Lowest percentage	Portsmouth	8.0

English

Percentage of A level passes in English that were grade A in 2003	Local education authority	Percentage
Highest percentage	Reading	34.0
Lowest percentage	Hackney	3.2

Careers Services

Mr. Bo[illegible]ell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on arrangements for (a) delivering of services, (b) funding and (c) professional validation and development of careers services operated by higher education institutions, with particular reference to their relationship with other careers and guidance services. [133424]

Alan Johnson: Career guidance services in higher education are diverse and varied. There is no statutory obligation for Higher Education Institutions (HEIs) to provide careers advice and guidance. However, most HEIs have established their own dedicated careers service. Some use other means, for example through academic departments or other student services; others use a combination of both approaches.

Higher Education Careers Services are funded by HEIs themselves. Each institution makes its own decisions about the level of funding it allocates to careers and other services from its overall funding allocation, according to its individual circumstances.

The 2001 report 'Developing Modern Higher Education Careers Services', published following a review commissioned by my Department, included the recommendations that universities should place increased emphasis upon:

(a) defining core services that every Careers Service should provide

(b) considering their policies towards their Careers Services in relation to their Operational Plan

(c) reviewing their funding distribution to ensure they are able to deliver the core careers services

(d) ensuring their careers service staff are appropriately trained and qualified.

The Association of Graduate Careers Advisory Services (AGCAS), in conjunction with the University of Reading, offers a range of tailored professional qualifications. AGCAS now sets a condition that members must have achieved or be working towards the matrix standard, which is the national quality standard for any organisation delivering information, advice and guidance services on learning and work. In addition the Higher Education Quality Assurance Agency (QAA) has developed a voluntary code of practice for careers education, information and guidance in higher education. The majority of HE Careers Services are members of local Information Advice and Guidance partnerships which are funded by the Learning and Skills Council and which ensure coherence of all adult careers services in their local areas.

Criminal Records Bureau

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many employees in the education service require CRB checks; what the total cost of those checks is; and who pays for them. [133301]

Mr. Miliband: All new employees in the education service who have regular contact with children require a CRB check on appointment and some staff need to be checked when they move between posts. Fees for CRB checks are set at 24 for a Standard Disclosure and 29 for an Enhanced Disclosure. Disclosures for volunteers are free of charge. I am not able to provide information on numbers of employees or the total costs involved as my Department does not hold this information. The cost of Disclosures falls to individuals, but some employers may decide to pay the fee on their behalf.

Faith Schools

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many (a) primary, (b) secondary and (c) both primary and secondary schools that select some or all of their pupils on the basis of faith have (i) opened and (ii) closed in each year since 1997, broken down by local education authority. [133684]

Mr. Miliband: The following tables show the number of primary and secondary maintained schools, designated as having a religious character, which have opened and closed in each year since 1997, listed by LEA area. These schools are permitted to give priority to pupils of their faith or denomination, if over subscribed, but the Department does not maintain records of those that do so.

The tables exclude schools that opened or closed as a result of amalgamations, mergers or reorganisations, and also former community schools that closed and re-opened with a religious character.

GCSE Grades

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what percentage of pupils in England achieved GCSEs in (a) mathematics and (b) English and (c) both achieved grades A or above in (i) the best performing local education authority and (ii) the worst performing local education authority in 2002–03. [133672]

Mr. Miliband: The percentage of pupils achieving grade A* or A at GCSE in (a) Mathematics and (b) English and (c) both in the highest and lowest performing LEAs are shown in the following tables.

English

Percentage of pupils achieving grade A or above in GCSE English in 2003	Local education authority	Percentage
i) Highest percentage	Sutton	32.1
ii) Lowest percentage	Isles of Scilly	0.0

Maths

Percentage of pupils achieving grade A or above in GCSE Maths in 2003	Local education authority	Percentage
i) Highest percentage	Sutton	28.5
ii) Lowest percentage	Isles of Scilly	0.0

English and Maths

Percentage of pupils achieving grade A or above in GCSE English and Maths in 2003	Local education authority	Percentage
i) Highest percentage	Sutton	21.6
ii) Lowest percentage	Isles of Scilly	0.0

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many former grant-maintained schools have gained (a) specialist, (b) beacon and (c) city academy status in each year since 1997, broken down by local education authority. [133685]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested has been placed in the Libraries.

School Transport

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what representations he has received on proposals by Essex Local Education Authority to charge travel costs for pupils attending faith schools; and if he will make a statement. [132809]

Mr. Miliband: I have received representations from people objecting to Essex LEA's proposals to charge for home-to-school transport where children attend a denominational school in preference to the local school designated by their LEA. The policy issue is one for the LEA, but several correspondents have raised concerns about the way in which the consultation was carried out. My officials have requested information from the LEA to find out whether the consultation has been conducted in accordance with our regulations.

Science Education

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many pupils (a) up to the age of 16 years, (b) up to the age of 18 years and (c) beyond the age of 18 years were studying sciences in each year since 1 January 1996. [132331]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 21 October 2003]: The answers to parts (a), (b) and (c) are as follows:

Sixth Forms

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what percentage of children in (a) the Jarrow constituency, (b) South Tyneside, (c) the North East and (d) the UK remained in education after the completion of their GCSEs in each year since 1997. [133226]

Mr. Miliband: Data on the percentage of students staying on in full-time education and education and training is not calculated for areas smaller than LEAs as reliable estimates cannot be made.

The percentage of 16-year-olds participating in full-time education, and in education and training, in South Tyneside local education authority, the North East and the UK for end 1997 to end 2000, the latest available year, are shown in the table.

Note:

Participation rates by LEA for 16 and 17 year olds are published in an annual statistical bulletin, 'Participation in Education and Training by Young People Aged 16 and 17 in Each Local Area and Region, England'.

Teachers/Assistants

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many (a) teachers and (b) teaching assistants were employed in (i) the West Midlands and (ii) Coventry in each of the last three years. [133583]

Mr. Miliband: The numbers of teachers and teaching assistants in the West Midlands Government office region (GOR) and Coventry local education authority (LEA) in the last three years are given in the following tables.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Departmental Contracts

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will list contracts awarded by his Department in each of the last three years in excess of £100,000, giving the names of the successful bidder and the purpose of the contract. [133002]

Hilary Benn: The information requested has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Development Agencies

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what response the Government has made to the Brazilian President's suggestion of a global arms trade levy for funding development agencies. [132743]

Hilary Benn: The Government welcomes in principle any idea which seeks to reduce global hunger, and believes that all such proposals should be properly assessed. We are committed to finding the most effective way of mobilising the additional development resources which are needed if the Millennium Development Goals are to be met. This is why the UK has proposed an International Finance Facility.

The Government endorses the work which the IMF and World Bank are currently carrying out on development financing mechanisms. This work will include all proposals for international taxes designed to generate additional development resources. The IMF and Bank have been asked to report to the Development Committee at the 2004 Spring Meetings, and to the IMFC at the 2004 Annual Meetings.

International Housing Rights

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development pursuant to his Answer of 25 September, if he will list representations (a) he, (b) members of his Department and (c) other representatives of the Government have received since 1997 on international housing rights law and breaches thereof; what (i) countries and (ii) regions these representations referred to; and if he will make a statement. [133212]

Hilary Benn: Data on representations made to Government, since 1997, on international housing rights law and breaches thereof, is not held centrally, and it would incur a disproportionate cost to obtain the information the right hon. Member is seeking.

I can however confirm that DFID has no record of representations made to members of my department or to me, since 1997, concerning international housing rights law, or breaches thereof, other than the hon. Member's question, reference 133212, to which I provided a written answer on 25 September.

Iraq

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development pursuant to his answer of 15 July 2003, Official Report, column 176W, on Iraq, which medical drugs are in short supply in Iraq; and in what quantities. [132417]

Hilary Benn: Recent assessments by the World Health Organisation (WHO) and the Iraqi Ministry of Health indicate that there are no major shortages of essential medical supplies in Iraq. There are however still reported shortages of some very specialised supplies such as antisera (eg anti snake venom) and some anti-cancer medicines. The supply of anti-tuberculosis medicines has improved after a period of shortage immediately after the war. Some health facilities have reported intermittent shortages of local anaesthetic, probably caused by periods of high demand.

New medicine supply systems in Iraq are not yet fully operational and clear data remains difficult to obtain. WHO is working closely with the Ministry of Health, Kimadia (the Iraqi medical supply distribution agency) and the CPA to address immediate shortages and to establish formulae for likely consumption rates of priority medicines.

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development whether families who have lost their primary earners as a result of coalition forces' military action against Iraq have been identified as part of the process for prioritising targeted aid to Iraqi civilians. [133315]

Hilary Benn: DFID's policy is to provide assistance which responds to the needs of people, especially the poorest, irrespective of the causes of those needs. The main current form of support for vulnerable Iraqis is the Public Distribution System for food rations. DFID is providing assistance to the Ministry of Trade to ensure the continued smooth-running of the system. We are also assisting with plans to reform the system in the medium-term, with a view to ensuring that the needs of the most vulnerable continue to be met.

Kosovo

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent assessment has been made of the human rights situation in Kosovo; what plans he has with European colleagues to address abuses in the region; and if he will make a statement. [132941]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The Organisation for Security and Cooperation in Europe (OSCE), which forms part of the United Nations Interim Administrative Mission in Kosovo, is the lead agency responsible for the monitoring and protection of human rights in Kosovo. OSCE reports regularly on human rights concerns with regard to, for example, property rights, ethnic minorities and the judicial system.

DFID engages with these assessments to ensure that our activities consider important human rights issues. In particular, we share the OSCE's view that the development of an effective justice system that operates in accordance with international standards is an essential step in improving the human rights situation in Kosovo. We are funding two major programmes, one on justice-sector policymaking and another on community policing, to help improve the safety, security and access to justice of the people of Kosovo, through the inter-ministerial Global Conflict Prevention Pool.

In addition, our contributions through the European Commission are also being used to strengthen justice systems in Kosovo. The European Agency for Reconstruction is supporting the improvement of court administration, and is also funding a highly successful civil legal aid programme that has so far assisted some 11,000 vulnerable people.

Microcredit Schemes

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions his Department has had with (a) UN officials and (b) regional development banks regarding the use of microcredit schemes to tackle world poverty. [133139]

Hilary Benn: DFID supports the contribution that microcredit can make to achievement of the Millennium Development Goals, and is working with a range of multilateral and bilateral partners to improve the effectiveness of microfinance. Along with the UN, the World bank and the Regional Development Banks, DFID is a member of the Consultative Group to Assist the Poor (CGAP) which works as a multilateral donor organisation specialising in microfinance, and seeks to harmonise donor approaches to the industry. We encourage all those working in this area to provide assistance within the context of country-owned development strategies. I very much welcome the work of the All Party Parliamentary Group on Mircofinance which I addressed on 21 October.

Poverty Reduction

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what measures his Department is taking in conjunction with other countries to direct money for the reduction of poverty towards the poorest people. [133141]

Hilary Benn: By 2005–06, we aim to provide 90 per cent. of our bilateral assistance to low-income countries and will increase our annual bilateral assistance for Africa to £1 billion. Where possible we work through partner governments in the poorest countries in support of poverty reduction strategies that aim to strengthen their efforts to reduce poverty. We coordinate our programmes with other donor countries and are working closely with multilateral donors such as the World Bank, UN, EC and others to support and influence their assistance to have a strong poverty focus.

Reproductive Health

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development pursuant to his answer of 14 October 2003, reference 131802, what the delivery strategy for the Contraceptives Supply and Logistics programme in Bolivia was; what (a) local, (b) national, (c) regional and (d) international organisations are involved in this programme; what discussions (i) he, (ii) representatives of his Department and (iii) members of the UK representation in Bolivia have had with representatives of (A) the Government of Bolivia, (B) local communities and (C) the Church with regard to this programme; and if he will make a statement. [133192]

Hilary Benn: The Contraceptives Supply and Logistics programme supports the Government of Bolivia's National Sexual and Reproductive Health programme by assisting them in the purchase and distribution of contraceptives and by improving the quality of, and demand for, contraceptive services. The programme is managed by UNFPA and the Government of Bolivia with components implemented by CEASS (Central de Abastecimiento de Suministros) and the Population Council.

Regular planning and monitoring meetings are held with the Government of Bolivia and local stakeholders are consulted and involved in programme implementation as is appropriate to each locality. This includes local health defence committees, evangelical churches and the Catholic Church, municipal governments and local non-governmental organisations.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development pursuant to his answer of 14 October 2003, Official Report, columns 70–71W on reproductive health, what the (a) structure, (b) aims and (c) methods of the HIV/AIDS Umbrella Programme in Uganda are; when his Department last assessed the progress of this project; what the main conclusions of this assessment were; what assessment his Department has made of the impact of the Lord's Resistance Army's activities on (i) the reproductive health of the population in Uganda and (ii) the functioning of the HIV/AIDS Umbrella Programme; and if he will make a statement. [133194]

Hilary Benn: The HIV Umbrella Programme in Uganda has an allocation of £6.2 million for 2002–05. Its purpose is to improve the coordination and monitoring of the Uganda's Strategic HIV/AIDS Framework in support of its Poverty Eradication Action Plan (PEAP). It also aims to improve the Government of Uganda's capacity to take effective action against HIV/AIDS, and supports service delivery and research on HIV/AIDS by civil society organisations.

The programme was last assessed in September 2003. The review concluded that overall the programme's approach was both strategic and effective. However, the review noted that progress in building the Uganda AIDS Commission's (UAC) capacity to coordinate and monitor the National Strategic Response was slower than anticipated. In response to this finding, DFID will be funding an HIV Adviser, to be located in UAC from November 2003, to assist its staff in technical and organisational management issues, and help facilitate the HIV Partnership in Uganda.

Insecurity in Northern Uganda has made access to health services difficult for many and there is some evidence that the Lord's Resistance Army (LRA) has targeted health centres (for drugs) and health workers in their attacks. Anecdotal evidence from NGOs suggests that life in crowded camps encourages earlier sexual activity, leading to a higher teenage pregnancy rate and increased spread of HIV. However, no data is available to date on this point, although a nationwide prevalence survey is due to be carried out at the end of the year.

LRA activities are not directly impacting on the functioning of the HIV Umbrella Programme. However, the continuing insecurity in the North is hampering the ability of some of the civil society organisations supported under the programme to scale up their activities.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development pursuant to his Answer of 14 October 2003, Official Report, columns 70–71W on reproductive health, what the (a) structure, (b) aims and (c) methods of the Social Marketing of Contraceptives project in Ethiopia are; when his Department last assessed the progress of this project; what the main conclusions of this assessment were; what the annual cost of the programme has been since its inception; and if he will make a statement. [133195]

Hilary Benn: The project provides support through DKT International, which is a US based non-governmental organisation registered in Ethiopia, working on nationally led family planning and HIV prevention programmes. They make condoms and contraceptives available to poor people, and high risk groups, at low cost through commercial outlets.

We regularly review their performance, through quarterly project progress reports against agreed targets and visits by DFID advisers. A formal review of their work will be conducted in 2004. We are satisfied with the progress that the project has made so far, and should be able to make a more in depth assessment when the formal review takes place in 2004.

Our support for the project is £2 million over two years.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development pursuant to his Answer of 14 October 2003, Official Report, columns 70–71W on reproductive health, what the (a) structure, (b) aims and (c) methods of the Reproductive Health, Freetown and Newly Accessible Areas in Sierra Leone are; when his Department last assessed the progress of this project; what the main conclusions of this assessment were; what areas of the country are now considered to be accessible; what issues (i) he and (ii) members of his Department have raised with representatives of the Government of Sierra Leone regarding the programme; and if he will make a statement. [133196]

Hilary Benn: All areas of Sierra Leone are now accessible. The main aims of the project are to provide access to affordable, high quality and innovative sexual and reproductive health (SRH) information and services; to increase awareness of basic health and SRH issues among beneficiary communities; and to increase the capacity of key stakeholders in providing SRH services and developing national health strategy and policy guidelines. The project aims to achieve these objectives through the existing Marie Stopes Sierra Leone centre network (four Reproductive Health Centres, two obstetric hospitals, and two laboratories) and outreach programmes.

We receive quarterly progress reports on the project from Marie Stopes International. Our advisers last visited the project in March 2003. The main conclusion of their assessment was that the project provides high quality services and is reasonably well utilised. More can be done to improve the use of contraceptives, but awareness raising campaigns are addressing this. We have raised with Marie Stopes International the sustainability of the services provided by the project.

DFID health advisers have regularly discussed issues concerning primary health care with the Government of Sierra Leone Ministry of Health and Sanitation. These discussions have not focussed specifically or exclusively on SRH.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development pursuant to his answer of 14 October 2003, Official Report, column 75W on reproductive health, if he will list the activities at country level funded until the end of 2003 what the (a) structure, (b) aims, (c) methods and (d) annual funding need for each of the activities were; how much the UK has (i) pledged and (ii) delivered to each of the activities since January 2001(A) in monetary terms, (B) as a percentage of the funding total and (C) as a percentage of the yearly balance from the one-off UK contribution; and if he will make a statement. [133197]

Hilary Benn: Further to my previous answer of 14 October 2003, Official Report, column 75W, the whole of the UK's £25 million contribution is used to meet commodity needs in developing countries and for condoms in countries with a high prevalence of HIV. This is a multi-donor programme, worth $96 million. Of this, 45 per cent. has been distributed to Least Developed Countries and 66 per cent. to those in most need of assistance to meet the goals from the landmark International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD). Part of the UK's contribution is being used to support capacity strengthening activities to assist countries to forecast and plan their commodity requirements.

The detailed information requested in the question could only be provided at disproportionate cost. This £25 million one-off contribution is in addition to the UK's core funding to UNFPA (£18 million in 2003). This is disbursed in line with the overall framework for the UK's partnership with UNFPA, set out in the Institutional Strategy Paper (ISP) published in June 2001.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development pursuant to his Answer of 14 October 2003, Official Report, columns 75–76W on reproductive health, what the (a) structure, (b) aims and (c) methods of the Bolivia Post-Abortion Care Project are; what discussions (i) he, (ii) representatives of his Department and (iii) members of the UK representation in Bolivia have had with representatives of (A) the Government of Bolivia, (B) local communities and (C) the Church with regard to this programme; and if he will make a statement. [133199]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: The most recent official statistics from Bolivia (1992) put the maternal mortality rate at 390 for every 100,000 live births. This is one of the highest figures in Latin America and is disproportionately high for a country of the economic status of Bolivia. A key cause of mortality is unwanted pregnancy and subsequently complications resulting from illegal abortion. The aim of the Post Abortion Care (PAC) Services programme is to help Bolivia progress towards the Millenium Development Goal of a 75% reduction in maternal mortality by 2015. The approach of the programme is to increase access by poor women experiencing post-abortion complications to high quality, cost-effective Post Abortion Care (PAC) Services under the Basic Health Package. The programme supports the provision of outpatient PAC with manual vacuum aspiration (MVA) services at five tertiary-level hospitals, strengthened training capacity for PAC with MVA at five teaching hospitals, the institutionalisation of PAC training for medical residents, the introduction by Government of Bolivia of the PAC-with-MVA model in secondary-level hospitals in rural areas, and the strengthening of the supply of PAC-with-MVA medical equipment and drugs, for present and future services.

The programme is managed in partnership with the Government of Bolivia and supports its Sexual and Reproductive Health Programme. Local communities are closely involved in discussions on the introduction of PAC with MVA in secondary level hospitals, and the church is consulted in the context of discussion on national reproductive health strategies.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development pursuant to his answer of 25 September 2003, Official Report, columns 69–70W on Malawi, if he will list each of the reproductive health programmes in Malawi supported by his Department; what review his Department has undertaken of reproductive health programmes supported by his Department in Malawi in 2002–03; and if he will make a statement. [133211]

Hilary Benn: DFID supports the following programmes in Malawi that are concerned in whole or part with reproductive health:

The DFID Sexual and Reproductive Health Programme, which supports the National Sexual and Reproductive Health Programme and the National HIV/AIDS Strategic Framework including the National AIDS Commission;

The Safe Motherhood Project covering the Southern region;

The Integrated Sexual & Reproductive Health Programme which is implemented by Banja la Mtsogolo, a local non-governmental organisation, with a focus on the reproductive health needs of youth, including HIV/AIDS;

The National Tuberculosis Programme, which has activities on the TB-HIV link.

The Malawi Ministry of Health and Population conducted a joint review of the DFID and Integrated Sexual and Reproductive Health Programmes and the Safe Motherhood Project in November 2002 with DFID and other development partners. The review reported some progress in all activities, but also noted that there were factors beyond the control of the programmes that inhibited progress. These included critical shortage of health personnel, lack of other resources and the rising impact of HIV/AIDS. The international financial institutions and donors including DFID are working with the Malawi Government to address the underlying issues, such as wage policy and macro economic management, that contribute to the problems affecting the health sector.

The National AIDS Commission undertook a joint stakeholder review in March 2003. The review concluded that progress was encouraging. It recommended that the Commission proceed with organisational re-structuring and that donors provide financing through a pooled funding arrangement, instead of through separate individual agreements.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the structure, aims and methods of the (a) DFID/Zambia HIV/AIDS Programme approved in June and (b) the Sector Wide Approach Project approved in 2000 are; and if he will make a statement. [133337]

Hilary Benn: The information is as follows:

(a) DFID/Zambia HIV/AIDS Programme

The DFID HIV/AIDS Multisectoral Programme in Zambia is supporting the national multi-sectoral response to HIV/AIDS, spearheaded by the National AIDS Council. The overall aim of the programme is to reduce HIV transmission and to reduce the socio-economic impact of the disease, in accordance with the Zambia National HIV/AIDS Strategic Framework.

The DFID programme, approved in June 2003, is worth £20 million over six years. The programme has four components: (i) strengthening the capacity of the National AIDS Council; (ii) supporting public sector services such as supplying essential commodities; (iii) supporting the civil society response in behaviour change, impact mitigation and promotion of human rights; and (iv) expanding the private sector response.

(b) Sector Wide Approach to Health

DFID is supporting the health sector in Zambia through the Sector Wide Approach to Health programme. The main implementing partner is the Central Board of Health. The programme aims to improve the health status of all Zambians through increased access to better quality health services.

The DFID programme, approved in July 2000, is worth £20 million over six years. The programme has contributed to a common funding basket, together with other development partners, to enable the sustainable delivery of cost effective basic health services. Other inputs include the provision of drugs and medical supplies, technical assistance for capacity building, and the provision of impregnated bed nets to prevent malaria.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the structure, aims and methods of the DFID Reproductive Health Support Project in Zambia are, broken down by projected per annum expenditure for the three year allocated budget approved in 2001; and if he will make a statement. [133338]

Hilary Benn: Reproductive health encompasses the services for family planning, contraception and childbearing that make an important contribution to increasing women's choice and opportunity, and to preventing unplanned or unwanted pregnancy. DFID is committed to promoting reproductive health and fighting HIV/AIDS.

Since 2001, DFID direct support to reproductive health in Zambia has been through the Reproductive Health Support Project worth £2.9 million. Financial year spending has been:

2001–02	78,839
2002–03	1,221,582
2003–04	[1]1,580,000

[1] Estimate for the full year

The aim of the project is to increase the use of modern methods of family planning and the use of condoms for the prevention of sexually transmitted infections, including HIV. The project is managed by the Central Board of Health, which is the statutory body set up by the Zambian Government to implement health policies. Through this programme, and its forerunner, contraceptive distribution and use have increased.

Russia

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what projects his Department is supporting to (a) measure poverty in Russia and (b) promote public access to the data; and if he will make a statement. [133278]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: DFID is supporting two projects to measure poverty in Russia and promote public access to data:

(a) "Poverty statistics and monitoring" project in partnership with the World Bank, the Russian Ministry of Labour and Social Development and State Statistics Committee. The project purpose is to establish an improved information base and analysis for policy makers. The overall budget is £1.5 million over the period from April 2002 to December 2005.

(b) "Review of poverty issues in Russia" project implemented by London School of Economics. The overall budget is £90,000 for four years (February 2002 to February 2005). The project purpose is to inform the Russia programme on poverty measurements with particular respect to two oblasts, Leningrad and Nizhniy Novgorod, where DFID is supporting partnership programmes.

Both projects pursue the following goals:

To develop improved poverty measurement methodology for Russia, based on international experience;

To identify a system of indicators for on-line poverty monitoring and poverty level forecast and establish a poverty monitoring system;

To provide open access for external users to the State Statistics Committee's Household Budgeting Survey data;

To prepare poverty reduction recommendations in the form of an official report containing a detailed analysis of poverty level, profile, sources and socioeconomic policy efficiency.

Understanding the extent and depth of poverty in Russia and monitoring its trend is a key part of DFID's Russia Programme and the Government of Russia's long-term social-economic modernization plan (the Gref plan). Current estimates of the number of poor people in Russia vary widely from 20 per cent. to 40 per cent. of population, depending on the source of data, the methodology used and the definition of poverty. Accurate data and proper poverty analysis will help the Government of Russia to target resources to poor people more efficiently.

Southern African Development Community

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development pursuant to his answer of 14 October 2003, reference 131644, if he will list the programmes run by the Southern African Development Community in (a) Botswana, (b) Namibia, (c) Lesotho and (d) Swaziland, with specific reference to national projects undertaken under the auspices of the Southern African Development Community's HIV/AIDS Programme and including an outline of each programme's methods; and if he will make a statement. [132908]

Hilary Benn: The SADC Regional HIV/AIDS programme aims to promote improved effectiveness and co-ordination of HIV/AIDS programmes in Botswana, Lesotho, Namibia and Swaziland. It operates five programmes in each of the four countries:

- Improved management of sexually transmitted infections, focused particularly on cross border sites;
- Support to strengthen and co-ordinate the work of National AIDS Commissions;
- Condom social marketing;
- Support to people living with HIV and AIDS;
- Support for behaviour change communication campaigns.

More detail on the individual national components and their methods is available from the SADC HIV/AIDS Programme at Private Bag X828, Pretoria 0001, South Africa. SADC's website is at www.sadc.int

Uganda

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development pursuant to his answer of 4 July 2003, Official Report, column 512W, (1) which humanitarian requests they have decided to respond to in Teso, Uganda; [133545]

(2) what recent assessment he has made of the humanitarian situation in Teso, Uganda. [133546]

Hilary Benn: It has been estimated by the World Food Programme that 305,899 people are currently displaced in the Teso region.

A public health expert funded by DFID Uganda recently visited Teso to assess the humanitarian situation. She reported that the most pressing immediate needs are food for the displaced, and maintenance of adequate water and sanitation services in areas of high population density.

DFID has therefore made available a further £1.87 million to the World Food Programme for the purchase and distribution of food, and is currently discussing further humanitarian support requirements with UNICEF and the Red Cross.

UN Greater Darfur Initiative

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the structure, aims and methods of the UN Greater Darfur Initiative are; what the projected total funding needs for the UNGDI are; how much of this has already been pledged, and by whom; how much of the pledged UK funding has already been contributed; how far the setting up of the UNGDI has progressed since its launch; and if he will make a statement. [133339]

Hilary Benn: On 3 September, the Government of Sudan and the Sudan Liberation Army agreed a ceasefire for Darfur in western Sudan. The UN estimates that some 500,000 people have been displaced in Darfur; 300,000 of which as a result of the recent conflict. It is estimated that there are about 70,000 refugees in Chad. High rates of malnutrition have been reported in Darfur. The UN responded with an Initiative to mobilise funds for the region.

The objectives of the UN Greater Darfur Special Initiative (GDSI) are: to help the most seriously affected populations; defuse local tensions; and begin to address the underlying causes of the conflicts in the Greater Darfur region of Sudan. The Initiative includes accelerated humanitarian relief and longer-term assistance. The GDSI has not only raised the profile of the situation in Darfur, but also improved access to vulnerable groups in the region.

The total funding requirement for the UN GDSI is $22.8 million (approximately £15 million). The UK responded to the Initiative with a pledge of £1 million. We are currently in the process of committing this pledge against specific proposals recently circulated by the various UN agencies, the Red Cross and non-governmental organisations. We stand ready to respond further, as the situation in Darfur determines. We have already committed £0.5 million to Save the Children UK to provide humanitarian assistance to displaced people and other vulnerable groups in North Darfur. Norway has pledged $0.75 million (approximately £0.5 million) to the GDSI. Others donors, including US Agency for International Development and the Humanitarian Aid Office of the European Commission (ECHO), are also contributing to the provision of humanitarian assistance in the region.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Asbestos

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many deaths in Northern Ireland resulting from asbestos-related illnesses there were in each of the last 10 years, broken down by specific illnesses diagnosed. [133005]

Mr. Pearson: The following table gives the number of deaths resulting from asbestos-related illness, registered in Northern Ireland from 1992 to 2002. Separate figures are given for the two main primary causes of death, mesothelioma and 'asbestosis'.

Table: Number of registered deaths by year in Northern Ireland resulting from asbestos related illnesses (mesothelioma and 'asbestosis')

	Mesothelioma	'Asbestosis'	Total
1992	47	4	51
1993	43	4	47
1994	29	4	33
1995	34	5	39
1996	32	4	36
1997	42	0	42

Table: Number of registered deaths by year in Northern Ireland resulting from asbestos related illnesses (mesothelioma and 'asbestosis')

	Mesothelioma	'Asbestosis'	Total
1998	40	6	46
1999	46	4	50
2000	37	6	43
2001	54	9	63
2002	42	12	54

Cardiac Care

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people are waiting (a) to see a cardiologist and (b) for cardiac surgery in Northern Ireland. [133871]

Angela Smith: The number of people waiting for a first out-patient appointment and for in-patient admission by specialty is returned to the Department on a quarterly basis by Trusts. The returns provide information about the number of people waiting for a first out-patient appointment and in-patient admission on the last day of each quarter. Information in this answer is provided for Cardiology and Cardiac Surgery specialties. The information in this answer relates to the position at 30 June 2003 (the most recent information available):

(a) At 30 June 2003 there were 4,181 patients awaiting a first out-patient appointment in the cardiology specialty and 139 patients awaiting a first out-patient appointment at a Cardiac Surgery clinic.

(b) At 30 June 2003, 430 patients were awaiting admission to the Cardiac Surgery specialty in Northern Ireland, while 1,363 patients were awaiting admission to the Cardiology specialty.

Decommissioning Commission

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the total costs were of the International Independent Commission on Decommissioning for the last full year of its operation; and what proportion was borne by (a) Her Majesty's Government and (b) the Irish Government. [131676]

Jane Kennedy: The Commission's running costs are shared equally between the British and Irish Governments. The British Government's share of the costs, for the financial year 2002–03, is £309,600.

Equality Commission

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what discussions (a) Ministers and (b) officials from the Department of Finance and Personnel have had with the Equality Commission on the exclusion of Irish nationals from reserved posts. [131916]

Mr. Pearson: On 27 August 2003 officials from the Department of Finance and Personnel met Equality Commission staff for a general discussion on progress on the Senior Civil Service Review and Associated Action Plan. The discussion covered a range of issues, including the application of nationality rules to reserved posts. There have been no formal discussions between Ministers and the Equality Commission on this matter.

EU Directives

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the Northern Ireland departments in breach of EU Directives in each of the last three years, broken down by total amount of fines incurred. [128290]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Proceedings for non-compliance with EU directives can only be taken at the level of the member state. To date there have been no fines levied against the UK for any breach of EU directives.

Farming

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures have been introduced to assist (a) the early retirement of farmers and (b) new entrants into farming in Northern Ireland. [R] [133343]

Mr. Pearson: Early in 2002 independent research was commissioned from Queen's University Belfast (QUB) and University College Dublin (UCD) to investigate the viability of both a New Entrants and an Early Retirement Scheme in Northern Ireland. This research concluded that there could be economic benefits from a New Entrants Scheme in the form of an interest rate subsidy but that the latter would not offer good value for money. I have not seen any other analyses which would cause me to dispute the research project findings.

A draft New Entrant Scheme was put out to consultation on 19 May 2003. The consultation produced a positive response and I hope that an announcement about a scheme will be made shortly.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many participants have enrolled in (a) the Organic Farming Scheme and (b) the Countryside Management Scheme, in each of the last three years. [R] [133345]

Mr. Pearson: There are currently 59 individuals participating in the Organic Farming Scheme. There were 40, 13 and four new participants during 2000–01, 2001–02 and 2002–03, respectively. To date in 2003–04 there have been two new entrants to this scheme.

There are currently 2,129 participants in the Countryside Management Scheme, 655 entered during 2001–02, 1,023 during 2002–03 and 451 have entered to date in 2003–04. There were no entrants during 2000–01.

Prescription Fraud

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the estimated cost of prescription fraud in Northern Ireland was in each of the last three years. [133344]

Angela Smith: The best estimate for the cost of prescription fraud in 2000–01 was £9.5 million, in 2001–02 it was £8.6 million and in 2002–03 it was £8.3 million.

It should be noted that the figures include the situations where a patient has deliberately set out to defraud the system and cases where a patient has misclaimed exemption from prescription charges in error.

Public Administration Review

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish proposals on the future of the Review of Public Administration; and what consultation he will undertake. [131859]

Mr. Pearson: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the statement by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, 24 June 2003, on the progress and priorities for Northern Ireland.

My right hon. Friend indicated that the Review team would prepare a paper for publication in the autumn, which will form the basis for discussions with local political parties and key stakeholders.

A consultation paper is now at an advanced stage of preparation and it is my intention that this will be published in the near future.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Bolivia

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of the current social unrest in Bolivia; how many UK citizens are known to remain in La Paz and El Alto; when (a) he and (b) members of his Department last had discussions with (i) Gonzalo Sánchez de Lozada, (ii) members of his Cabinet, (iii) representatives of his Government in Bolivia and (iv) representatives of his Government in the UK; what the central issues of the discussions were; and if he will make a statement. [133321]

Mr. Rammell: Up to 20 October we believe that those British visitors who wanted to leave La Paz and El Alto have now done so. We further estimate that there are 90 British citizens remaining in those cities. Our ambassador in Bolivia met President Gonzalo Sánchez de Lozada on 4 September and the Bolivian Foreign Minister on 16 October when he discussed the situation.

The most recent ministerial contact in the UK was when my hon. Friend the then Minister of State at the Department of Trade and Industry (Mr. Wilson) met the Bolivian Energy Minister in January 2003. I most recently met the Bolivian ambassador on 6 October 2003.

Following the resignation of President Gonzalo Sánchez de Lozada on 17 October the situation in Bolivia now appears to be rapidly returning to normal. We have kept in close touch, as this crisis has unfolded with our EU partners, particularly with regard to the safety of EU citizens in Bolivia. We will continue to monitor the situation closely as it develops over the next few days. We hope that Bolivia can now address its problems through peaceful dialogue and negotiation.

Burma

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports the UK Government received of action by the Burmese authorities against the (a) Karen, (b) Karenni and (c) Shan peoples. [133095]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We receive regular reports from International Non-Governmental Organisations (INGOs), the UN's Special Rapporteur for Human Rights in Burma and the British Embassy in Rangoon on the disproportionate suffering of ethnic groups in Burma, including the Karen, Karenni and Shan.

China

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Chinese Government regarding the imprisonment of Gong Shengliang; and if he will make a statement. [133182]

Mr. Rammell: We have raised Pastor Gong Shengliang's case with the Chinese authorities on a number of occasions. Most recently we supported an EU demarche in Beijing on 18 July. The Chinese authorities said the allegations of torture and ill-treatment were untrue and that he was in good health.

We also raised Pastor Gong's case directly with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. On 31 July they told us that Pastor Gong had had stomach problems before he was imprisoned and that following treatment the problems had stabilised. His relatives had visited him four times.

Gibraltar

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will bring forward proposals to enable Gibraltar to participate in elections to the UK Parliament. [133527]

Mr. MacShane: We have no plans to do so. Overseas Territories, including Gibraltar, are not part of the metropolitan UK.

Global Conflict Prevention Pool

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of the Global Conflict Prevention Pool and its achievements since its creation. [133142]

Mr. Rammell: Setting up the Global Conflict Prevention Pool (GCPP) has helped the partner departments (FCO, MOD and DFID) work more closely together in the field of conflict prevention. This is also helping the departments carry out more detailed and consistent policy analysis, and establish a more integrated approach to developing and implementing programmes on the ground. The Pools are therefore strengthening the UK's contribution to international conflict prevention efforts by ensuring that initiatives are based on evidence of what works and are well targeted.

In FY 2002–03 the total spent on GCPP programmes was £66 million. The budget for FY 2003–04 is £74 million. Details of the GCPP Strategies are set out in the recent publication the GCPP: The Global Conflict Prevention Pool—A joint UK Government approach to reducing conflict, which is available in the Library of the House. A copy of the booklet has also been placed on the FCO website (www.fco.gov.uk) accessible under Global Issues-International Organisations-UN-Conflict Prevention.

Since its start in April 2000, the GCPP has funded several hundred projects under a range of geographic and thematic strategies. It has been engaged in:

Post conflict reconstruction work in Afghanistan, the Balkans, and now in Iraq.

Helping to create security, stability and encourage peace negotiations in Belize and Guatemala, Nepal, Indonesia, the Middle East and North Africa, and Sri Lanka.

Supporting more stable and democratic systems in Central and Eastern Europe and the Former Soviet Union.

In encouraging contact between India and Pakistan over Kashmir.

Building capacity to undertake conflict prevention work in international organisations such as the UN and OSCE.

Developing understanding and promoting activity on security sector reform as a means of longer-term prevention of conflict, and a reduction in the levels of small arms and light weapons.

An independent evaluation is being undertaken this year to look at how the Pools are run and assess the impact of their work to date.

Central Africa

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how UN Security Council Resolution 1484 on the African Great Lakes region is being implemented; and what monitoring of the implementation is taking place. [132500]

Mr. Rammell: UN Security Council Resolution 1484 authorised the deployment until 1 September of an Interim Emergency Multinational Force (IEMF) in Bunia.

The IEMF deployed to Bunia in eastern Democratic Republic of the Congo in June. As framework nation, France provided the military commander and the majority of the force. A number of EU member states and non-EU nations contributed. The UK provided an engineer detachment and Hercules transport to assist with the deployment; in addition we deployed five staff officers to serve with the operation HQ. It was the first EU led operation outside Europe.

The IEMF were replaced on 1 September by the UN's Organisation Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUC) Ituri Brigade operating under a more robust mandate.

Indonesia

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a permanent secretary or under-secretary in his Department has visited Indonesia since 1973; and what the purpose was of each visit. [133127]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To compile the information requested for 1973 to 1999 would incur disproportionate costs. However, since 2000:

4–5 July 2000 Permanent Secretary, to discuss bilateral and multilateral issues.

12–16 September 2000 Director General (Deputy Under Secretary) Wider World, familiarisation and to discuss bilateral and multilateral issues.

22–24 November 2000 Group Chief Executive (Permanent Secretary equivalent), British Trade International (a joint DTI/FCO Department), to discuss trade and investment issues.

30 July-3 August 2001 Director (Assistant Under Secretary) Asia/Pacific, to discuss bilateral and multilateral issues.

12–14 December 2001 Permanent Secretary (designate), as part of a programme of visits to familiarise himself with as many overseas posts as possible.

4–5 July 2002 Director (Assistant Under Secretary) Economic, to discuss economic and trade policy issues.

7–10 January 2003 Director (Assistant Under Secretary) Asia/Pacific, accompanying the Prime Minister on his visit to Indonesia.

14 May 2003 Director (Assistant Under Secretary) Asia/Pacific (designate), to attend an ASEM senior officials meeting.

21–25 July 2003 Director (Assistant Under Secretary) Asia/Pacific, accompanying the Minister to the ASEM Foreign Ministers Meeting.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when files on the visit to Indonesia by department officials in October 1975 will be released. [133128]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The file containing papers relating to a visit to Indonesia by department officials in October 1975 is due for review in 2005 for consideration for release under the 30-year rule in January 2006.

Iraq

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to his written statement of 17 September 2003, Official Report, column 53WS, on Iraq, what provisions have been made to ensure security against theft of arms and other related military material exported to Iraq. [132491]

Mr. Rammell: The Government takes very seriously the security of arms and military equipment approved for export to Iraq. Provisions, determined on a case-by-case basis, include the condition that equipment will remain under the control of the end user at all times, be stored securely, and removed from Iraq at the end of its period of use.

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many barrels of oil have been exported from Iraq since the fall of Saddam Hussein; what value this represents; and what use has been made of the proceeds. [133158]

Mr. Rammell: Between May and 14 October around 85.2 million barrels of oil were exported by the Iraqi State Oil Marketing Organisation. The total sales revenues amounted to around $2.14 billion. Under UN Security Council resolution 1483 all proceeds from Iraq's oil sales must be paid into the Development Fund for Iraq. The money in this fund is to be used to meet the humanitarian needs of the Iraqi people, for the economic reconstruction and repair of Iraq's infrastructure, for the continued disarmament of Iraq, and for the costs of Iraqi civilian administration and other purposes benefiting the people of Iraq as specified in the resolution.

Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of Order 39, issued by Mr. Paul Bremer III. [132749]

Mr. Rammell: Copies of Coalition Provisional Authority (CPA) Order 39 have been placed in the Library of the House. Orders are also available on the CPA website at www.cpa-iraq.org.

Middle East

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the US Administration on its approach to ending the Palestinian-Israeli conflict. [133151]

Mr. Rammell: The establishment of a Palestinian state alongside Israel is at the heart of President Bush's vision of a final settlement, as set out in his speech of 24 June 2002. My right hon. Friends the Prime Minister and the Foreign Secretary, the noble Baroness Symons of Vernham Dean and FCO officials are in constant touch with US colleagues to realise that vision. We agree with them that the Quartet roadmap provides the right mechanism, and are working with them to implement it.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government is taking to persuade the Israeli Government to pursue a negotiated settlement with the Palestinians; and what assessment he has made of the possible use of targeted sanctions. [133152]

Mr. Rammell: The Government constantly urges the Israeli Government at the highest level and through the EU to fulfil its obligations under the roadmap, which is agreed by both parties and the international community to be the route to a peaceful settlement in the Middle East. The Government believe that, as a friend of Israel and the Palestinians, we can best exert influence and encourage both sides to take the steps needed for progress through close engagement with them. We do not believe that targeted sanctions would bring the parties any nearer to a peaceful resolution.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with his EU colleagues on the development of a mechanism for monitoring the roadmap for peace. [133153]

Mr. Rammell: EU Foreign Ministers discussed the mechanism for monitoring the roadmap at their meeting on 29 September. We agreed that > "the EU will continue to work closely and consistently with the US and with other Quartet partners on all issues linked to the successful implementation of the roadmap by the parties".

The EU co-ordinates the work of the Task Force on Palestinian Reform and is ready to contribute to a credible and effective monitoring mechanism.

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the deportation by the State of Israel of persons against whom no charges have been laid; and what action he plans to take consistent with Articles 146 and 147 of the 4th Geneva Convention. [133068]

Mr. Rammell: We are deeply concerned by the Israeli government policy of relocating certain Palestinians to Gaza. We believe such actions are inconsistent with international law. We have previously raised our concerns with the Government of Israel and urged them not to carry out expulsions. We will continue to do so.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to condemn the bombing of Syria by Israel; and if he will make a statement. [132354]

Mr. Rammell: We deplore Israel's attack on Ayn Sahib on 5 October. As our Ambassador to the United Nations told the Security Council, this was unacceptable and represented an escalation of the situation in the region. While we understand Israel's need to protect her citizens from terrorism, we urge all sides to exercise restraint and refrain from actions that escalate tension.

Russian Polar Medal

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made on discussions to enable Arctic Convoy Veterans to accept the Russian Polar Medal. [133544]

Mr. Rammell: Officials are continuing to research the possibility of an exception to the present rules to permit veterans to accept the Defence of the Soviet Arctic Region Medal, should the Russian Government formally seek the Government's authority to award the medal to British citizens. We hope that the work will be completed before the end of the year.

Russia

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what date the Department last made representations on seal clubbing to the Russian authorities. [131828]

Mr. Rammell: The British Embassy in Moscow last raised the issue of seal clubbing with the Ministry of Natural Resources on 22 April and followed by a letter to the Ministry on 23 April. The Embassy also raised the issue through letters to the Russian Fisheries Committee on 23 February and to the All-Russia Scientific Research institute under the Fisheries Committee on 13 February.

The issue of seal clubbing is also regularly raised with the Russian Embassy in London.

Syria

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the US imposition of sanctions on Syria. [132507]

Mr. Rammell: The imminent passing of the Syrian Accountability Act through Congress is an internal matter for the US. The UK remains committed to a policy of constructive and, where necessary, critical engagement with Syria. This allows us to support change for the better while clearly communicating our views on issues of concern.

UN Security Council

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on the representation of the (a) United Kingdom and (b) European Union on the UN Security Council. [131513]

Mr. Rammell: We support continued British Permanent membership of the Security Council. Britain supports enlargement of the Security Council, but we do not support a European Union seat.

Vietnam

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations with Vietnam. [132841]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: 2003 marks the 30th anniversary of diplomatic relations between the UK and the Socialist Republic of Vietnam. Visits to the UK in September by the Vietnamese Deputy Prime Minister, Vu Khoan, and four other Vietnamese Ministers are testimony to the growing breadth and depth of relations. We have regular engagement with the Vietnamese Government on a range of issues: development, trade and investment, and education, as well as political issues, including human rights. The UK is a major investor in Vietnam and DFID's aid programme to Vietnam, currently £25 million, is its fastest growing aid programme in the world.

TREASURY

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will reply to the letter to him dated 27 August from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, with regard to Mr. M. Galian, passed to him by the Department for Transport. [133841]

John Healey: The letter from my right hon. Friend arrived in the Treasury on 21 October. I have replied.

EU Constitution

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether direct taxation will remain the responsibility of Her Majesty's Government if the draft EU Constitution is ratified by the UK. [132558]

Dawn Primarolo: Any changes to the provisions of the existing EU Treaties, including in relation to direct taxation, require the unanimous agreement of all member states. The Government have made it clear in their White Paper, "The British Approach to the European Union Intergovernmental Conference 2003", that they will insist that tax matters continue to be decided by unanimity.

European Constitution

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the implications of the proposed European Constitution on the UK's ability to set corporation tax. [133414]

Dawn Primarolo: Any changes to the provisions of the existing EU Treaties, including in relation to corporation tax, require the unanimous agreement of all member states. The Government have made it clear in their White Paper, "The British Approach to the European Union Intergovernmental Conference 2003", that they will insist that tax matters continue to be decided by unanimity.

National Insurance

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost to the Treasury of removing the obligation on those who have paid or been credited with 44 years of national insurance contributions to make further payments prior to their retirement. [133532]

Dawn Primarolo: Reliable information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people aged under 65 who have contributed for 44 years and have qualified for a 100 per cent. retirement pension paid employee national insurance contributions in the last year for which figures are available. [133533]

Dawn Primarolo: Reliable information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Unused Airline Tickets

Richard Ottaway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what procedures are in place for refunding taxes on unused airline tickets; and if he will make a statement. [133038]

John Healey: Air passenger duty (APD) is payable by aircraft operators. Nearly all airlines pass on the duty charge to their passengers via fares, though whether or not they do so is a decision for the airlines, and it is normal commercial practice for them to charge their customers at the time of ticket sale.

No liability to APD arises if a flight is cancelled, or a passenger is unable to travel on a pre-booked flight. Whether the airline makes a refund to the passenger in such circumstances is a commercial matter between them. If passengers consider that they have been misled, they can contact their Local Trading Standards Office, who can investigate and prosecute traders in such circumstances.

Working Tax Credit (Scotland)

John Barrett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people are in receipt of working tax credit in Scotland, broken down by (a) parliamentary constituency and (b) local authority; and what percentage each of these figures represents of the number of people eligible for the credit. [133000]

Dawn Primarolo: The number of families in each constituency and local authority who were receiving child and working tax credit at 11 July 2003 are shown in "Child and Working Tax Credit Statistics. Geographical Analyses. July 2003." This is available on the Inland Revenue website at: www.inlandrevenue.gov.uk/stats/personal-tax-credits/geog-analysis-jul03.pdf

No estimates are available of the number of families eligible by local constituency or local authority.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Workplace Stress

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans his Department has to introduce regulations on businesses in relation to the reduction of stress in the workplace. [133412]

Malcolm Wicks: Existing legislation (Health and Safety at Work, etc Act 1974. and the Management of Health and Safety Regulations 1999) places a general duty on employers to protect the health and safety of their employees and to carry out an adequate risk assessment. These duties apply equally to work-related stress as any other work-place hazard.

Following public consultation during 1999 the Health and Safety Commission decided that a legislative approach would be hard to define. Consequently there are no plans to introduce further legislation, although the need for an Approved Code of Practice will be kept under review.

To assist employers to tackle the problem of work-related stress the Health and Safety Executive are currently piloting draft management standards with the intention of launching them in late 2004. The standards will have the status of guidance and will provide a yardstick against which employers can measure their progress in measuring work-related stress.

Bereavement Payment

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many claims for Bereavement Payment were made in tax year 2002–03; and what estimate he has made of how many people (a) failed to make claims for Bereavement Payment and (b) there were whose claims were made after the three month deadline. [133493]

Mr. Pond: 64,000 claims for Bereavement Payment were received in 2002–03. We have made no estimate of the number of people who have failed to make a claim, or whose claims were made outside the time limit.

We have extended the time limit for claiming a Bereavement Payment from three to 12 months for all cases where death occurred on or after 1 April 2003.

Child Poverty

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what progress has been made in eradicating child poverty; what assessment has been made identifying further work that needs to be done; and if he will make a statement. [132945]

Mr. Pond: Poverty is a complex and multi-dimensional problem. We published 'Opportunity for all—Fifth Annual Report' (Cm 5956) in September 2003, which sets out the Government's strategy for tackling poverty and social exclusion and presents information on the indicators used to measure progress against this strategy.

In April 2002, we published 'Measuring child poverty: a consultation document' to gather views on an appropriate measure of child poverty for the long term. We published the preliminary conclusions of our consultation on 14 May 2003. The report states that further technical work is necessary before finalising any new measure of child poverty and that we intend to publish final conclusions by the end of 2003.

Both reports are available in the Library.

Crown Immunity

Huw Irranca-Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on his policy on the removal of Crown Immunity from prosecution. [132980]

Malcolm Wicks: The Government stands by its commitment to remove Crown immunity from statutory health and safety enforcement and will seek a legislative opportunity, when parliamentary time allows.

Health and Safety Executive

Andrew Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when he expects the Health and Safety Executive will conclude negotiations on the 2003 annual pay increase. [132537]

Mr. Browne: We are not able to say when the negotiations will be concluded. That is a matter for the Health and Safety Executive and the trade unions and will depend upon their ability to reach an agreed settlement.

Andrew Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions by what means principal inspectors in the field offices of the Construction Division of the Health and Safety Executive are supervised from remote locations. [132539]

Mr. Browne: Principal Inspectors are managed using a variety of techniques including face to face meetings (either individually or as a group), video conference, telephone or e-mail contact. The Health and Safety Executive has a detailed staff appraisal system which is supported by management information systems and the review of samples of work in accordance with HSE's quality systems.

Andrew Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what proportion of notification of building sites (F10 forms) received in local offices of the Health and Safety Executive resulted in an inspection visit by a fully qualified inspector in the last 12 months. [132540]

Mr. Browne: The information is not held centrally and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Andrew Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions whether the field inspectors and work contract officers of the Health and Safety Executive will prosecute companies who do not possess an employer's liability compulsory insurance certificate; and how many such prosecutions there have been in the past 12 months. [132542]

Mr. Browne: Where an employer has not got appropriate employers' liability insurance, or does not produce a valid certificate of insurance when required to do so, then the Health and Safety Executive will consider prosecution.

Each case must be considered on its own merits, and in accordance with the Code for Crown Prosecutors. Prosecution decisions will also take account of the time since the date of offence, because offences under ELCI Act 1969 are triable only summarily, which means there is a six-month time limit from the date of the offence to commencing a prosecution.

Where there is evidence of non-insurance, and the case is within the statutory time period, then HSE will normally prosecute.

During the period 15 October 2002 to 14 October 2003, there were a total of 10 prosecution cases heard for prosecutions brought by HSE for failure to have insurance.

In addition to prosecution, the issue of 'Notices to Produce' (NTPs) is an important part of HSE's enforcement of ELCI. NTPs require the employer to produce a valid certificate of insurance to HSE. During the same period, HSE issued a total of 73 NTPs.

Insurance Premiums

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what assessment he has made of the last six months of problems for small and medium sized enterprises caused by the recent increases in insurance premiums. [132843]

Malcolm Wicks: A survey by the Office of Fair Trading (OFT) found that price increases were most concentrated on a limited number of companies. Nearly half of all companies had no price rise or less than 20 per cent. However, between 5 per cent. and 12 per cent. of businesses saw premiums at least double and often increase by several hundred per cent. More recent figures from Datamonitor, a leading business information company, show less extreme pricing trends than the OFT survey but support the general picture. Overwhelmingly, these were small and medium sized companies, mostly in sectors traditionally associated with high accident risks.

In the First Stage Report of the Review of Employers' Liability Compulsory Insurance (ELCI) the Department noted that many SMEs have faced real difficulties including:

- reduced profit margins tied to an inability to pass on increased costs, with a potential knock-on affect on business investment;
- curtailment of business activity in some sectors deemed to be too high risk by insurers;
- difficulties with business planning caused by uncertainty;
- according to some business representatives, being forced to make staff redundant or reduce rates of pay;
- anecdotally, the linking of increased EL premiums to business failure; and reports of trading uninsured.

The Department has been looking at ways of alleviating the difficulties in the Second Stage of the Review and will report in the autumn on the progress that has been made and on the further steps that we intend to take.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what discussions his Department has had with the insurance industry over the past six months regarding the issue of notice periods for the renewal of employers liability insurance; and what the outcome of such discussions was. [132844]

Malcolm Wicks: The Department has had a number of discussions with the Association of British Insurers (ABI) and the British Insurance Brokers' Association (BIBA) about Employers' Liability Compulsory Insurance (ELCI) over the last six months. The discussions covered a range of issues including the issue of notice periods for the renewal of ELCI.

The ABI and BIBA recently announced a statement of good practice, which recommends that liability insurance policy holders receive at least 21 days' notice of their renewal terms.

The Department welcomes the initiative on the part of the ABI and BIBA.

In addition, the Financial Services Authority (FSA) has recently consulted on whether it should set an 'in good time' requirement or a 21 day notice period for renewals for commercial customers, and is currently considering responses to its consultation.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will set out in his Department's second report into Employers Liability Compulsory Insurance a list of trade organisations that he has met. [132848]

Malcolm Wicks: Yes.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what criteria his Department will use in deciding the content of the follow-up report on Employer's Liability Compulsory Insurance due for publication in the autumn. [132854]

Malcolm Wicks: The content of the Second Stage Report will accord with the commitments given in the First Stage Report, namely that the Department will continue to monitor developments in the Employers' Liability Compulsory Insurance market and will report on the progress that has been made against the agenda for action that was set out in the First Stage Report. The agenda for action comprised:

- working with interested parties to help develop the basis for more risk-related premiums;
- working with stakeholders to maximise the benefits for EL of current initiatives within the legal system. In parallel, discussing with stakeholders the options for alternative dispute resolution arrangements;
- engaging with business, industry and other stakeholders to further evaluate the evidence for separating long-term occupational disease risks from accident risks—more evidence would be needed to assess whether a radical separation is justified;
- making rehabilitation play a more central role in the UK workers' compensation system, to improve outcomes for employees and to let compensation reflect this;
- reforming the arrangements for enforcement of EL, to tackle the unfairness of competition trading illegally without insurance cover and to better protect employees.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what assessment his Department has made on the impact of long tail insurance on the level of premiums. [132892]

Malcolm Wicks: The Department is aware that the Association of British Insurers (ABI) has commissioned research to develop proposals in this area. We have discussed this with the ABI and other stakeholders. We await the results of the research with interest.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions pursuant to his answer of 18 September, Official Report, column 904W, to the hon. Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe), when he expects the follow-up report on employer's liability compulsory insurance to be published. [132904]

Malcolm Wicks: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe) on 18 September, Official Report, column 904W. The position remains the same.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions pursuant to his answer of 18 September 2003, Official Report, column 904W, to the hon. Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe), what steps his Department is taking to make an assessment of the number of small and medium sized enterprises that have stopped trading in the past 12 months as a result of increased insurance premiums. [132905]

Malcolm Wicks: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe) on 18 September, Official Report, column 908W. The position remains the same.

Pension Credit

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) how many applications for pension credit there have been, broken down by region; and how many have been successful; [133639]

(2) if he will make a statement on take-up of pension credit. [133673]

Malcolm Wicks: I refer my hon. Friend to the written statement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 14 October 2003, Official Report, column 5WS.

Pensions (Means-testing)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on means testing of state pensions on (a) 1 October 1997 and (b) 1 October 2003. [133588]

Malcolm Wicks: This Government is targeting money where it is most needed. And that means targeting more money on the poorest pensioners. In 1997, the rate of income support from age 60 was £68.80 for single persons and £106.80 for couples. In April 2003, the rate of minimum income guarantee from age 60 increased to £102.10 for single persons and £155.80 for couples.

Pension credit, introduced on 6 October 2003, abolishes the old weekly means test, replacing it with a less intrusive form of assessment. From age 65, most pensioners will have their awards fixed for five years at a time. In addition, pension credit is intended to reward rather than penalise those people who have modest amounts of second pension or other savings.

Compared with the 1997 system as a result of the Government's measures including pension credit, on average, from October 2003, pensioner households are £1,250 a year better off in real terms, around £24 extra a week, and the poorest third of pensioner households will have gained £1,600 a year in real terms.

Royal Mint

Huw Irranca-Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on the health and safety record of the Royal Mint in Llantrisant. [132979]

Malcolm Wicks: The Royal Mint at Llantrisant is treated by the Health and Safety Executive the same as any other similar manufacturing operation, and irrespective of the issue of Crown Immunity, to the same regulatory regime and standards.

There have been three fatalities since the operation has been on this site; one in 1987, one in 1992 and one in June 2001. The fatality in June 2001 resulted in Crown Censure proceedings. Substantial remedial measures were put in place following this tragedy.

Over the last few years reportable accidents at the Mint have been falling; 34 in 2001, 26 in 2002 and 10 to date in 2003. This is below the national average for manufacturing industry for last year (November to November).

In 2001 a Crown Improvement Notice was served on the Royal Mint requiring risk assessments associated with workplace transport to be carried out. This was complied with fully by the Royal Mint and the Notice discharged.

In June 2003 there was a breakout of molten metal from an induction furnace on site. There were no injuries. Following investigation the Mint management produced an action plan and have acted positively upon this plan, and the advice given by HSE inspectors. No formal enforcement action arose out of this matter.

Activities at the site require that the Royal Mint submits a safety report to the HSE under the Control of Major Accident Hazards Regulations 1999. This report was submitted in January 2002 as required by those Regulations. HSE will carry out inspections and interventions on the Royal Mint site taking into account the safety report, as it would for any other site with similar industrial risks.

HEALTH

Care Homes

Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what representations he has made to Essex County Council over proposals for the sale of the council's care homes; and if he will make a statement; [132802]

(2) what powers he has to intervene on proposals by Essex County Council to sell care homes owned by the Council. [132803]

Dr. Ladyman: The Government cannot influence decisions taken by local councils or decide for them how they should manage their services. It is for local councils to make such decisions and I have no plans to intervene.

The twelve care home homes are being transferred, either through leasehold disposal or sale of the freehold, to the independent sector. I understand the council is pursuing this option as a way of increasing residential care capacity and strengthening partnership working with the independent sector.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Alan Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what percentage of category B emergency calls were answered within 19 minutes in (a) the East Midlands Ambulance Trust area, (b) Rutland county and (c) Melton borough in each of the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement; [132824]

(2) what percentage of category A emergency calls were answered within eight minutes in (a) the East Midlands Ambulance Trust area, (b) Rutland county and (c) Melton borough in each of the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement; [132825]

(3) what percentage of emergency calls from GPs' surgeries were answered within 15 minutes in (a) the East Midlands Trust area, (b) Rutland Council area and (c) Melton borough in each of the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement; [132826]

(4) how many times in each of the past 12 months an ambulance has taken over (a) 15, (b) 30, (c) 50, (d) 60 and (e) 90 minutes to respond to category A emergency calls in (i) the East Midlands Ambulance Trust area, (ii) Rutland county and (iii) Melton borough; and if he will make a statement; [132827]

(5) on how many occasions in each of the past 12 months an ambulance has taken over (a) 30, (b) 50, (c) 60 and (d) 90 minutes to respond to category B emergency calls in (i) the East Midlands Ambulance Trust area, (ii) Rutland county and (iii) Melton borough; and if he will make a statement. [132828]

Dr. Ladyman: This information is not centrally available in the format requested. However, the latest information about the proportion of emergency calls resulting in an ambulance arriving at the scene of the reported incident within the Governments target response times for all ambulance trusts can be found in the Department of Health Statistical Bulletin, "Ambulance Services, England 2002/2003".

Copies of the bulletin are available in the Library and also on the Department's website at www.doh.gov.uk/public/sb0313.htm.

Cancer Specialists

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients in (a) 2002 and (b) 2003 in Hull and the East Riding waited longer than eight weeks after being referred to a cancer specialist. [132396]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Information on the number of patients waiting longer than eight weeks after being referred to a cancer specialist is not collected by the Department. Statistics are collected on the number of patients who wait more than 28 days for a first outpatient appointment following general practitioner urgent referral with suspected cancer. For Hull and East Yorkshire Hospitals National Health Service Trust, when the referral was received within 24 hours, one patient waited more than 28 days to see a cancer specialist in 2001–02 and three patients waited longer than 28 days in 2002–03.

Deep Vein Thrombosis

Mr. Mike Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to the Answer from the Secretary of State for Transport of 15 September, Official Report, columns 499–500W, on deep vein thrombosis, when the research will be published; and if he will make a statement. [131931]

Miss Melanie Johnson: A research project on the public perceptions of the risk of deep vein thrombosis (DVT) and the awareness and use of information sources relating to DVT was commissioned earlier this year on behalf of the Aviation Health Working Group. A draft report is currently being peer reviewed and will be published in 2004.

Dementia

Mr. Berry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people with dementia live in residential care; and how many people with dementia in residential care are funded by the NHS. [132639]

Dr. Ladyman: Information is not available centrally in the form requested.

Midwifery

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds were available in the Hull and East Yorkshire Hospitals NHS Trust in the last two quarters for which figures are available. [133218]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer issued on 20 October]: Information on the number of beds is collected and published on an annual basis. In 2002–03, the average daily number of open and staffed beds in the Hull and East Yorkshire Hospitals National Health Service Trust was 1,391.

North Cheshire Hospitals NHS Trust

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) which organisations and individuals have so far been consulted by North Cheshire Hospitals NHS Trust on their plans for future service provision; [133021]

(2) when North Cheshire Hospitals NHS Trust intends to publish its plan for the re-organisation of services; and what the timetable is for consultation on these proposals. [133023]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 21 October 2003]: The chief executives of North Cheshire Hospitals National Health Service Trust and Warrington and Halton primary care trusts are working together to build on recent discussions with general practitioners and hospital clinicians from Halton and Warrington concerning developments to surgical services.

The trust plans to discuss the views of its clinicians and those within primary care at its next board meeting on 6 November 2003. Following the trust board discussion, the Overview and Scrutiny Committees of Warrington and Halton will need to take a view on whether formal consultation is required. The North Cheshire Hospitals NHS Trust is not planning to undertake a major re-organisation of its services.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps he will take to ensure that people living in areas of health deprivation in North Warrington are consulted about future service provision at North Cheshire Hospitals NHS Trust; [133022]

(2) what steps he is taking to ensure that the needs of people living in the most deprived areas of Warrington North are met by any future re-organisation of services at North Cheshire Hospitals. [133024]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 21 October 2003]: Warrington Primary Care Trust (PCT) will continue to be closely involved in the development of acute services in North Cheshire. In conjunction with North Cheshire Hospitals National Health Service Trust, Warrington PCT will engage with Warrington Borough Council and the Overview and Scrutiny Committee to ensure appropriate consultation with Warrington residents in relation to developments in health care.

If plans require formal consultation, Warrington PCT will ensure that local people have a range of opportunities to give their views and every effort will be made to ensure equity issues are addressed.

There is a programme of activity in Warrington to address deprived areas. Warrington Health and Well Being Partnership, which is led by Warrington PCT, are in the process of compiling the Health Improvement Plan. Deprivation in Warrington Central is the key priority of this plan. There is a programme of activity in Warrington to address deprived areas. Warrington Health and Well Being Partnership, which is led by Warrington PCT, are in the process of compiling the Health Improvement Plan. Deprivation in Warrington Central is the key priority of this plan.

Travel Vaccines

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance his Department has issued to general practitioners on (a) the provision of travel vaccines and (b) the appropriate charge for such vaccines. [133591]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The guidance for vaccines provided on the National Health Service are listed in the Statement of Fees and Allowances, which is known as the Red Book.

General practitioners may only charge for travel vaccinations where they receive no remuneration for providing such a vaccination from the NHS. In such circumstances the charge levied is a private matter between the patient and their GP.

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the impact on human (a) health, (b) mortality and (c) morbidity of the emission of ultrafine particles by the UK vehicle parc. [132755]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The evidence on the biological effects of ultrafme particles has been described in the 2001 report, Airborne Particles, by the expert panel on air quality standards. The panel noted that only limited evidence was available on the effect of ultrafme particles on health in humans. For this reason, the Department has not at this stage assessed the impact of ultrafme particles from vehicles on human health.

The report is available on the website of the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs at www.defra.qov.uk/environment/airquaritv/aqs/air measure/index.htm.

Viruses

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research he has commissioned to create new mutations of viruses that can be deprived of their species' specific properties; and which of these viruses (a) are being and (b) have been used for genetic engineering. [130424]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 16 September 2003]: Genetically disabled viruses are widely used in scientific and medical research. The focus of funding provided by the Department is primarily on research that brings the benefits of new medicines into the National Health Service. Basic scientific research of the type referred to in the question is mainly commissioned through the Medical Research Council.

CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

Divorced Parents (Removal of Children from UK)

Sir Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what research has been commissioned by his Department on the number of divorced fathers who manage to maintain effective contact with their children should the children's mother be granted leave to remove them from the United Kingdom; and what steps his Department takes to monitor the welfare of such children. [133034]

Mr. Lammy: My Department has not commissioned research into this issue. We do not monitor the welfare of children who live abroad with their mothers with the agreement of the court.

Sir Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how many applications were made by (a) mothers and (b) fathers in each of the last five years for which figures are available for leave to remove children from the jurisdiction of the United Kingdom courts; and how many of those applications were (i) granted and (ii) rejected. [133035]

Mr. Lammy: The number of orders made under Section 13 of the Children Act 1989 for removal from the jurisdiction since 2000 (when figures were first collected) were as follows. The figures in brackets were the number of those made by consent.

2000—190 (41)

2001—292 (65)

2002—333 (88)

2003—[1]344 ([1]90)

[1] Figures for January to September inclusive.

No separate figures are held for mothers or fathers, nor is information available about the number of applications that were refused.

Sir Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what information his Department holds about (a) the research findings and (b) other formal evidence available to the courts about the impact upon (i) mothers seeking leave to remove children from the United Kingdom should their application be denied and (ii) the impact upon children of losing access to their father should such leave be granted to the mother. [133036]

Mr. Lammy: We are not aware of any research or other formal evidence in relation to this issue.

European Elections

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what plans the Department has to encourage the electorate to participate in European Elections. [133347]

Mr. Leslie: The Government introduced the European Parliamentary and Local Elections (Pilots) Bill on 17 September. This will permit innovative voting systems to be piloted in selected regions at next year's European Parliamentary elections building on the experience gained from the piloting of innovative systems at local election level. This is designed to adapt to the needs of today's changing lifestyles and the work and family commitments which people have.

In addition, the Electoral Commission has a statutory responsibility to promote public awareness of current electoral systems, including the European Parliamentary elections. It recently conducted research on people's attitude to the European Parliamentary elections and the findings will inform their campaign to encourage greater participation by the electorate at next year's elections. A copy of that research 'Public opinion and the 2004 elections' is available on the Electoral Commission's website at www.electoralcommission.org.uk. The Institute for Citizenship is also running a 'Get the Vote Out 2004!' campaign (with support from the Electoral Commission) to raise awareness and encourage participation. The Government fully supports these initiatives.

Franchise (EU Citizens)

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs, what measures he proposes to take to enable citizens of countries who will be admitted to European Union membership in April 2004 to be admitted to the franchise in time for local government and European elections in June 2004; and if he will make a statement. [132696]

Mr. Leslie: The local and European Parliamentary Elections (Registration of Citizens of Accession States) Regulations 2003 (SI 2003/1557) and the Representation of the People (Form of Canvass) (England and Wales) Regulations 2003 (SI 2003/1899) were introduced earlier this year in time for the annual electoral registration canvass, which permit citizens of States that are due to accede to the European Union next year who are resident in this country to register to vote in local government and European Parliamentary elections to be held on or after 1 May 2004.

Young Voters

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what changes to the voting system are planned to encourage young people to vote. [133348]

Mr. Leslie: The Government are keen to encourage young people to participate in elections. My Department has contributed to the Children and Young People Unit's work in the Department for Education and Skills on the engagement of young people in democracy. We fully support the Electoral Commission's campaigns and competitions aimed specifically at young people and the addition of 'citizenship studies' to the school curriculum. All these developments recognise the importance and value of voting and aim to increase the interest, understanding and involvement of young people with democratic processes. The use of new technology to vote, as piloted in recent local elections, is also regarded as having particular appeal for younger voters.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what efforts are made to prepare a local population for the reception of dispersed asylum seekers in their area prior to arrival of the asylum seekers; and what guidance is given by his Department on this. [124117]

Beverley Hughes: The Home Office National Asylum Support Service (NASS) has systems in place to ensure local authorities and other agencies in an area to which asylum seekers are to be sent for the first time are fully consulted to minimise the risk of asylum seekers being placed inappropriately in an area.

However, I do not believe this is appropriate and in future NASS staff will be responsible for ensuring that consultation and a joint approach is developed at local level. Primarily, this will be achieved by the regionalisation of NASS, a process ensuring the successive devolution of NASS staff and functions to regional offices. This will enable the dialogue and joint work with regional consortia, local authorities other agencies and NASS to develop.

Burglary

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the cost of burglary to (a) the commercial sector, (b) the public sector and (c) private individuals in each year between 1995 and 2002. [128546]

Ms Blears: The Home Office made estimates of the economic and social cost of crime in England and Wales in 1999–2000. Estimates were published in Home Office Research Study 217 (HORS 217), "The economic and social costs of crime". This study estimated that the average burglary in a dwelling costs society around £2,300 (including £830 in property stolen and damaged). The average burglary not in a dwelling costs society around £2,700 (including £1,200 in property stolen and damaged). It is currently not possible to make a distinction between public and commercial sector burglary in respect of costs.

These figures for numbers of burglaries recorded can be applied to the estimates of the average costs of burglaries presented in HORS 217. This gives total costs of recorded burglary as follows:

Table 1—Total economic and social cost of burglaries recorded by the police, 1995 to 2002–03 (constant 2000 prices)

£ million

	Burglary and aggravated burglary in a dwelling	Burglary and aggravated burglary other than in a dwelling
1995	1,480	1,609
1996	1,385	1,519
1997	1,194	1,339
1997–98	1,154	1,314
1998–99	1,088	1,293
1998–99	1,089	1,296
1999–2000	1,018	1,252
2000–01	927	1,169
2001–02	990	1,210
2002–03	1,007	1,219

However, these figures do not take into account those burglaries which are not reported to the police. The British Crime Survey (BCS) collects information on household burglaries which are both reported and not reported, and figures for numbers of household burglaries for the period 1995 to 2002–03 are reported in HOSB 07/03. These can be used to derive estimates for the total costs (in constant prices) of household burglary over this period are given in Table 2. The BCS does not provide information on burglaries in premises other than households.

Table 2—Numbers of household burglaries reported in the British Crime Survey, with estimated total economic and social costs (constant 2000 prices), 1995 to 2002–03

£ million

	Burglaries	Total cost
1995	1,743,000	4,009
1997	1,589,000	3,655
1999	1,261,000	2,900
2001–02	966,000	2,222
2002–03	974,000	2,240

Correspondence

Mr. Keith Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria are used in deciding whether a detailed reply to letters from members of the public is appropriate. [132688]

Mr. Blunkett [holding answer 20 September 2003]: The Department follows the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, Second Edition (1997). The Code supports the policy of extending access to official information and responding to reasonable requests for information. The approach to the release of information in all cases is based upon the assumption that information should be released except where disclosure would not be in the public interest as specified in Part II of the Code. Where information cannot be provided under the terms of the Code an explanation will normally be given.

Responses are not sent to correspondence that is considered to be offensive. Examples of such letters include those that are gratuitously sexually explicit or threaten violence.

Interpreters

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the cost is of (a) interpretation facilities and (b) interpreters to each (i) police force and (ii) probation service area. [132142]

Ms Blears: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Media Training

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the cost was to his Department of media and voice training for ministers and officials in each year since 1997. [123131]

Fiona Mactaggart: Media training is available to Ministers and given to selected officials, mainly Prison Service Media Liaison Officers, immigration officers and senior appointees.

No Ministers or officials have been on training courses exclusively for the purpose of voice training. However one minor element of the Government's Centre for Management and Policy Studies' (CMPS) Creating Personal Impact course attended by senior officials does include an introduction to effective use of the voice. It is not possible to break down the cost of this element but since 1997 costs associated with the whole course total around £5,000.

Details and costs of all individual training courses are not held centrally and could be collated only at disproportionate cost.

Police Custody (Deaths)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many deaths there have been of civilians while in police custody in police stations in (a) Southend-on-Sea and (b) Essex in each year since 2001. [132756]

Ms Blears: There have been no such deaths in police stations in Southend-on-Sea or any other part of Essex in the period referred to.

Prisoner Transportation

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what assessment of procedures ensuring the safety of prisoners travelling in police vans will be made by (a) his Department and (b) another regulatory body; [132224]

(2) if he will issue guidance on the introduction of safety belts for prisoners in police security vans; [132225]

(3) if he will make a statement on recorded injuries to prisoners travelling in police vans in the past five years. [132226]

Ms Blears: Information is not collected centrally on injuries to people travelling in police vans. Cellular vehicles are not required to have seat belts but under the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations (as amended), all new vehicles built after 1 October 2001 require appropriate anchorage points. The Association of Chief Police Officers issues operational guidance on the use of protected police vehicles. The safety and transportation of people in police vehicles is a matter for the chief officer of police for that area.

Terrorism Act

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when, and for what areas, he has signed authorisations for the use by the police of section 44 of the Terrorism Act 2000. [131584]

Ms Blears: The use of the section 44 Stop & Search power is authorised by a senior police officer of at least the rank of Assistant Chief Constable. The role of the Secretary of State is to confirm those authorisations.

Between 19 February 2001 and 30 September 2003 a total of 653 authorisations by a senior police officer under section 44 of the Terrorism Act 2000 received confirmation from the Secretary of State. 583 of these relate to English police forces, and 70 to Welsh police forces.

It has been a longstanding policy of this and previous administrations not to comment on anti-terrorist operations. To provide a more detailed breakdown of the areas and times covered by Section 44 authorisations would put into the public domain, information that could prove valuable to terrorists.

Many forces run short term, localised operations for a variety of situations, that are supported by section 44 powers. These can include protective security operations for events or VIPs, intelligence gathering operations or measures taken in response to intelligence and threat assessments. To disclose detailed information on the times and locations of such operations could compromise their future effectiveness.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 23 October 2003

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Rural Communities

13. Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the role of affordable housing in maintaining the viability of rural communities. [133795]

Alun Michael: The Rural White Paper of November 2000 recognised the importance of affordable housing in maintaining the viability of rural communities, as did the Sustainable Communities White Paper this year. That is why we have more than doubled the target for the Housing Corporation's special programme for small rural settlements. Our Rural Housing Enablers are helping to increase the supply of affordable housing. And we are currently consulting on an update of the existing guidance on planning for affordable housing.

Forestry

15. Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what improvements she plans to make to the forestry infrastructure to allow greater amounts of wood residue to reach power generators. [133798]

Mr. Morley: Defra, in association with the Devolved Administrations and the Forestry Commission, is setting up a £3.5 million UK-wide Bio-energy Infrastructure Scheme. This scheme will help develop the supply chain required to harvest, store, process and supply biomass, such as energy crops and forestry woodfuel, to energy end-users. The European Commission's approval of the Scheme is currently being sought. Subject to this, we hope to launch the Scheme in early 2004.

Sewage

17. Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on her public consultation exercise regarding sewage odour pollution. [133800]

Alun Michael: Before announcing their chosen way forward, the Government's immediate priority is to evaluate the impact of the recent High Court decision that odours from sewage treatment works can be controlled through the statutory nuisance regime of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. We also have to consider the results from the complementary consultation of the National Assembly of Wales before we can announce our chosen way forward.

I expect to be able to announce a clear way forward shortly after the House of Lords ruling regarding an appeal on this matter.

Fly Tipping

18. Andrew Selous: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on her policies to combat fly tipping. [133801]

Mr. Morley: The Government are developing a wide ranging strategy for dealing with fly tipping.

Proposals in the Anti-Social Behaviour Bill will allow local authorities to use an enhanced set of powers designed to lead to more successful prosecutions.

Farming

19. Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has for introducing whole farm approach pilots. [133802]

Mr. Bradshaw: The first pilot of the core whole farm appraisal will take place in November 2003.

Agri-environmental Schemes

20. Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what representations she has received regarding her Department's agri-environmental schemes. [133803]

Mr. Morley: We received 166 responses to the public consultation on our agri-environment schemes held earlier this year, and last week we launched a final round of consultation on more detailed aspects of how the schemes should operate in future.

Air Quality

21. Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what measures she proposes to improve air quality. [133804]

Alun Michael: The Government policies to improve air quality are set out in the Air Quality Strategy for England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, published in January 2000, and the Addendum to the Air Quality Strategy published in February 2003.

Common Agricultural Policy

22. Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the impact of reform of the Common Agricultural Policy on the support available for growing energy crops. [133805]

Alun Michael: The reform of the Common Agricultural Policy was positive in its support for energy crops. It will still be possible to grow energy crops on set-aside land and to receive payments under the new Single Payment Scheme. If energy crops are grown on non set-aside land payments under the new Single Payment Scheme and the new €45 per hectare energy crops payment will be available. The energy crops payment is limited to 1.5 million hectares for the EU as a whole and aid will be reduced if production exceeds that area.

Mr. Wills: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what progress has been made with the reform of the common agricultural policy sugar regime. [133799]

Mr. Morley: The European Commission issued an options paper on reform of the Sugar Regime in late September 2003. A Defra consultation exercise has just been launched to help inform the UK response, covering agricultural, development and trade issues.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she next plans to meet the National Chairman of the Tenant Farmers Association to discuss the CAP Reform package of 26 June. [132264]

Mr. Bradshaw: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, has no plans at present to meet the National Chairman of the Tenant Farmers' Association. However, my noble Friend, the Lord Whitty, is currently considering a request from the Chief Executive of the Tenant Farmers' Association to meet him. The Chief Executive attended a meeting with Defra officials and representatives of other key stakeholders on 8 October which unfortunately my noble Friend was unable to chair due to last minute diary pressures. The Chief Executive has also been invited to a meeting with officials on 17 October.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the impact of the CAP Reform package of 26 June on the nation's tenant farmers. [132265]

Mr. Bradshaw: No specific assessment has been undertaken of the impact of the CAP reform proposals on tenant farmers. However, we have assessed the impacts of the proposals on farming and other businesses generally, including an analysis by farm activity, and a summary of these is included in the Regulatory Impact Assessments which have been lodged in the House Libraries. An additional analysis looking at the impact on distribution of payments of various options for operating the Single Payment Scheme has also been carried out and a copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

For the first time, the bulk of farm subsidy will not be dependent on what or how much farmers produce. As with the previous system, subsidy would be paid to the farmer, whether owner or tenant, will continue to hold the subsidy entitlement. Tenant farmers, along with other farmers, will therefore be free to produce what they judge the market wants and so be better able to cut costs and increase profits. Farmers will also be freed from some of the bureaucracy associated with the subsidy schemes which are being replaced by the new decoupled subsidy.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the possible impact on tenant farmers of the option available to EU member states to implement the CAP Reform package of 26 June by using regional average payments. [132266]

Mr. Bradshaw: No such assessment has been done in relation to tenant farmers specifically. However, we have prepared an analysis of the impacts of regional average payments on farming and other businesses generally and a copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the extent of redistribution of payments between farmers if the CAP Reform package of 26 June is implemented using regional average payments as opposed to the historic payment basis. [132267]

Mr. Bradshaw: We are currently consulting stakeholders on whether the historic or area model of the new Single Payments Scheme should be operated in England. Responses to that exercise will help develop our understanding of the range of environmental, social and economic impacts of each of the models including the impact on the agriculture industry and its constituent parts. An assessment has been made of the redistributive effects of a number of CAP direct aid payments. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if it is her policy to ensure that as farm tenants progress to better agricultural holdings they will be free to move their single payment entitlements established under the CAP Reform package of 26 June to those holdings without penalty. [132268]

Mr. Bradshaw: Entitlements under the Single Payment Scheme will be allocated to farmers rather than holdings. It follows that a tenant would be free to use the eligible land on any new holding to claim payment against the entitlements he or she owns. There is also provision to lease entitlements but only with an equivalent number of hectares. Leased entitlements would, therefore, revert back to their owner at the same time that the accompanying land does.

Beef Exports

Sir Sydney Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the withdrawal by the European Commission of its application to the European Court of Justice for the imposition of a fine on France for its ban on the import of British beef; and what the total fine was for which the French Government was liable. [133017]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 21 October 2003]: The UK Government was gratified that France at last complied with EU law and lifted its ban on British beef on 25 October 2002.

The European Commission withdrew its case in the European Court of justice seeking a daily fine on France after France lifted its ban. Therefore, no fines were payable, but the Commission asked the Court to order that costs of the case be borne by France. The UK Government regretted the decision by the European Commission not to pursue the case for penalties against France. The UK supported the Commission throughout and believed that pressing this case would have sent a firm message to member states that no one country can avoid its obligations and responsibilities.

Common Fisheries Policy

Sir Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent representations she has received on reform of the Common Fisheries Policy. [133794]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Department continues to receive a considerable amount of correspondence from a wide range of interest groups. In addition i meet regularly with industry representatives to hear their concerns, as do my colleagues in the devolved Administrations.

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the Government's aims in connection with the next Fisheries Council meeting. [133796]

Mr. Bradshaw: It is not yet clear what the agenda will be on the 17 and 18 November, but the Government always aims to pursue a sustainable future for the UK fishing industry and the fish stocks on which it depends.

Euro

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much has been spent in each year by her Department in preparing for United Kingdom entry to the euro; how much her Department plans to spend on preparations for United Kingdom entry to the euro for each year from the current financial year up to and including 2005–06; and what estimates she has made of the total costs to her Department of changeover to the European Single Currency. [131601]

Mr. Bradshaw: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend (Ruth Kelly) on 14 October 2003, column 142W.

Fisheries

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the sea fisheries committees, naming her appointee to each to represent the interests of recreational fishing. [132526]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 20 October 2003]: Members appointed by the Secretary of State to Sea Fisheries Committees (SFC) are appointed every four years and are expected to represent all the local fishing and marine environmental interests in the waters of the SFC district. The following were appointed after consultation with a range of recreational fishing organisations. These organisations are consulted as and when mid term vacancies arise.

Cornwall SFC—Mr. Malcolm Gilbert

Devon SFC—Mr. David Rowe

Isles of Scilly SFC—Mr. Timothy Allsop

Northumberland SFC—Mr. Cedric Bilverstone

North Eastern SFC—Mr. Frank Nesbitt, Mr John Whitton

NWNW SFC—Mr. Allan Marklew

Southern SFC— Mr. Bob Watton

South Wales SFC—Mr. B Williams

Sussex SFC—Mr. Peter Reece

No recreational fishing organisations nominations have been appointed to the following;

Cumbria SFC

Kent and Essex SFC

Eastern SFC

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list those fish species which may be (a) caught (i) within the 12 mile limit and (ii) outside the 12 mile limit and (b) landed below their normal spawning size. [132527]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 20 October 2003]: There is no distinction made in EU or national legislation between species which can be caught within and outside 12 miles.

Under EU legislation 38 species are subject to minimum landing sizes. Some Sea Fisheries Committees have introduced minimum sizes for additional species. Fisheries scientists generally advise that a minimum landing size should correspond to the average size of first maturity of female fish. However, this is difficult to achieve in practice when fish of different species, which grow to, and mature at, different sizes, are taken together in a mixed fishery, where the mesh size is not ideal for all species. Some minimum landing sizes, therefore, represent a compromise caused by the mixed fishery problem, and a desire to reduce the need to discard undersized fish. The table as follows lists the current minimum landings size, and recommended minimum landing size based on maturity criteria for some commercial species:

Biologically desirable minimum landing sizes (mls)

Species	Current mls	Mls based on maturity criteria
Cod	35	40–70 (depending on region)
Haddock	30	35–40
Whiting	27	20–22
Saithe	35	60
Sole	24	26–28
Place	27	30–32
Hake	27	55
Megrim	20	26–28

Large Combustion Plants Directive

Paddy Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many of the responses to the consultation paper on the implementation of the revised Large Combustion Plants Directive favoured the implementation of the Directive by (a) an Emission Limit Values approach and (b) a National Emission Reduction Plan approach. [133178]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 21 October 2003]: Some 70 substantive responses have been received so far from individuals, businesses, trade associations, environmental groups, regulators, and Government agencies. Of these about 30 favoured the implementation of the Directive by emission limit approach; about 20 favoured the national plan approach; and about 20 expressed no views. In addition, some 1550 individual letters have been received so far from employees of the coal mining and associated industries, all of which favoured the emissions limits approach.

Paddy Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate she has made of the effect of the National Emission Reduction Plan outlined in the revised Large

Combustion Plants Directive on (a) the English coal mining industry and (b) English coalfield communities. [133367]

Mr. Bradshaw [holding answer 21 October 2003]: The Government has just completed a consultation on a proposal to implement the Large Combustion Plants Directive for plants first licensed before July 1987 using a national plan. Officials have discussed the potential impact of the alternative implementation routes with representatives of the UK coal industry and have received consultation responses from the Confederation of UK Coal Producers and other bodies and organisations with an interest in UK coal mining. The Government will take a decision on the most appropriate implementation approach after considering all of the consultation responses.

Light Pollution

Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what action she is taking to reduce light pollution for the benefit of astronomers. [132382]

Mr. Bradshaw: In 1997 the Government issued "Lighting in the Countryside: Towards good practice". This document continues to be a valuable guide for local authorities, highway engineers and members of the public. It demonstrates what can be done to lessen the adverse effects of external lighting, including security lights and street lighting. The advice within it is applicable in towns as well as the countryside. Copies may be obtained from www.odpm.gov.uk

Defra considered the control of nuisance caused by security lighting in its recent consultation "Living Places—Powers, Rights, Responsibilities". A summary of the comments received to this consultation exercise has now been published. A copy of this document may be obtained from www.defra.gov.uk/environment/consult/pubspace/index.htm

The Government will consider what additional guidance on light pollution may be needed taking into consideration any recommendations emerging from Defra's consultation exercise and from the House of Commons Select Committee's recent inquiry into light pollution and astronomy that was recently completed.

New Covent Garden Market

Martin Linton: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate she has made of the cost of defending the action by the City of London Corporation against New Covent Garden Market. [132549]

Mr. Bradshaw: The Corporation of London have brought proceedings against Defra and the Covent Garden Market Authority. The litigation is at a very early stage and it is not possible to provide a reliable estimate of costs.

REACH

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps she is taking to reduce bureaucracy in REACH. [133489]

Alun Michael: The UK government's concerns about the workability of REACH have been addressed in our response of 16 July 2003 to the European Commission's internet consultation on the draft legislative proposals for REACH which can be found on the Defra website at http:/www. defra.gov.uk/environment/chemicals/reach/ukresponse.pdf

More recently on 20 September 2003 the Prime Minister along with the President of France and the Chancellor of Germany sent a joint letter to the European Commission addressing these same concerns, details of which have been made available at http://www.defra.gov.uk/environment/chemicals/pdf/trilateral.pdf

Our aim is to support the principles of REACH which are intended to protect public health and the environment while making sure that bureaucratic burdens on the chemical industry are kept to the minimum necessary for effectiveness.

South American Meat

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what tonnage of meat has been imported into the UK in each of the last five years from (a) Argentina, (b) Brazil, (c) Uruguay and (d) other South American nations. [133228]

Mr. Bradshaw: The following table shows the tonnage of meat and meat preparations, imported into the UK from South American nations, in each of the last five years (1998–2002).

Thousand tonnes

	Brazil	Argentina	Uruguay	Chile	Others
1998	58.0	10.9	13.9	2.0	0.0
1999	81.6	10.1	11.3	1.8	0.0
2000	97.7	10.5	9.6	2.5	0.0
2001	124.1	6.6	10.0	4.2	0.1

CONSTITUTIONAL AFFAIRS

Judges (Appeals)

Vera Baird: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what action the Secretary of State takes against judges who are successfully appealed against in relation to (a) sentence and (b) conviction significantly more often than the norm. [134113]

Mr. Leslie: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Judicial Appointments

Vera Baird: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs whether appointments of tribunal chairmen and members will continue to be made during the period of the consultation on judicial appointments. [134112]

Mr. Leslie: Appointments will continue to be made, to meet the needs of Tribunals, under the current arrangements until decisions on a new approach are implemented following the consultation now under way.

Legal Aid

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs what criteria are applied by the Legal Aid Board in considering whether to grant assistance to defendants in civil proceedings. [133081]

Mr. Leslie: In Northern Ireland the Legal Aid Committee of the Law Society of Northern Ireland has statutory responsibility for the administration of applications for civil legal aid. The Legal Aid, Advice and Assistance (NI) Order 1981 (the '1981 Order'), provides that legal aid will be available in specified proceedings to any person who meets the prescribed statutory tests. Before granting civil legal aid the Legal Aid Committee must be satisfied that the applicant's disposable income and disposable capital does not exceed the statutory maximum limits. The Legal Aid Committee must also be satisfied that the applicant meets the statutory test of having reasonable grounds for taking, defending or being a party to the proceedings and that it is not unreasonable that he should receive civil legal aid.

With effect from 1 November the Northern Ireland Legal Services Commission will assume statutory responsibility for the administration of legal aid. The Commission will be responsible for applying the same statutory tests as are currently applied by the Legal Aid Committee.

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Department for Constitutional Affairs how much money has been granted by the Legal Aid Board to defendants in civil cases in the past two years. [133082]

Mr. Leslie: The Legal Aid Department of the Law Society of Northern Ireland has indicated that during the year ended 31 March 2002 £2,477,126 was paid in respect of defendants in civil legal aid cases. During the year ended 31 March 2003 £3,025,397 was paid in respect of defendants in civil legal aid cases.

MINISTER FOR WOMEN

Female Pensioners

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Minister for Women if she will take into account women's unpaid caring and domestic responsibilities when calculating future female pensions. [133474]

Malcolm Wicks: I have been asked to reply.

People who receive carer's allowance are credited with national insurance contributions which count towards all future contributory benefits, including state pension. Others who are precluded from work because they are caring for a child or a sick or disabled person may, since 1978, be eligible for home responsibilities protection (HRP). These provisions are of particular benefit to women. HRP allows for years spent caring to be discounted from the number of qualifying years needed to achieve a full basic state pension.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Minister for Women what measures are being taken to tackle female poverty in old age. [133473]

Malcolm Wicks: I have been asked to reply.

The Department has no single definition of pensioner poverty. However, measures since 1997 to improve pensioners' incomes have been targeted largely on those in the lower part of the income distribution, many of whom are older women.

The main measures since 1997 include: above inflation increases in the basic state pension between April 2000 and April 2003, increases to the level of the minimum income guarantee and earnings uprating of the guarantee so that no single pensioner need live on less than £102.10 a week and no couple on less than £155.80 a week, the introduction of pension credit in October this year to provide extra support for those with modest savings, winter fuel payments of £200 a year for the remainder of this Parliament, an extra £100 a year within the winter fuel payments for those aged over 80 and free TV licences for someone aged 75 or over.

The Government are spending around £8 billion a year extra on pensioners as a result of these measures. They have resulted in pensioner households gaining £1,250 a year in real terms with the poorest third of pensioners gaining £1,600 a year in real terms.

Judiciary (Women)

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Minister for Women what measures are in place to bring more women to the higher levels of the judiciary. [133472]

Mr. Leslie: I have been asked to reply.

The principle of appointment on merit is central to the judicial appointments process and those appointed should be those who are best qualified for the job.

Notwithstanding this, the Government believe it is desirable to have a judiciary which is more reflective of the society it serves. While our judges have a reputation for excellence that is second to none, the Government recognise that there is, among other things, a significant gender imbalance within the judiciary.

Specific measures to bring more applications (including from women) for appointment to the High Court include the abolition of the previous procedure of appointments to the High Court Bench by invitation only, and the removal of lower and upper age limits for appointment to the senior judiciary.

More generally, initiatives to encourage a greater and more diverse range of applicants for judicial office include:

the work shadowing scheme (which allows legal practitioners the opportunity to see what it is like to sit as a judge);

the career statement scheme (which allows applicants for judicial office to explain any concerns they may have if they believe their career progress to date understates their judicial potential);

the introduction of salaried part-time working for certain judicial posts (enabling individuals who cannot or choose not to commit to a full time post to nevertheless apply for judicial office);

the introduction of a system of "block sittings" (which allows those who sit part-time as recorders, and have taken a career break, to obtain the necessary experience by sitting in 'blocks' to enable them to apply for full-time appointments on an equal footing with those recorders who have not had a break from sitting).

The Government recognise that more needs to be done, and has announced the intention to create a Judicial Appointments Commission. While the precise role of the commission is subject to consultation, we envisage that it will be tasked with looking at ways both to attract a more diverse range of suitably qualified candidates to apply for judicial office, and to find ways of making judicial career progression a more realistic prospect for traditionally under-represented groups, including women. The consultation paper 'Constitutional Reform: a new way of appointing judges' is available in the Library.

In the interim, the Department will continue to look at other ways of increasing diversity in the judiciary.

PRIME MINISTER

Iraq

Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister pursuant to his statement of 4 June 2003, Official Report, column 148, what subsequent communication with the Chairman of the Joint Intelligence Committee he has had in respect of disquiet over the 45-minute claim made by members of the Defence Intelligence staff prior to the final publication of the dossier on Iraq's weapons of mass destruction, of September 2002; and whether the Defence Intelligence staff brought to his attention the disquiet after he requested that if people had any evidence on the matter they should produce it. [132490]

The Prime Minister: None.

This matter was considered by the Intelligence and Security Committee in its report on "Iraqi Weapons of Mass Destruction—Intelligence and Assessments" (Cm 5972), copies of which are available in the Libraries of the House. It has also been covered in both written and oral evidence to the Hutton Inquiry which has been published on its website at www.the-hutton-inquiry.org.uk.

TREASURY

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he plans to impose capital gains tax on all sales of domestic houses. [134415]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government have no such plans.

Family Income

Mr. Keith Bradley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the net income of a family with two children (a) aged 20 in full time education and (b) aged 12 with a gross income of (i) £13,000, (ii) £13,500, (iii) £14,000, (iv) £14,500, (v) £15,000, (vi) £15,500 and (vii) £16,000 a year; and what assessment he has made of the sources of that net income. [134061]

Dawn Primarolo: The general definition of a child, as given in the Households Below Average Income publication, is an individual aged under 16 or an unmarried 16 to 18-year-old on a course up to and including 'A' level standard. On this basis a 20-year-old in full time education is treated as independent in the tax and benefits system.

Given annual gross earnings, a single full-time earner family with a dependent child aged 12 will have an annual net household income in 2003–04 that is tabulated as follows:

Gross earnings	Income tax	National insurance	Child benefit	Working tax credit	Child tax credit	Net income
13,000	1,610	921	835	707	1,980	13,992
13,500	1,720	976	835	523	1,980	14,142
14,000	1,830	1,031	835	339	1,980	14,293
14,500	1,940	1,086	835	155	1,980	14,444
15,000	2,050	1,141	835	0	1,951	14,595
15,500	2,160	1,196	835	0	1,767	14,747
16,000	2,270	1,251	835	0	1,583	14,898

Housing Supply

Mr. Howard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the progress of the Barker review of the issues affecting housing supply in the UK; what recent discussions he has had with Kate Barker; when he expects to receive the (a) interim report and (b) final report; and if he will publish (i) the reports and (ii) all the inquiry findings. [134393]

Ruth Kelly: The Barker review was commissioned by the Chancellor and Deputy Prime Minister as an independent review. As set out in its terms of reference, the review has undertaken to deliver its interim report this autumn, around the time of the pre-Budget report. The final report will be delivered in spring 2004. Both reports will be publicly available, and make clear the findings of the review.

During the course of the review, Kate Barker has undertaken a range of meetings with interested parties from both the public and private sector, including the Chancellor and the Deputy Prime Minister. The review also invited submissions from relevant organisations and has received over 120 responses. These responses, and the review's terms of reference, are available online at www.barkerreview.org.uk.

Insurance and Corporation Taxes Act

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue has been generated for the Inland Revenue by sections 660A to 669 of the Insurance and Corporation Taxes Act 1988 in each year since 1997; and what forecasts he has made of future revenue generation. [133857]

Dawn Primarolo: The information requested is not available as the amounts charged by these sections of the 1988 Act are not reported separately.

Mortgages (Fixed Rate)

Mr. Howard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent discussions he has had with Professor David Miles regarding his review of the fixed rate mortgages market in the UK; if he will make a statement on the progress of the review; when he expects to receive the interim report; when he expects to receive the final report; and if he will publish them. [134391]

Ruth Kelly: The Chancellor commissioned Professor David Miles to carry out an independent review into the UK mortgage market. We expect the interim report to be delivered around the time of the pre-Budget report and the final report to be delivered by Budget 2004.

Mr. Howard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make public the findings of the Miles review of the fixed rate mortgages market in the UK. [134392]

Ruth Kelly: Yes.

Inland Revenue (Customer Services)

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many and what percentage of telephone calls to Inland Revenue contact centres which were not classed as engaged or abandoned were answered within 20 seconds in each of the last 12 months; [126382]

(2) how many and what percentage of attempted telephone calls to Inland Revenue contact centres reached an engaged tone in each of the last 12 months; [126383]

(3) how many and what percentage of telephone calls to Inland Revenue contact centres were abandoned in each of the last 12 months. [126384]

Dawn Primarolo: The tables give figures for the 12 months to August 2003, for calls attempted, received, handled, abandoned and receiving the engaged tone for all Inland Revenue contact centres in Great Britain, including those dealing with calls concerning the child and working tax credits, WFTC, DPTC, taxes and national insurance. They also give figures for the estimated number of callers attempting those calls. They do not include the many hundreds of thousands of calls handled by the Northern Ireland contact centres, the child benefit centre and the Inland Revenue's network of local offices, using a range of telephony services.

Tables 1 and 2 cover the period August 2002–February 2003 and describes what is one of the country's top 10 call centre operations in broadly steady state, handling around 2 million calls per month. The number of attempted calls not being handled is in line with industry standards when related to the number of callers attempting to make those calls and the sharp peaks of activity which underlie those numbers.

Table 1

Thousands

[3] Where the caller selected an option from the call steering menu and was put in a queue to speak to an adviser but the call was terminated before the caller spoke to an adviser.

Tables 3 and 4, which cover March to August 2003, reflect a period where the Inland Revenue's contact centres dealing with new tax credits inquiries experienced call volumes so large that no call centre could have coped, notwithstanding the measures taken to increase capacity to deal with demand. Comparing the number of calls attempted each month with the number of callers, shows, particularly in April-June, a clear pattern of many callers making multiple calls, often using automatic redial equipment. During the same period, due to slow running of the IT system, there were times when calls took longer to handle, thus making it more difficult for other callers to get through.

Table 3

Thousands

	Number of call attempts	Number of callers[1]
March 2003	10,007	4,005
April 2003	22,600	5,465
May 2003	16,220	4,468

[3] Where the caller selected an option from the call steering menu and was put in a queue to speak to an adviser but the call was terminated before the caller spoke to an adviser.

The figures for July and particularly August—when the number of calls handled only falls just short of the number of callers attempting to get in touch with the Revenue—show a steady return towards steady state with the Revenue's call centre operations much better supported by the IT system.

Money Laundering Regulations

Mr. Best: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what implications the Money Laundering Regulations 2003 will have for client confidentiality between professional accountants and their clients; [131853]

(2) if he will introduce a minimum reporting level in the Money Laundering Regulations 2003 at which professional accountants must report their clients for errors and omissions in their financial affairs; [131854]

(3) what assessment he has made of the impact that the Money Laundering Regulations 2003 will have upon the number of (a) persons and (b) businesses evading tax in the UK. [131855]

Ruth Kelly: I propose shortly to lay before the House the new Money Laundering Regulations, and amending orders to the Proceeds of Crime Act 2002 and Terrorism Act 2000. They will bring those providing accountancy services, along with other specified activities and professions, into the regulated sector for the purposes of the money laundering legislation.

The Proceeds of Crime Act requires a person who has knowledge, suspicion or reasonable grounds for knowledge or suspicion, of money laundering as a result of information or other matter that came to him or her in the course of a business in the regulated sector to report this to a nominated person in that organisation, or to the National Criminal Intelligence Service. This obligation to report relates to the proceeds of any crime—regardless of the sum of money involved and will override, in this case, the duty of confidentiality owed to that client.

The new Money Laundering Regulations will require regulated bodies to put in place the systems that will allow them to discharge their responsibilities under the Proceeds of Crime Act.

The subject of a minimum reporting threshold was debated extensively during the passage of the Proceeds of Crime Bill, and was rejected by Parliament (mainly because of the poor correlation between the sums laundered and the seriousness of the underlying offences). Given that the Act has no minimum reporting level, there can be no such de minimis provision in the Regulations.

The UK takes the view that tax evasion is a serious criminal offence. The strengthening of the whole anti-money laundering regime within the UK, and internationally, will aid in the detection and reduction of money laundering and underlying crime, including tax evasion. Ministerial assurances were given during Parliamentary debate on the Proceeds of Crime Bill that the civil settlement procedure known as "Hansard" by which the Inland Revenue deals with cases of suspected tax evasion, where the taxpayer is actively seeking to set their affairs straight, would be unaffected.

Productivity Performance.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the productivity performance figures were for each year since 1997 expressed as (a) output per worker and (b) output per hour; and if he will make a statement. [132879]

John Healey: In the UK output per worker is measured as output per filled job. Productivity performance figures are published regularly by the Office for National Statistics. Figures for 1997 to 2002 (the last complete year for which figures are available) are given in the table.

Year	Output per filled job (index 2000 = 100)	Output per hour worked (Index 2000 = 100)
1997	94.6	92.2
1998	96.5	94.8
1999	97.6	96.4
2000	100	100
2001	101.1	100.9
2002	102.5	102.6

Public Sector Jobs

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many public sector jobs there were in (a) May 1997, (b) May 2000 and (c) May 2003. [133661]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Redwood, dated 23 October 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question concerning how many public sector jobs there were in (a) May 1997, (b) May 2000 and (c) May 2003. (133661)

Data for periods to May are not available, but the table below shows the job levels in the public sector for the three month periods ending in August for each of the years 1997, 2000 and 2002 (the latest available data).

United Kingdom Companies (Government Subsidy)

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what this year's budget is for Government subsidy of United Kingdom companies. [133663]

Mr. Boateng: There is no Government budget for subsidies. However, the Government seeks to promote economic growth through tackling the five drivers of productivity (innovation, investment, enterprise, competition and skills).

Government Departments that run programmes include the Department of Trade and Industry, whose total budget for business support programmes in 2003–04 stands at £425 million, and the Department for Education and Skills.

DEFENCE

International Security and Peace

Jim Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the British armed forces are engaged in operations aimed at strengthening international security and peace. [132273]

Mr. Ingram: The Aim of the Ministry of Defence, as set out in the Public Service Agreement, is:

> "To deliver security for the people of the United Kingdom and the Overseas Territories by defending them, including against terrorism; and to act as a force for good by strengthening international peace and stability".

The two parts of this aim are interdependent and it is not possible to separate the contribution that individual members of the armed forces are making to each part. However, as at the beginning of October 2003, some 12,500 armed forces personnel and 300 Ministry of Defence civilians were deployed on operations (including United Nations operations) in Iraq, Kosovo, Bosnia, Afghanistan, Cyprus, Sierra Leone, Ethiopia/Eritrea, the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Liberia, and Georgia; and operations directly aimed at strengthening international peace and stability.

New Recruits

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his estimate is of the number of new recruits required to bring each of the Services up to full strength as outlined in the Strategic Defence Review. [132180]

Mr. Caplin: The latest audited armed forces manning shortfall figures available show that, as at 1 July 2003, the armed forces had a deficit of 6,060 trained personnel (Naval Service 1,020; Army 4,220; RAF 820).

Last year, the Services exceeded their numeric recruiting target of 25,381 with 26,220 new entrants. This year, the recruiting target currently stands at 25,618.

Psychiatric Reports

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his policy is on the disclosure of psychiatric reports as part of a submission to the courts pertaining to the character of a soldier charged with unlawful killing; and what rank of officer would be charged with approving the contents of such a submission. [131986]

Mr. Caplin: The Ministry of Defence is required by law to release medical information during the course of certain legal proceedings and its policy is in compliance with the requirements of the Data Protection Act 1998. For the Army, the disclosure of medical records is the responsibility of the Army Medical Directorate. The rank of the individual charged with approving the release will vary from case to case.

Service Veterans

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he has taken to compile a register of Service veterans; what his estimate is of the number of living veterans; and what information is recorded to assess the welfare needs of former members of the armed services. [131960]

Mr. Caplin: The Ministry of Defence does not compile a register of Service veterans. At the first Veterans Forum held on the 24 July 2001 it was agreed with members of the Confederation of British Service and Ex-Service Organisations that the definition of a veteran should be as wide as possible and cover anyone who has ever served in HM forces, their widows/ers and dependants.

I announced, to the House (17 September 2003, Official Report, column 51WS) the publication of a King's College London research paper into areas of unmet need within the veterans' community. This found that although joining the armed forces is generally a positive experience, with the overwhelming majority of Service leavers appearing to do well in civilian life, there is a small minority of Service personnel who have difficulty making the transition back to civilian life.

Personnel most vulnerable to problems of transition include those discharged for medical reasons, including mental health conditions, as well as those dismissed for disciplinary reasons, premature leavers and those discharged as temperamentally unsuitable. The Ministry of Defence is working with a wide range of organisations across Government, the ex-Service voluntary sector and other non-governmental organisations to further improve the support available to these and other ex-Service personnel.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 6 October 2003, Official Report, column 1111W, on chemical weapons, what further discussions have taken place as part of the Helsinki Convention on the Protection of the Marine Environment of the Baltic Sea; what the British contribution was; whether all Government documents relating to the dumping of chemical weapons in the sea after World War Two have been supplied; what proposals he has to assist in the monitoring and prevention of the leakage of chemicals from dumped weapons stock sunk in Skagerrak after World War Two; if he will make a statement on the environmental risks from the chemical weapons dumped in the Baltic and Skagerrak after World War Two; and what is being done to combat dangers to human and marine life. [133202]

Mr. Caplin: I will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my reply will be placed in the Library of the House.

Airfield Support Services Projects

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many employees he estimates are likely to be transferred into the private sector under the Airfield Support Services Projects; and how many of these are employed by his Department's Fire Service. [133429]

Mr. Ingram: No decisions about ASSP will be made until the Consortia bids have been fully evaluated. We would need to be satisfied that a Private Finance Initiative/Public Private Partnership solution offered the most cost-effective solution for the provision of airfield support and wider fire services without compromising operational effectiveness or safety before we decided to outsource this activity. Should a PFI/PPP solution be adopted approximately 2,100 civilian staff would be affected, of which it is estimated that some 1,800 would be eligible for transfer (under the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Act 1981). Of the latter some 1,500 are Defence Fire Service personnel.

Arms Exports

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to support an international arms treaty by 2006 to prevent the export of arms where they contribute to violations of human rights and humanitarian law; and if he will make a statement. [132556]

Mr. MacShane: I have been asked to reply.

The Government fully support the aim of raising export control standards internationally. The UK operates the most vigorous export control policies in the world and actively works to encourage other states to apply similar principles. Any instrument that has the support of all major arms exporting states would be an important step towards this goal. The Government are still considering the ramifications of the proposed treaty; however, it is clearly an important contribution to the international debate on arms export control issues.

Cadet Forces

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of (a) Royal Navy, (b) Royal Air Force and (c) Army personnel were previously members of the cadet forces. [133754]

Mr. Caplin: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Campaign Medal (Iraq)

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to award a campaign medal for servicemen and women who have served in Iraq. [133756]

Mr. Caplin: Following my announcement to the House on 8 July 2003, Official Report, column 47WS, that a campaign medal would be awarded for service during the recent operations in Iraq, officials have been preparing the detailed eligibility criteria to be associated with this award. Once determined, they have to be agreed by the Committee on the Grant of Honours, Decorations and Medals and then passed to Her Majesty the Queen for her approval. The work is progressing well and I hope to make a further announcement shortly.

Corporal Anthony Green

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the rank and regiment was of each officer present and involved in (a) initial questioning of Private William Graham following the fatal shooting of Private Anthony Green, (b) attending the formal interview and (c) attending each interview conducted by the civilian police. [132195]

Mr. Caplin: All of these matters concern the detail of the investigation into the death of Corporal Anthony Green and are matters for the Police Service of Northern Ireland.

Defence Fire Service

Mr. Grogan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence at which locations overseas elements of his Department's Fire Service have been based in each of the last five years. [133419]

Mr. Ingram: Military and civilian personnel have been based, in each of the last five years, in the Falkland Islands, Cyprus, Germany, Gibraltar, Kuwait, Saudi Arabia, Bosnia and Kosovo, and in Iraq since February this year. In addition, there have been the following deployments:

	Location
1999	Italy
1999	Turkey
1999–2000	Croatia
2001	Oman
2002	Afghanistan
2002	United States of America
2003	Republic of South Africa

Departmental Staff (Medical Retirement)

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many employees of the Ministry of Defence have applied for early retirement on medical grounds in each of the last five years; and how many have been (a) granted and (b) refused. [133499]

Mr. Caplin: The information requested is shown in the table.

Year	Applied for Medical Retirement	Approved	Refused
1999	613	550	63
2000	584	480	104
2001	629	465	164
2002	468	326	142
2003[1]	383	227	156

[1] Up to 20 October

Figures for 2003 relate to cases where a decision has been made.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the role is of BMI Ltd in the process of determining applications for medical retirement from the Ministry of Defence; what the average length of time has been for determining these applications; what the rights of appeal are; and if he will make a statement. [133503]

Mr. Caplin: BMTs role in relation to ill-health retirement is in advising employers about whether or not applicants meet the Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme's criteria for access to this benefit, from a medical perspective. The final decision on each ill-health retirement rests with the employer.

Figures for the average length of time it takes to process applications to retire on health grounds are not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

An employee who has additional medical evidence to support his or her case may appeal through a three stage process culminating in a Medical Appeal Board. The employee can appeal against:

termination of employment on medical grounds during probation;

a decision by the Department to retire them on medical grounds;

a refusal by the Department to retire them on medical grounds.

Depleted Uranium

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many rounds of depleted uranium ammunitions were (a) deployed to the Gulf region in 2002, (b) deployed to the Gulf region in 2003, (c) fired during the conflict in Iraq and (d) recovered during UK-led clean-up operations; and if he will make a statement. [133712]

Mr. Ingram: I am withholding information about numbers of rounds of depleted uranium (DU) munitions deployed on operations in accordance with exemption 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. With regards to DU firings during the recent conflict in Iraq, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Defence on 4 June 2003, Official Report, column 445W to the hon. Member for Islington North (Mr. Corbyn). Surface-lying DU fragments continue to be removed from the battlefield as they are discovered, however the details of DU findings are not held centrally.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what programmes his Department has (a) planned, (b) discussed, (c) initiated and (d) concluded to (i) locate and (ii) collect depleted uranium (A) ammunition and (B) ammunition fragments in Iraq; and if he will make a statement. [133713]

Mr. Ingram: All surplus depleted uranium (DU) ammunition has now been returned to the UK. Obvious surface-lying DU fragments continue to be removed from the battlefield as they are discovered.

Deployment

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the deployment of UK forces around the world. [132124]

Mr. Ingram: As of September 2003, some 20,200 British armed forces personnel were deployed on operations and other military tasks around the world, including:

Location	Approximate numbers
Iraq	10,500
Cyprus	3,300
Bosnia	1,430
Brunei	1,120
Falkland Islands	1,120
UN deployments	460
Afghanistan	400
Kosovo	330
Gibraltar	370

In addition, some 11,500 British armed forces personnel are currently stationed in Germany.

Detached Duties

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on recent representations he has received to exempt or reduce council tax charged on service personnel while on detached duties. [133175]

Mr. Caplin [holding answer 20 October 2003]: Service personnel who own or rent a private property remain liable to pay council tax on their property to the local authority concerned while they are absent from that property as this normally remains their "sole or main residence". Local authorities are responsible for administration of council tax, including the interpretation of regulations concerning "sole or main residence". In this respect, Service personnel stationed in the United Kingdom or overseas are treated in the same way as any civilian who is required to live and work away from home.

Foreign Contracts

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the contracts let by the MOD to foreign companies since 1997, stating in each case (a) the company concerned, (b) the country of origin and (c) the amount of the contract; and if he will make a statement. [133775]

Mr. Ingram: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. (Exemption 9 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information).

Global Warming

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what research has been undertaken by the Meteorological Office on the possibility of a release of methane hydrate from sea floor sediments caused by increased sea temperatures resulting from global warming and climate change. [133312]

Mr. Caplin: The Hadley Centre of the Meteorological Office has made a start assessing the potential destabilisation of hydrates. Analysis of results from the Hadley Centre climate models has shown that the most vulnerable deposits are likely to be marine hydrates in the shallow parts of the Arctic Ocean. Furthermore, it has been confirmed that the gradual melting of land ice-sheets (which tends to stabilise marine hydrates by increasing sea-level and thereby the pressure at the bottom of the ocean), will be too slow to counteract the effects of global warming in the 21st century.

King's Own Scottish Borderers

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what deployment is planned for the King's Own Scottish Borderers after their tour of duty in Iraq; what timetable is projected for their transfer from their current deployment to their next deployment; and if he will make a statement. [133652]

Mr. Ingram: Following their tour in Iraq, one Battalion The King's Own Scottish Borderers personnel should return to Catterick by 1 November 2003. They will conduct an Arms Plot move from Catterick to Omagh (Northern Ireland) during January 2004, on completion of which they will assume operational responsibilities in Northern Ireland; this will be a two year residential and accompanied tour. Pre-deployment training for Northern Ireland begins on 10 November. Post Operational Tour Leave (POTL) will not be affected as steps have been taken to ensure that individuals can take POTL in a reasonable timeframe and within the constraints imposed by their Training commitments and Arms Plot move.

Lance Corporal Graham

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date Lance Corporal William Graham was discharged from Her Majesty's armed forces. [132194]

Mr. Caplin: In accordance with the Data Protection Act 1998, I am unable to make public any personal data relating to Lance Corporal Graham.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his policy is concerning the award of promotion to a soldier while released on bail on charges of unlawful killing; and what considerations were involved in the decision to promote Private William Graham. [132197]

Mr. Caplin: Policy on manning issues governing soldiers' careers is set out in The Queens Regulations for the Army. In accordance with the Data Protection Act 1998, I am unable to make public any personal data relating to Lance Corporal Graham unless the relevant conditions are met.

Manning Control Points

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when manning control points have been suspended by the Army; what the reasons were; and if he will make a statement. [133352]

Mr. Caplin [holding answer 22 October 2003]: The Manning Control Point policy has not been suspended by the Army.

Iraq

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the amount and type of ordnance dropped on Iraq during Operation Telic; and what the overall cost was of the munitions used during the conflict. [111812]

Mr. Ingram: During Operation Telic RAF aircraft released some 840 weapons over Iraq: The types were:

Stormshadow stand-off missile
ALARM anti-radiation missile
Paveway II laser-guided-bomb
Enhanced Paveway II laser-guided bomb
Enhanced Paveway III laser-guided bomb
AGM-65 Maverick air-to-ground missile
RBL755 cluster bomb
1,000 lb inert bomb
500 lb inert bomb
CRV-7 Rocket Pod
AIM-9L Sidewinder air-to-air missile

Calculating the costs of munitions consumed during the Coalition's military action will take some time since they will include the cost of ammunition, bombs and guided weapons consumed in excess of peacetime levels and the cost of repairing and replacing ordnance destroyed or damaged. Once this work is complete I will write to the hon. Member.

Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the use of cluster bombs during the Iraq conflict. [132440]

Mr. Ingram: We made every effort to minimise the impact on the Iraqi population of the coalition's military action. Cluster bombs are lawful weapons and were used by United Kingdom forces in a manner consistent with our obligations under international law, against fielded Iraqi military forces in the open or on the periphery of built up areas.

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what methods have been used to date to estimate the number of Iraqi civilians killed by United Kingdom or United States military forces in Iraq (a) since 20 March and (b) since the end of the conflict; and what steps are being taken to increase the reliability of these assessments. [133307]

Mr. Ingram: I refer my hon. Friend to the answers given to the hon. Member for Lewes (Mr. Baker) on 16 June 2003, Official Report, column 55W, and to the hon. Member for Carmarthen East & Dinefwr (Mr. Price) on 14 October 2003, Official Report, column 7W, respectively.

Missile Defence

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment has been made of the use of missile defence for destroying satellites. [133233]

Mr. Ingram: We have made no such assessment.

MOD Estate

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the (a) name and (b) location of premises used, leased and owned by private companies on MOD property, stating in each case (i) the company concerned and (ii) the nature of the relationship. [133776]

Mr. Caplin: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Precision-guided Munitions

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many types of precision guided munitions are in use by the RAF; and which aircraft are capable of operating precision guided munitions. [133040]

Mr. Ingram: 13 types of air launched and one ground launched Precision Guided Munitions are currently in use with the Royal Air Force. Of current in-service aircraft, Tornado F3, Tornado GR4, Jaguar, Harrier, Hawk and Nimrod MR2 are capable of carrying and releasing Precision Guided Munitions. The type of Precision Guided Munition that is carried varies from aircraft to aircraft.

RAF Aircraft

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many RAF aircraft of each type are based outside the UK; and where they are based. [133041]

Mr. Ingram: At 16 October 2003 the numbers of RAF aircraft by type based outside the United Kingdom are located as follows:

Area	Aircraft	Number	Location
Balkans	Merlin	2	Banja Luca, Bosnia
East Med	Griffin	4	Akrotiri, Cyprus
Middle East	Tornado GR4	6	Al Udeid, Qatar
	VC10	2	Muharraq, Bahrain
	C130J Hercules	2	Basrah, Iraq
	CH47 Chinook	5	Basrah, Iraq
	HS125 Dominie	1	Basrah, Iraq
	Nimrod MR2	2	Seeb, Oman
Afghanistan	C130J Hercules	1	Kabul
Falklands	CH47 Chinook	1
	Sea King	2
	VC10	1
	C130K Hercules	1
	Tornado F3	4

In addition, the Joint Helicopter Command has helicopters based in Basrah, Iraq. On 16 October 2003, the numbers were as follows:

Area	Aircraft	Number	Location
Middle East	Sea King	5	Basrah, Iraq
	Lynx	5	Basrah, Iraq
	Gazelle	3	Basrah, Iraq

RAF Lyneham

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 17 September 2003, ref 130872, if he will place the study of the commercial potential of RAF Lyneham in the Library. [132932]

Mr. Ingram: I am withholding this information under Exemption 13 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Sri Lanka

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his Department's role in the Peace Building and Reconciliation Strategy in Sri Lanka; and if he will make a statement. [133711]

Mr. Ingram: The Ministry of Defence works closely with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and Department for International Development on the Peacebuilding and Reconciliation Strategy for Sri Lanka. The Defence Adviser and his Assistant in Colombo represent MOD interests on the High Commission's Steering Committee on the Strategy and lead on Defence liaison in country.

Suez Medal

Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether eligible former members of the military Services will need to apply to receive the Suez Emergency Medal. [133625]

Mr. Caplin: I refer the hon. Member to the written ministerial statement I made earlier today, which details the addresses of the appropriate medal offices and Command Paper 5999 for the eligibility criteria for the award of the Suez medal.

Tomahawk

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Tomahawk cruise missiles have been used in the last nine months; and at what cost their replacements are being supplied. [133394]

Mr. Ingram: I refer the hon. Member to answer I gave on 9 June 2003, Official Report, column 652W, to the hon. Member for Hereford (Mr. Keetch).

Unexploded Ordnance

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what programmes his Department has (a) planned, (b) discussed, (c) initiated and (d) concluded to (i) locate and (ii) collect depleted uranium (A) ammunitions and (B) ammunition fragments in Afghanistan; what other programmes are in place in Afghanistan for these purposes; and if he will make a statement. [133642]

Mr. Ingram: Depleted Uranium (DU) ammunition was not used by Allied Forces in Afghanistan.

The United Nations Environment Programme Post Conflict Assessment Unit (UNEP PCAU) published the findings of their post-conflict environmental assessment of Afghanistan earlier this year. The report does not cite uranium or depleted uranium as causes of concern.

LEADER OF THE HOUSE

Legislation

Mr. Shepherd: To ask the Leader of the House if he will list for each Bill introduced in (a) Session 2001–02 and (b) Session 2002–03 (i) the date on which the first programme motion relating to each Bill was agreed to by the House, (ii) the dates of further programme motions agreed to by the House relating to the Committee stage, (iii) the dates on which programme motions relating to (A) Standing Committee proceedings, (B) dates for conclusion of proceedings in Standing Committee and (C) proceedings in consideration on Report or on Third Reading were agreed to in Standing Committee, (iv) whether Sessional Order B relating to programming committees was disapplied, (v) the dates on which further programme motions relating to consideration on Report or to proceedings on Third Reading were agreed to by the House, indicating whether the motion was (X) pursuant to a resolution of the programming committee, (Y) pursuant to a resolution of the Standing Committee and (Z) not pursuant to either and (vi) the dates on which programme motions relating to proceedings on consideration of Lords amendments and Lords messages were agreed to by the House. [134055]

Mr. Hain: The information requested is a matter of public record. The Sessional Returns 2001–02 provide for each public Bill introduced in that Session the date of all programme motions agreed to by the House, and whether they were pursuant to a report. Information for the current session is available from the Votes and Proceedings, and will be collated in due course in the Sessional Return. Information on proceedings in Standing Committee is obtainable from the Standing Committee Hansard.

Mr. Shepherd: To ask the Leader of the House if he will list for each Bill introduced in (a) Session 2001–02 and (b) Session 2002–03 (i) the number of sittings in Committees, (ii) the number of knives (A) for which provision was made and (B) which took effect, (iii) the number of groups of amendments not reached because a knife took effect, (iv) the number of clauses on which the question that the clause stand part was not reached because a knife took effect, (v) for how many days each Bill was considered at Report stage, (vi) the number of knives (X) for which provision was made and (Y) which took effect at report stage, (vii) the number of groups of amendments not reached because a knife took effect and (viii) how long was spent in debate (1) at second Reading, (2) in Committee, (3) in consideration on Report and (4) on Third Reading. [134056]

Mr. Hain: The information requested is a matter of public record. As the hon. Member is aware, the Public Bill Office has provided detailed information on programming in the current Session to the Modernisation Committee.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Post Office Card Account

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what guidance his Department has made available to sub-postmasters on promoting the Post Office card account to their customers. [133386]

Mr. Timms: None. The promotion of Post Office products and services is a matter for the company. Post Office Ltd. is providing information to customers and guidance to sub-postmasters on the range of banking options available at post offices, including the Post Office card account.

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many Post Office card accounts she estimates will be opened. [133389]

Mr. Timms: I understand from the Department for Work and Pensions that as of 3 October 2003, 1.25 million customers had requested a Post Office card account and that the Government now expects the total number of card accounts to exceed the 3 million operating assumption.

The number of customers who will eventually choose to open a Post Office card account is difficult to predict: at this stage, as it will depend on a large number of future individual choices.

Arms Exports

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Brent, North (Mr. Gardiner) of 6 October 2003, Official Report, column 1070W, on arms exports, if she will publish the statement to which reference is made. [133317]

Nigel Griffiths: The Government have taken note of the Fund for Peace's submission of 1 May 2003 concerning the US laws on arms brokering, and on this matter, I refer my hon. Friend to my answer of 9 June 2003, Official Report, column 630W.

Biomass Renewables

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representatations she has received from (a) organisations and (b) individuals on biomass renewable projects. [131358]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 14 October 2003]: Ministers and officials have received a number of representations from organisations and officials on biomass renewable projects covering a number of issues, in particular, the issues of fuel supplies, finance, planning and technology.

BSkyB

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on early day motion 1711, Monopoly of BSkyB. [133993]

Mr. Sutcliffe: This is a matter for the Office of Fair Trading to consider. It would not be appropriate for Government to intervene.

Building Control Work

David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the proportion of building control work carried out by the private sector in (a) 1987, (b) 1992, (c) 1997 and (d) 2002; what assessment she has made of the effect of the trend upon standards; and if she will make a statement. [132894]

Keith Hill: I have been asked to reply.

Statistics on the market shares of the local authority and private sectors of building control are not held centrally, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The terms of reference of the Building Control Performance Standards Advisory Group include the drawing up of recommendations on performance indicators for the effective delivery of building control, and on procedures for the monitoring of building control bodies. I look forward to seeing the recommendations of the Advisory Group in due course.

Corporation Tax

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what research her Department has conducted on the likely impact of rates of corporation tax in countries set to join the EU upon levels of inward investment into the UK. [132862]

Ruth Kelly: I have been asked to reply.

Figures from the OECD show that the UK is a relatively lightly taxed economy. Since 1997, the Government have introduced a wide-ranging package of measures to make the UK an attractive place for business to locate and to help small businesses, including cuts in the corporation tax, an R&D tax credit for all companies, and an exemption for gains and losses on most substantial shareholdings. In August 2003, the Government published a consultation document ("Corporation Tax Reform") on proposals for taking forward the Government's commitment to ensuring that the UK has a competitive and fair tax system.

Directory Inquiries

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the response by Oftel to problems raised by customers with the new 118 directory assistance providers. [132851]

Mr. Timms: The Government welcome in principle the opening up of the Directory Inquiries Market to competition. However, the implementation of Directory Inquiries liberalisation is a matter for the Office of Telecommunications (Oftel) and the enforcement of the regulatory regime is for the regulator, the Independent Committee for the Supervision of Standards of Telephone Information Services (ICSTIS).

Fireworks

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what further measures are being taken to enforce the age restriction on the sale of fireworks. [133216]

Mr. Sutcliffe: No further measures are being taken to enforce the age restriction on the sale of fireworks under the Fireworks (Safety) Regulations 1997. Recent research undertaken indicates that trading standards departments generally give high-priority to firework matters during the firework season including enforcement of the age restriction. This often includes test purchasing by under 18s in many trading standards authority areas.

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures are being taken to prevent firework-related injuries. [133225]

Mr. Sutcliffe: The DTI's annual firework safety campaign aims to encourage the public to take care when using fireworks in order to help reduce the number of firework-related injuries. This year's campaign is focusing on the misuse of fireworks by young teenagers and the safe use of sparklers by young children.

Also the provisions of the Fireworks (Safety) Regulations 1997 governing the safety of fireworks used by the public and the fireworks industry's voluntary ban on air bomb type fireworks both help in preventing firework-related injuries.

Investment in Canada

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will break down by region and by (a) industrial and (b) economic sector investment by UK companies in Canada in each year since 1997; and if she will make a statement. [133650]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Data on investment by UK companies in Canada is available only by industry sector as shown in the following table. Data for 2002 will be published early next year.

UK foreign direct investment in Canada by industry 1997–2001

Post Office Closures

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many post offices have closed under the Urban Reinvention Programme. [133508]

Mr. Timms: I understand that Post Office Ltd. produces information on post office closures, including those made under the urban reinvention programme, on a quarterly basis. There were 342 closures under the Urban Reinvention Programme to end of June 2003, the latest quarter for which figures are currently available.

Quality Mark

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much has been spent by her Department on running the Quality Mark scheme since its introduction; and if she will make a statement. [132847]

Nigel Griffiths: From its introduction until March 2003, approximately £6.7 million has been spent on development, marketing and running costs of the scheme.

The Quality Mark is viewed by the construction industry as a valuable marketing tool to guarantee high quality work, underpinned by independent corroboration of a contractor's competence.

Leading trade associations in the sector support the scheme and are working with the DTI on Quality Mark.

Recycled Rubber

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much recycled rubber was imported in each of the last five years; what proportion imports accounted for of all recycled rubber used in each of those years; and if she will make a statement. [132670]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Figures for the import of recycled rubber are:

Kilograms

	Imports
	Reclaimed rubber[1]	Waste rubber
1998	2,712,604	4,038,920
1999	2,200,850	3,442,150
2000	1,186,301	3,807,662
2001	1,325,191	5,084,458
2002	2,246,603	6,749,131

[1] Reclaimed rubber in primary forms or in plates, sheets or strip (CN 400300.
[2] Waste parings and scrap of unhardened rubber and powders and granules obtained therefrom (CN400400).

Although there is some limited information on the sales of reclaimed rubber by UK manufacturers [PRODCOM Report PRA 25130, available from the National Statistics website http://www.statistics.gov.uk/onlineproducts/PRODCOM2001_annual.asp], it excludes reclaimed rubber not sold because it is subsequently used by the same manufacturer. It also excludes such recycled rubber products as those obtained by cutting up worn-out tyres. As such it is not possible to produce an estimate of the use of recycled rubber.

Relocation Abroad

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps are being taken to encourage UK based companies not (a) to relocate off-shore and (b) to transfer jobs to other countries. [133521]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: This Government believe that, as UK based companies are operating in an increasingly competitive, global marketplace, they have the freedom to choose where to locate in order to maximise their competitive advantage. The Government are continuing to create a competitive environment in the UK where an educated and skilled work force, better infrastructure and access to European and world markets has made this country the leading country for Foreign Direct Investment in Europe and second in the world only to the United States.

The UK is a trading nation. Our economic long-term interest must be based on our ability to innovate to produce high value-added goods and services which need a highly skilled work force, high calibre managers, forward looking unions and knowledgeable consumers. A protectionist approach would damage the interests of the UK. Figures on the potential for outsourcing do not take account of the fact that the UK could gain jobs in some sectors as a result of increased competition for services. We are the world's second largest exporters of service products especially in financial services. Our service exports at £82 billion are larger than our service imports at £69 billion. Growing international competition in services could see us gain more jobs then we lose.

Road Haulage

Phil Sawford: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations her Department has received regarding (a) Drivertime Recruitment Ltd. and (b) Drivernet Ltd. of Manchester. [132201]

Mr. Sutcliffe: For reasons of confidentiality my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry cannot comment upon the affairs of individual companies.

The Department's Companies Investigation Branch is however always ready to receive for consideration any information with regard to companies whose activities give cause for concern.

I have already responded to a letter received from the hon. Member for Kettering with regard to this matter.

Sub-post Offices

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much of the package of funding for the Post Office Ltd. which the Government has provided to maintain the rural post office network will be spent on Scottish post offices. [133487]

Mr. Timms: The package of support that the Government have made available for the rural post office network is for the maintenance of the rural network across the UK, including Scotland. The Post Office does not account for assistance by country. Of 8,465 rural post offices in the UK, 1,205 are in Scotland.

Overall, the Government have made £450 million available to Post Office Ltd. to maintain a rural post office network for a three year period from 2003–04 to 2005–06. This breaks down as follows:

	£ million
Assigned office payments (fixed payments to sub-postmasters)	198
Support costs (provision of computer services, secure cash delivery etc)	227

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what guidelines the Government has set Post Office Ltd. in its use of funds provided to maintain the rural post office network in relation to the devolved regions. [133860]

Mr. Timms: The Government have placed on Post Office Ltd. an obligation to use the funds provided to maintain a rural post office network throughout the UK. This obligation extends to the devolved regions. The obligation is intended to be achieved by ensuring that there are no avoidable closures of post office branches in rural areas before 1 April 2006.

In determining whether an individual closure is avoidable, Post Office Ltd. will follow the provisions of an agreed code of practice.

Trading Statistics

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on trade levels to EU countries since UK membership in 1973; and what effect this has had on UK trade to non-EU countries. [132937]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The UK's trade with the EU[1] has grown steadily since UK membership in 1973. The value of the UK's total goods trade (exports and imports) with other EU countries has increased 20-fold since 1973 compared to a 12-fold increase in total goods trade with non-EU countries. Consequently, the EU's share of the UK's total trade in goods rose from 45 per cent. in 1973 to 57 per cent. in 2002.

Data for trade in services with all other current members of the EU before 1992 is not readily available, therefore it is not easy to calculate the exact increase in UK trade for goods and services since 1973. The UK's exports of goods and services to the EU are now worth £142 billion and imports from the EU are worth £166 billion, making the value of the UK's trade with the EU £308 billion. The EU accounts for 53 per cent. of the UK's total trade, but for trade in services the proportion is 43 per cent.

The UK's membership and increasing economic integration with the EU, in particular following the Single Market Programme, has generated considerable opportunities for UK businesses. This has been behind the substantial growth in UK trade with the EU. But, as the 12-fold rise in UK trade in goods with non-EU members demonstrates, this has not been at the expense of overall trade with non-EU members, which has continued to grow rapidly.

[1] All figures refer to the UK's trade with the other current 14 members of the EU.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Maintenance/Renewal Contracts

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission what the total cost was of the recall of the House from 8 September to 18 September; how many maintenance and renewal contracts were deferred for this period; and what the additional staff cost was. [132875]

Sir Archy Kirkwood: I refer the hon. Lady to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Lewes on 21 October 2003, Official Report, column 504W for details of the costs of the September sitting of the House.

No maintenance or renewal contracts were deferred during this period, because the majority were programmed after the September sitting was announced. The few which were organised before this were re-planned or re-programmed to fit in with the daily sitting times. The costs of this are included in the figures given in my previous answer.

TRANSPORT

Aircraft Noise

David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to include the measurement of aircraft noise in the noise mapping the Department is required to carry out under the terms of the EU Noise Directive 2002/49/EC; and what methods it will employ to measure these noise levels. [133774]

Mr. McNulty: Major airports will be covered by the Directive. A major airport is defined in the Directive as a civil airport, designated by the member state, which has more than 50,000 movements (a movement being a take-off or a landing) per year excluding those purely for training purposes on light aircraft. The noise maps will be produced by computation using the standard methodology as set out in ECAC Document 29.

Airport Capacity (South-East)

John McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends to make planning decisions involving airport capacity, before he has decided how to tackle long term environmental damage consequent on them. [133333]

Mr. McNulty: The air transport White Paper will not take planning decisions, but will set out a long term framework of Government policy for airport development and seek to maximise the beneficial aspects of aviation and minimise the negative effects. In deciding on policies on new airport capacity, we will take account of the environmental impacts and consider measures to control and mitigate those impacts.

Aviation Security

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what recent assessment has been made of the security threat posed against civil aviation by terrorists using portable ground to air missiles; [133129]

(2) what security measures have been put in place at airports and surrounding areas to protect aircraft from potential terrorist attacks; [133130]

(3) what recent discussions have taken place with (a) airlines and (b) other Governments on international threats posed by terrorists with portable missile units. [133131]

Mr. McNulty: The terrorist threat to UK civil aviation, including from portable ground to air missiles or MANPADS, is kept under active review, as too are the security measures needed to protect UK aviation against terrorism in all its various guises. The potential threat from MANPADS is among those being addressed, including through joint work with industry and with foreign partners, both bilaterally and in the relevant multilateral fora. Security considerations make it inappropriate to comment further on these matters.

Buses

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the arrangements for checking increases in costs of tenders for bus services; what the percentage change in tender costs to local authorities in the North West for bus services has been over the last five years; and what arrangements are in place to ensure that local authorities can specify (a) times, (b) frequencies, (c) routes, (d) fares and (e) standards of bus journey. [132560]

Mr. McNulty: We keep a close watch on increased tender prices through our own research and the regular survey by the Association of Transport Co-ordinating Officers. We also have frequent discussions with local authorities, for example through the Bus Partnership Forum, about funding of bus services.

Our information is that the prices for contracts let in the North West region in 2002–03 were on average around 17 per cent. above the price when the contract was last let (typically two to three years before). There was significant variation between authorities within the region. Information is not available for the region for contracts let in previous years.

In using their subsidy powers under the Transport Act 1985, local authorities may specify contract conditions on all the aspects listed at (a) to (e). About 17 per cent. of local bus services are provided under these powers.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the (a) local authorities and (b) bus companies which use CCTV (i) on buses, (ii) at bus stops and (iii) on buses and at bus stops, listing the (A) the number of attacks reported and (B) the cost of vandalism (1) 12 months before and (2) after implementation; and if he will make a statement; [133947]

(2) what measures have been taken to encourage (a) local authorities and (b) bus companies to improve lighting at bus stops; and if he will make a statement; [133948]

(3) if he will list the (a) local authorities and (b) bus companies that have improved lighting at bus stops, providing details of (i) the number of attacks reported and (ii) the cost of vandalism (A) 12 months before and (B) after implementation; and if he will make a statement; [133949]

(4) what measures have been taken to encourage (a) local authorities and (b) bus companies to cut back vegetation at bus stops; and if he will make a statement; [133950]

(5) if he will list the (a) local authorities and (b) bus companies that have cut back vegetation at bus stops, listing (i) the number of attacks reported and (ii) the cost of vandalism (A) 12 months before and (B) after implementation; and if he will make a statement; [133951]

(6) what measures have been taken to encourage (a) local authorities and (b) bus companies to employ full-time schools liaison officers to tackle anti-social behaviour on buses; and if he will make a statement; [134019]

(7) if he will list the (a) local authorities and (b) bus companies which have employed full-time schools liaison officers to tackle anti-social behaviour; what estimate he has made of the cost of vandalism (i) before and (ii) after the scheme was set up; and if he will make a statement. [134020]

Mr. McNulty: In April 2002 the Department published "Get on board: an agenda for improving personal security in bus travel", including guidance and good practice case studies on measures that can be taken by bus companies and local authorities. This included advice on the use of CCTV on buses and at bus stations, the need for good lighting at bus stops, the need to ensure that bus stops and shelters should be kept unobscured by vegetation and on employing schools liaison officers.

The Government have established the Safer Travel on Buses and Coaches Panel (STOP), bringing together bus operators, local authorities, police, unions, and other stakeholders to exchange and disseminate good practice in tackling problems caused by crime and anti-social behaviour around bus and coach travel. It is currently updating the booklet "Protecting Bus and Coach Crews". This includes advice on CCTV, good lighting and links with schools.

In its recent publication "Travelling to School: an action plan", the Government ask schools and local authorities to work with the police, bus operators and the local community to promote positive behaviour by pupils on their journey to and from school.

Data on the extent to which bus companies and local authorities have applied measures such as CCTV, better lighting, cutting back vegetation and working with schools and their effect on incidences of vandalism, assaults and anti-social behaviour are not collected centrally. While the Government provide advice on good practice, its implementation is a matter for operators and local authorities.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures have been taken to encourage (a) local authorities and (b) bus companies to widen pavements at bus stops on busy streets; and if he will make a statement. [133952]

Mr. McNulty: It is for local highway authorities to ensure that footways are suited to the surroundings and pedestrian numbers. The Department has published Local Transport Note 1/97 "Keeping Buses Moving", and "Inclusive Mobility—A Guide to Best Practice on Access to Pedestrian and Transport Infrastructure". These give some advice on local build-outs of the footway at bus stops (sometimes called "bus stop boarders") and recommendations for footway widths at bus stops.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what measures have been taken to encourage (a) local authorities and (b) bus companies to offer free travel for under-16s on buses when accompanied by an adult; and if he will make a statement; [134017]

(2) if he will list the (a) local authorities and (b) bus companies which offer free travel for under-16s on buses when accompanied by an adult; how many passengers under 16 were carried (i) before, and (ii) after implementation; and if he will make a statement. [134018]

Mr. McNulty: There have been no measures to encourage local authorities and bus companies to offer free travel for under-16s on buses when accompanied by an adult. Free travel to and from school is provided by local education authorities under the education acts for school children up to the age of 16 living more than the statutory walking distances from school. Under the Transport Act 1985 local authorities have a discretionary power to provide concessionary travel for children of school age. That power applies to all journeys, not just those to or from school.

We do not collect information on what bus companies offer for this age group nor on how many passengers under 16 were carried before and after implementation of any discount schemes.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what measures have been taken to encourage (a) local authorities and (b) bus companies to implement travel training courses for bus travel for the (i) elderly and (ii) disabled; and if he will make a statement; [134022]

(2) if he will list the (a) local authorities and (b) bus companies which have implemented a travel training scheme; how many (i) elderly and (ii) people with disabilities have attended; and if he will make a statement. [134023]

Mr. McNulty: We recognise the value of travel training and familiarisation for older and disabled people. Over the last year, for example, we have been monitoring a programme at a school in Yorkshire to help young people with learning disabilities to be able to travel on mainstream services. We aim to publish guidance on the lessons learnt in that programme for wider dissemination.

We currently have no formal schemes in place to promote such activity within the bus industry or within local authorities. We do, however, take every opportunity to promote such initiatives in discussions with them.

There is no centrally held data on individual schemes that have been introduced.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the (a) local authorities and (b) bus companies that have widened pavements at bus stops on busy roads, providing details of the number of pedestrian casualties (i) 12 months before and (ii) after implementation; and if he will make a statement. [134098]

Mr. McNulty: This is a matter for local highway authorities. The Department does not hold data on which local authorities have widened pavements at bus stops on busy roads, nor on pedestrian casualties at those locations.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what measures have been taken to encourage (a) local authorities and (b) bus companies to introduce low-floor buses; and if he will make a statement; [134105]

(2) if he will list the (a) local authorities and (b) bus companies that have introduced low-floor buses; how many (i) passengers were carried, (ii) disabled passengers were carried (A) before and (B) after implementation and (iii) services have been run; and if he will make a statement. [134114]

Mr. McNulty: In recent years, low-floor buses have been introduced in increasing numbers. This change was promoted both by the Department, through a series of research and demonstration projects, and by our statutory advisers, the Disabled Persons Transport Advisory Committee, who produced a recommended specification for low-floor buses which they disseminated widely.

Since 31 December 2000, all new buses and coaches over 7.5 tonnes and with a carrying capacity of more than 22 passengers, which have been introduced on local and scheduled services, have had to meet the access requirements of the Public Service Vehicles Accessibility Regulations 2000. Those Regulations, which were made under the Disability Discrimination Act 1995, set down minimum access requirements for vehicles to address the needs of disabled people including wheelchair users. The Regulations do allow for high-floor vehicles, but in the case of full size single deck and double deck buses, production has now moved to low-floor designs.

About one-third of full size local buses are now low-floor.

There are no centrally held statistics about bus patronage before and after introduction of low-floor vehicles. However, from the research which the Department carried out it, was clear that people were able to board and alight from these vehicles more easily, and that with the elimination of steps in the entrance, many more elderly and disabled people would be able to use buses and to use them for longer.

Of course, having the right vehicle is only part of the solution. We have also made changes to the Public Service Vehicles (Conduct of Drivers, Inspectors, Conductors and Passengers) Regulations to introduce new duties on drivers to provide reasonable assistance to disabled passengers. The Department is also working with TransFed—the training body for the bus industry—to update their NVQ disability awareness training material for bus drivers.

Concessionary Travel

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what estimate he has made of the costs to (a) each local authority, (b) London boroughs and (c) local government as a whole of extending the national minimum standards for concessionary travel schemes to give people over the age of 70 a 100 per cent. discount on fares; [133960]

(2) what estimate he has made of the increase in the local government finance settlement necessary fully to reimburse local government for the costs of increasing the national minimum standards for concessionary travel schemes from a 50 per cent. discount to a (a) 60 per cent., (b) 75 per cent., (c) 90 per cent. and (d) 100 per cent. discount for (i) people over the age of 60, (ii) the disabled and (iii) in total; [133961]

(3) what estimate he has made of the cost to (a) each local authority, (b) London boroughs and (c) local government as a whole, of increasing the national minimum standards for concessionary travel schemes from a 50 per cent. discount to a (i) 60 per cent., (ii) 75 per cent., (iii) 90 per cent. and (iv) 100 per cent. discount for (A) people over the age of 60 years, (B) the disabled and (C) in total; [133962]

(4) what estimate he has made of the change in the local government finance settlement necessary fully to reimburse local government for the costs of extending the national minimum standards for concessionary travel schemes to give people over the age of 70 a 100 per cent. discount on fares. [133963]

Mr. McNulty: The extension this year of the minimum statutory requirement to men aged 60 to 65 cost £50 million per year. The Government do not plan further extensions of concessionary fares. We estimate that free concessionary travel for pensioners in England (women aged 60 and over, men aged 65 and over) would cost in excess of an extra £300 million a year. We have not costed all the variants listed in the question and could do so only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Dodds: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what his policy is on the recognition and acceptance of public transport concessionary passes, issued in Northern Ireland, by public transport services in England. [133242]

Dr. Howells: There are no arrangements in place between England and Northern Ireland over the recognition and acceptance of concessionary travel passes, nor do we have plans to set up such a scheme.

In England, local authorities implement concessionary bus travel schemes for their eligible residents. Beyond the statutory half-fare minimum requirement, local authorities are free to determine the extent and generosity of their schemes within their areas.

Local authorities can negotiate with train operating companies to participate in local concessionary rail fare schemes, or ask the Strategic Rail Authority to require franchised train operators to participate in them. The SRA will only do this if it does not result in additional cost to it or the operator. In addition, national discounted railcard schemes for the elderly, disabled and young in Great Britain are protected by the Railways Act 1993.

MOT Certificates

Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many vehicles he estimates are on British roads without a valid MOT certificate. [133728]

Mr. McNulty: The information is not currently available. The Vehicle and Operator Services Agency (VOSA) is responsible for supervision of the MOT testing scheme and is involved in a private finance initiative contract with Siemens Business Services to establish a central MOT database which will hold information on every test carried out in Great Britain.

Roll-out is currently planned for 2004. Twelve months after the completion of roll-out, when the database is fully populated, it will be possible to compare the MOT data held by VOSA against the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency's (DVLA) database of registered vehicles to establish the number of vehicles without current MOT certificates.

Port of Tyne Authority

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with Port of Tyne Authority concerning issues of environmental pollution connected to the dredging of the river. [133391]

Dr. Howells: Officials from the Transport team at the Government Office for the North East have held recent, without prejudice discussions with representatives from the Port of Tyne Authority about the port's application to DEFRA for a licence for the dredging and sea disposal of contaminated sediment from various locations on the River Tyne. This matter is, of course, the subject of on-going negotiations between the port and DEFRA.

Railway Stations (Wales)

Chris Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the improvements to railway stations in Wales, broken down by (a) location and (b) cost in each of the last five years; and what the proposed improvements are for the next three years. [133054]

Mr. McNulty [pursuant to the answer, 22 October 2003, Official Report, c. 567–68W]: In September 2002 £2.4 million was provided by the Strategic Rail Authority (SRA) for the installation of 'Inform Cymru' at 46 stations in Wales; in April 2002 £99,000 for additional car parking spaces, improved security and better passenger facilities at Haverfordwest Station; and £1.1 million for a new waiting room, toilet with disabled access, CCTV and Customer Information Service/ PublicAnnouncement (CIS/PA) at Trefforest Station.

The new Wales and Borders franchise agreement which was signed on 20 October 2003 provides £400,000 for improving car parks, including those at Cardiff Central (Wood Street) and Newport. Under the Vale of Glamorgan scheme the Welsh Assembly Government (WAG) is meeting the costs for the building of the two new stations at Rhoose and Llanwit Major. The Vale of Glamorgan line is expected to re-open in December 2004. The Welsh Assembly Government has also set aside £2.5 million for Wales and Borders to improve 47 of their stations before April 2004. The Ebbw Valley scheme, which provides for up to six new stations, is still under consideration by the Welsh Assembly Government.

Railways

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans the railway industry has for station renewal and improvement in the Thames Valley. [133665]

Dr. Howells: The Strategic Rail Authority (SRA), in conjunction with Reading borough council, is developing a business case for major capacity enhancements at Reading. The project would require a Transport and Works Act Order, an application for which would be made around 2005. The business case will form part of that application.

Local stakeholders are also looking to commission a feasibility study on a proposal to relocate Oxford station to increase platform capacity.

More generally, the SRA has held a competition for the right to run the Thames Trains franchise in the 2004–06 period. The competition required bidders to propose ways of improving station environments. The bids are currently being evaluated by the Strategic Rail Authority. A decision is expected shortly.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans (a) he and (b) the railway industry have to expand track capacity on (i) the Reading to Waterloo line and (ii) the Great Western Reading to Paddington line. [133666]

Dr. Howells: The Great Western Main Line will be the subject of one of the first of the Strategic Rail Authority's route utilisation strategies, on which the SRA expect to consult in summer 2004. The work will help inform decisions on any future route upgrades.

Combining the Thames, Great Western and Wessex franchises from 2006 will create a single operator at Paddington and so free up some capacity. The SRA are also considering track layout revisions at Reading which, subject to affordability, could be undertaken when resignalling takes place in 2008.

River Traffic

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received on the introduction of a navigation authority in England to regulate river traffic; and if he will make a statement. [134048]

Dr. Howells: No representations have been received.

Road Journey Times

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to reduce journey times on roads. [133204]

Dr. Howells: The 10-year plan for transport published in July 2000, set out a £180 billion integrated investment strategy in roads, rail and local transport of which £59 billion was for roads. The Government's clear priority is to reduce congestion, and offer a wider choice of quicker, safer, more reliable travel on road, rail and other public transport.

The Secretary of State for Transport made a statement to the House of Commons on 9 July in which he announced details of a £7 billion package of improvements to keep the traffic flowing on some of Britain's most congested strategic roads which will be funded out of the roads element of the 10-year plan.

Road Safety

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the action being taken to improve road safety on the A414 between Chelmsford and the M11/Harlow junction. [132928]

Dr. Howells: The section of the A414 between Chelmsford and the M11/Harlow junction is the responsibility of Essex County Council which has identified it as one of the routes to be the subject of a priority route study. Initial analysis has been undertaken and accident measures are being determined for implementation in the next financial year, subject to the availability of funding.

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidance his Department provides on the siting of speed limit signs on roads. [133356]

Dr. Howells: Guidance exists in the form of traffic advisory leaflet 1/95, "Speed Limit Signs, a Guide to Good Practice", copies of which are available in the Libraries of the House. It is also available via the Department for Transport website.

Traffic Commissioners

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the statutory functions of traffic commissioners; what powers he has to intervene in the decisions made by traffic commissioners; if he will list the public inquiries called by traffic commissioners in the past year and the basis on which these inquiries were called; and if he will publish the guidance issued to traffic commissioners in respect of self-employed traffic managers. [132777]

Mr. McNulty: Traffic commissioners are statutorily responsible for licensing the operators of heavy goods vehicles and public service vehicles in their area, including taking disciplinary action against operators who breach the conditions of their licence: the conduct of vocational drivers, and for the registration of local bus services. The traffic commissioner for Scotland is also responsible for taxi fare and parking appeals.

The Secretary of State has no powers to intervene in decisions by traffic commissioners in carrying out their statutory functions.

Details of public inquiries are published by the traffic commissioners in their Annual Report to the Secretary of State. The report for 2002–03 is due to be published shortly and copies will be placed in the library.

No guidance has been issued to traffic commissioners in respect of self-employed transport managers. The requirements for transport managers are set out in the legislation and it is the responsibility of traffic commissioners to interpret whether these requirements are being met in individual cases.

Trans Consult Ltd.

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what action he has taken to investigate claims of discrimination against Trans Consult Ltd. by his Department's traffic commissioners; [132425]

(2) what his assessment is of the economic impact of the alleged discrimination against Trans Consult Ltd. by his Department's traffic commissioners; [132426]

(3) if he will launch an independent inquiry into the alleged discrimination and conduct of his Department's traffic commissioners against (a) Trans Consult Ltd., (b) its clients and (c) its agents; [132427]

(4) what the cost has been of bringing (a) small businesses, (b) farmers and (c) transport operators before public inquiries solely because they are connected to Trans Consult Ltd. [132428]

Dr. Howells: Statutorily independent Traffic Commissioners are responsible for deciding applications for the licence required by operators of public service vehicles and heavy goods vehicles and Ministers cannot interfere in their decisions. Commissioners must satisfy themselves that applicants meet statutory conditions about good repute, financial standing and professional competence. They are also responsible for taking action against licence holders who do not comply with the terms of their licence. Traffic Commissioners can call public inquiries to assist their investigations. These inquiries are treated as tribunals. Appeals must be made to the Transport Tribunal.

Widford Bridge

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects work to commence on repairing the Widford Bridge, Chelmsford; and how long he expects the work will take to complete. [132930]

Dr. Howells: Widford Bridge is owned by Network Rail and is included in their national load carrying assessment programme. A draft assessment report on the bridge is being prepared by W. S. Atkins on behalf of Essex County Council as part of a Joint Venture Agreement with Network Rail and this is expected to be delivered to Network Rail's consultant by the end of November 2003. If the report concludes that the bridge is weak, a weight restriction would be imposed as an interim measure.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Animal Experiments

Mr. Best: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps the Government is taking to reduce the number of animals used for experimentation in the UK. [132230]

Caroline Flint: Under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) act 1986 Act the Home Office, and its counterpart in Northern Ireland (the Department of Health, Social Security and Public Safety), license the use of animals for scientific purposes where there is no non-animal alternative, and then only when both the number of animals and their suffering are minimised. This reflects the principles of the 3Rs—replacement, reduction and refinement.

As the regulator of the use of live animals in scientific procedures the Government is demand-led—it has no control over the number of project licence applications which it receives. While we must seek to minimise the number of animals used in particular programmes of work, we cannot therefore influence the overall amount of animal research and testing which takes place—that is determined by many other factors, including the economic climate and global trends in scientific endeavour. There are current developments—such as advances in the use that can be made of genetically modified animals-which may lead in coming years to more rather than fewer animals used overall.

The Government fully supports and encourages development and promotion of the 3Rs in a number of ways, and additional impetus has been given to its efforts to that end by the related recommendations recently put forward by the House of Lords Committee on Animals in Scientific Procedures. In the longer term we must rely for any further significant reduction in animal use largely on the scientific community's own continuing efforts to develop, validate and accept non-animal alternative methods.

Drugs

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many arrestees in (a) Haltemprice and Howden, (b) the East Riding of Yorkshire and (c) the Humberside police authority area tested positive for Category A and B drugs in each of the last two quarters for which figures are available. [133219]

Caroline Flint [holding answer 20 October 2003]: Drug testing of persons in police detention (after charge) is not currently available in Haltemprice and Howden or the East Riding of Yorkshire.

Within the Humberside Police Authority, the following figures relate to the Kingston-upon-Hull Basic Command Unit (BCU):

Out of 121 attempted tests since the drug testing after charge programme began on 8 September 2003, 48 people tested positive for both category A and B drugs. Of those 48 positive results, 52 per cent. tested positive for cocaine, 15 per cent. tested positive for opiates and 33 per cent. tested positive for both opiates and cocaine.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate how many hits on average per registered heroin addict have been seized by the police in each of the last 10 years. [132732]

Caroline Flint: It is not possible to estimate the number of hits on average per registered heroin addict seized by the police because only broad ranging estimates of the number of heroin addicts are available. The quantity of drug used in a "hit" will also vary. We do have data on the number of seizures of heroin made by the police, and the quantities they seized: these appear in the table.

These data are taken from the annual Home Office Statistical Bulletin, and Finding 202 "Seizures of drugs in the UK 2001". These are available on the RDS website and in the Library (http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/pdfs2/hosb402.pdf and http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/pdfs2/r202.pdf).

Number of seizures of heroin and quantities in kilograms seized by the police by year 1993 to 2001

	Heroin seizures
	Number	Quantity (Kg)
1993	3,480	130
1994	4,340	160
1995	6,340	360
1996	9,700	330
1997	12,340	490
1998	15,040	360
1999	15,360	1,500
2000	16,120	1,990
2001	18,080	2,800

Home Office Drug Seizure and Offender Statistics, United Kingdom—Supplementary Tables and Findings 202

Departmental Staff

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) special advisers, (b) press officers, (c) civil servants, (d) advisers to civil servants and (e) permanent staff were working for his Department in each year since 1996. [126483]

Fiona Mactaggart: The figures can be found in Table C of the annual publication "Civil Service Statistics" published by Her Majesty's Stationary Office for the Government Statistical Service annually, and which covers permanent staff numbers in each Department and Agency from 1995 to 2002. Information on the Civil Service is published annually in 'Civil Service Statistics', copies of which have been placed in the Library. The latest edition, based on April 2002 data, was published on 24 July 2003. These figures include statistics on press officers, but the term "advisers to civil servants" is not one that is recognised.

Gun Trade

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent assessment he has made of the (a) trade in and (b) possession of (i) replica guns and (ii) disabled guns and (c) incidence of conversion of such guns to fire live ammunition; and what proposals he has to bring forward legislation to tackle gun crime. [132546]

Caroline Flint: There are no reliable statistics relating to the number of imitation and deactivated firearms in circulation. Imitation weapons were involved in 1,201 recorded offences in 2001–02. An examination of 217 real guns submitted to the Forensic Science Service between April-June 2003 showed that 59 had been converted from blank firing replicas, 19 from air weapons and two from de-activated guns.

Offences involving the use of guns are varied and need to be tackled on a number of different fronts. Tough laws and effective enforcement are important and the current Criminal Justice Bill includes proposals for a five-year minimum sentence for the illegal possession of prohibited firearms. We have also included provisions in the Anti-social Behaviour Bill which will ban the carrying of imitation firearms or air weapons in a public place without reasonable excuse. The sale, manufacture, transfer and import of air weapons which use the self-contained air cartridge system—which is readily converted to fire conventional ammunition—will also be banned. The law already regards any imitation which can be readily converted as a firearm which means that it is banned if it is a handgun.

Police

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the Chairman of the Association of Police Authorities on next year's funding settlement. [133610]

Ms Blears: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has regular meetings with the Chairman of the Association of Police Authorities to discuss a range of issues, including prospects for future funding.

Prison Population

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) unconvicted and (b) convicted unsentenced prisoners are held in prisons in England and Wales, broken down by sex. [131767]

Paul Goggins: On 31 July 2003 there were 7,163 untried and 4,603 convicted unsentenced males, and 537 untried and 495 convicted unsentenced females in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Football Association (Financial Support)

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what level of financial support was given by Sport England to the Football Association in the last year for which figures are available; and if she will make a statement on the purpose to which this expenditure is put. [133231]

Mr. Caborn: None. All Sport England Lottery support for football is channelled through the Football Foundation, a partnership between the Government, the Football Association and the FA Premier League. The Foundation receives income from the three funding partners in roughly equal proportions. It received approximately £17 million from public sources in 2002–03. Sport England's contribution to the Foundation was £6 million in that year, the balance of the £17 million coming from the New Opportunities Fund and the Reduction in Pool Betting Duty.

75 per cent. of the Foundation's total income is used to develop grass roots football, the balance funding community and education projects, and essential ground safety work.

Terrestrial Television

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans she has to improve reception to terrestrial television in areas that traditionally have suffered from a weak signal. [130583]

Estelle Morris: There are no plans to develop further the analogue terrestrial television transmission network, this is to enable the broadcasters to concentrate their resources on the digital terrestrial television (DTT) network. The Digital Television Action Plan tasks Government to determine and agree a target level of coverage for digital terrestrial public services post-switchover in 2004. This spectrum plan will also enable us to assess the possibilities of improving current reception levels of DTT services across the UK. The latest version of the Digital Television Action Plan is available at: www.digitaltelevision.gov.uk.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Breast Feeding

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what action he is taking to ensure that health objectives relating to breast feeding are supported within the school curriculum. [133607]

Mr. Stephen Twigg [holding answer 22 October 2003]: The Department has no plans to specifically address breast feeding in the school curriculum. However, through Personal, Social and Health Education pupils learn about health and well-being, including making healthier, safer choices. They are taught to think about the alternatives and long and short term consequences when making decisions about personal health; and to seek professional advice confidently and find information about health. They also consider social and moral dilemmas, for example, how the choices they make affect others.

Class Sizes

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what the average class size was in secondary schools, broken down by (a) school year and (b) local education authority in each year since 1997; [133688]

(2) what the average class size in primary schools was, broken down by (a) school year and (b) local education authority in each year since 1997. [133689]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The available information has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

Data on class size by year group was not collected prior to 1998 for primary schools and prior to 2001 for secondary schools.

Early Literacy Support

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what pilot studies were carried out in assessing the effectiveness of the Early Literacy Support approach to the teaching of reading; and if he will make a statement on the study and the results. [128687]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: A systematic study covering the one-year pilot of the Early Literacy Support (ELS) programme was taken forward during 2000–01 by a team of primary HMI, who have evaluated the National Literacy and Numeracy Strategies since 1998. Their detailed findings informed the development of the programme and were summarised in Ofsted's third Annual Report on the Literacy Strategy. Participating teachers, teaching assistants and literacy consultants also provided systematic feedback on the pilot which resulted in the materials and the programme being appropriately modified and refined before publication.

Teacher Training

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will reward the fourth year undergraduate initial teacher training students with similar financial treatment to that for those committing to a Post Graduate Certificate in Education. [133582]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 22 October 2003]: My right hon. Friend has no present plans to change the eligibility conditions for teacher training bursaries.

Tuition Fees

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what information he has collated on (a) the administration costs to (i) local education authorities, (ii) the Student Loan Company and (iii) the Department of Assessment and Implementation of Tuition Fees Remission and (b) the compliance cost to higher education institutions of this system. [133421]

Alan Johnson: The information requested is not available.

Government funding of higher education institutions in England through the Higher Education Funding Council for England (HEFCE) takes account of the cost to universities and colleges of administering tuition fees. The forecast income that institutions receive from student contributions to fees is abated by 5 per cent. for collection of fees and any default. For 2002–03, that amounts to an estimated £21.36 million. The latest survey of the non-payment of fee contributions, published by Universities UK in November 2002, found that the amount unpaid at July 2002 across the UK was well within the 5 per cent. set aside for administration and default.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Den Khodaida Water Project

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the aims are of the Den Khodaida Water Project in Afghanistan and the structure of the UK's involvement in it; if he will list the other countries involved in (a) projecting, (b) setting up and (c) running the project; and if he will make a statement. [133646]

Hilary Benn: Den Khodaida is a village in the hinterland of Kabul but lying outside the city boundary. The aim of the Den Khodaida Water Project is to repair the water supply system to the village. These repairs are on-going. The project is being implemented by one of the Civil-Military Co-operation teams of the International Security Assistance Force (ISAF). The team is under Finnish command. There has been no direct British involvement in funding, designing or running the project. The EC has also not had any involvement.

Foreign Aid

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much the top 10 Department for International Development performers receive in direct budget support; and what percentage of that in his Department's budget was spent in those countries in the past 12 months. [133096]

Hilary Benn: DFID does not rank partner countries by performance. However, for the 10 largest recipients of bilateral assistance, the table lists total allocations and allocations of direct budget support (DBS) in 2002–03. As the table shows, allocations of DBS to the 10 largest recipients represent 58 per cent. of total DBS allocations and 7 per cent. of the total DFID bilateral programme.

	2002–03 Total spend (£ million)	Direct budget support (DBS) (£ million)	Percentage DBS of total DFID programme	Percentage DBS of total DFID DBS
India	161	30	2	14
Tanzania	96	45	2	21
Afghanistan	75	13	1	6
Ghana	56	12	1	6
Uganda	55	23	1	11

Horn of Africa

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what programmes his Department has (a) run and (b) supported in (i) Somaliland, (ii) Somalia in general, (iii) Ethiopia and (iv) Eritrea; and if he will make a statement. [133657]

Hilary Benn: The UK has increased its involvement in Somalia over the last year. Most of our resources are aimed at meeting humanitarian needs, although we have also begun to support activities in regions, which have demonstrated steps towards peace and democratisation. For example, we have supported the electoral process in Somaliland, as well as exploring development programming in education, health and governance. We have also been providing support through the European Union (EU) and the UN.

We have provided substantial humanitarian assistance in response to current food shortages in Ethiopia. This has totalled £49.1 million since the beginning of 2002. We are also actively pressing ahead with our development programme for Ethiopia, as described in our Country Assistance Plan (CAP), published in March 2003. The CAP outlines our intention to work in three priority areas: education; food security; and capacity building. We will also continue to engage in HIV/AIDS, the private sector, roads and development of civil society.

We have no bilateral development programme in Eritrea, though we do provide humanitarian assistance and the British Ambassador in Eritrea manages a Small Grants Scheme. Our main avenues of engagement and support are through the EU, World Bank and IMF.

Iraq

Tony Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development whether the £200 million of aid announced for Iraq reconstruction has been taken from his Department's contingency fund for humanitarian emergencies in 2003; and whether it will be ringfenced for particular projects. [133004]

Hilary Benn: DFID's contingency reserve exists to enable us to respond to both humanitarian emergencies and reconstruction needs. The £209 million now committed by DFID to humanitarian and reconstruction assistance in Iraq in 2003 has been found from a number of sources, including £75 million from DFID's contingency reserve, an additional £120 million provided by HM Treasury from the central reserve, and money already allocated for assistance to Iraq. About £151 million has been committed to United Nations agencies, the Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement and NGOs, some of which is earmarked for specific projects and some of which is allocated for an agreed range of activities in a sector. The remaining £58 million has been allocated directly by DFID to particular projects and activities, including DFID secondments to the Coalition Provisional Authority.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) what recent discussions his Department has had with NGOs working with children and adults with learning disabilities in Iraq; [133475]

(2) what assessment he has made of the number of people suffering from learning disabilities in Iraq. [133553]

Hilary Benn: DFID has held no specific discussions with NGOs on this issue, and no assessment has been made to date.

The Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs is responsible for institutions which work with children and adults with learning disabilities. UNICEF is working closely with the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs to support them to enhance services for vulnerable and disadvantaged children generally. DFID's programme in Iraq is focused on meeting the needs of all Iraqis, especially the most vulnerable.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the total amount of humanitarian aid provided to Iraq since the beginning of the conflict is; and if he will make a statement. [133486]

Hilary Benn: DFID has so far committed £209 million to humanitarian and reconstruction assistance in Iraq. Much of this finance is being channelled though organisations best placed to deliver assistance on the ground: United Nations agencies, the Red Cross and Red Crescent, and NGOs. The UK also provides 19 per cent. of European Community (EC) funding for Iraq. The total EC commitment to Iraq currently stands at €100 million.

Substantial additional contributions are being made at the Madrid Donors Conference on 23 October. My written statement to the House of 14 October sets out the details.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what measures are in place to prevent food shortages after the cessation of the UN Oil for Food programme in Iraq. [133552]

Hilary Benn: The ending of OFF will result in a change in management responsibilities for the Iraqi food procurement and distribution system, and not the end of the food distribution system. There is food in the pipeline until mid 2004 from contracts already funded and signed. As these contracts begin to expire the CPA will take over responsibility for contracting the supply of food and basic goods. Handover preparations have been under way for some time. The Ministry of Trade within the CPA is assessing expected OFF imports, the so called "food pipeline", against total needs. Where there is a shortfall the CPA is contracting alternative suppliers to provide the food. The financing for this will come from the CPA budget.

In the South and Centre of Iraq the Ministry of Trade has always had responsibility for distributing food and basic goods purchased under the Oil For Food scheme. This will not change with the ending of the Oil for Food programme. In the three Northern Governorates the Oil for Food programme was run by the World Food Programme. On 21 November responsibility in the North for this system will pass to a new organisation, the "Program Co-ordination Office". This will work under the CPA and may be able to re-employ many of those currently employed on the distribution side. Work is progressing to ensure that this office has the capacity to carry out its new role. The UK has a food security advisor in the CPA Ministry of Trade, and stands ready to provide further assistance against identified needs.

Kosovo

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what financial aid has been granted to Serbia and the Kosovo region since 1999; what has been achieved in the country to date; and if he will make a statement. [132942]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: Since 1999, DFID has invested £161 million in the Union of Serbia and Montenegro, including Kosovo. Initially, we provided emergency humanitarian assistance covering such areas as food and drug supplies, emergency shelter, health care, mines clearance and funding for international relief agencies.

We have since focused on supporting key economic and social reforms and the poverty reduction agenda, through both technical and budgetary assistance. We have funded strategic interventions such as the reform of Serbia's crumbling banking sector and the development of a merit-based civil service in post-conflict Kosovo. We have also provided £14 million as budgetary assistance to the Kosovo authorities to help meet the costs of administration and reconstruction during the post-conflict period. We also work through multilateral agencies such as the World Bank and the European Commission, contributing £393 million since 1999 through our share of EC development assistance. The EC is the biggest donor in the region, financing large-scale reconstruction programmes in the energy and transport sectors, as well as supporting administrative, economic and social reforms that will help the region rejoin the European mainstream.

Recent reviews of our assistance strategies for the region have found that while international assistance has been successful so far in meeting humanitarian and reconstruction needs, the emerging challenge is to help the authorities to improve the environment for reforms and growth as levels of aid decline.

We will continue our support and have allocated £7.4 million for the coming financial year, in addition to a further £2 million through the inter-ministerial Global Conflict Prevention Pool and our continued contributions through the EC.

Liberia

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will list the projects planned by his Department that are to be run in Liberia; what the (a) structure, (b) aims and (c) methods of each project are, and the projected schedule for project (i) initiation and (ii) conclusion; and if he will make a statement. [133647]

Hilary Benn: We have committed a total of £7.6 million this year for humanitarian programmes in Liberia, these are managed by the UN and other international relief agencies. An inter-departmental mission will visit Liberia in November. It will assess the current needs of the country, and the measures being taken by the international community, particularly through the UN, to assist the Transitional National Government to address them. The mission will make recommendations for the future role of the UK.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions he has had with his US counterpart on the issue of (a) short-term emergency aid, (b) medium-term humanitarian aid and (c) long-term development assistance to Liberia; what programmes (i) were outlined to him and (ii) he outlined; when and where these discussions took place; and if he will make a statement. [133648]

Hilary Benn: DFID has been in regular contact with officials from USAID. In addition the FCO have regular discussions with the US Government concerning all aspects of the co-ordination of aid in Liberia. An inter-departmental mission will visit Liberia in November and will have further discussions with US officials on their plans. We understand that these may include support to security sector reform. There are provisional plans for a donor conference on Liberia, probably in December, at which donors will coordinate and exchange information on their intentions.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions (a) his Department and (b) representatives of the Government have had with representatives of the governments of (i) EU member states, (ii) Norway, (iii) EU accession candidate countries, (iv) the US, (v) ECOWAS member states, (vi) Commonwealth member states and (vii) Japan on the subject of post-conflict reconstruction in Liberia; when and where these discussions took place; what concerns were raised during each discussion and by whom; and if he will make a statement. [133649]

Hilary Benn: Discussions on Liberia, by DFID and the FCO, have taken place with a range of governments and agencies. These have included EU member states, particularly France, Sweden, the Netherlands and Italy concerning aid to Liberia. We have also discussed with Norway the possibility of Norwegian police officers being seconded to UNMIL. We have had regular contact with the U.S. on all aspects of the situation in Liberia. We have had close and continuing contact with ECOWAS concerning its role in Liberia, and have contributed £1 million. to its international force. There has been contact with other states. We have had close contact with the European Commission concerning their intentions in Liberia.

Discussions are taking place on arrangements for a possible donors conference on Liberia in mid December. This will be an opportunity for the international community to coordinate its proposals.

Malaria

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much money his Department will give (a) for medicines to fight malaria and (b) to research into affordable anti-malarials in 2003–04. [133551]

Hilary Benn: DFID is strongly committed to meeting the Millennium Development Goal to halt and begin to reverse the incidence of malaria by 2015, recognising the importance of malaria, not just in terms of disease burden, but also the potential it has to undermine economic growth and human development.

Since 1998, DFID has provided in excess of £110 million to support malaria control activities globally and at country-level. This includes support to Roll Back Malaria, an international partnership to reduce competition and duplication of effort, develop technical consensus, increase political commitment and raise the profile of malaria.

As DFID contributes to a broad based effort to tackle this complex disease, it is not possible to break down our spend to show amounts spent on medicines for malaria by year. Our support at international level is to initiatives which support general malaria control activities and at country level provides finance to governments, either as support to particular sectors or direct into governments' budgets. Our commitment to combating malaria was reaffirmed in May 2003 with our pledge to increase our commitment to the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, TB and Malaria to US$280 million. Successful implementation of existing Global Fund proposals will result in the number of treatments for resistant malaria in Africa increasing from 15,000 to four million annually and also result in the purchase of seven and a half million insecticide treated nets over the next two years. These nets offer substantial protection against malaria.

Despite the great complexity of malaria, it remains a disease that is preventable, treatable and curable. DFID is committed to supporting national governments and partners ensure that effective drugs and commodities are accessible to the poor. We have committed over £1.5 billion since 1997 to strengthen health systems to deliver vital drugs and health care treatment. In malaria endemic countries a significant part of drug spend will be for anti malarials.

DFID also provides support to the Medical Research Council and initiatives such as the Medicines for Malaria Venture (£1 million in 2003–04) to help to find new low cost malaria treatments.

Cambodia

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if he will list the (a) de-mining and (b) mine awareness projects (i) directly run, (ii) primarily funded directly, (iii) financially assisted directly by his Department, (iv) primarily funded and (v) financially assisted through (A) local, (B) regional and (C) international non-governmental organisations using contributions from his Department in Cambodia since 1997, including the structure and methodology of each project, and the latest assessment his Department has made of the progress of (1) each project, (2) de-mining and (3) mine awareness in general in Cambodia; and if he will make a statement. [133323]

Mr. Gareth Thomas: DFID has provided funding for demining in Cambodia at the following disbursement levels since 1997.

£ million

	1996–97	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02	2002–03
NGO	0.56	0.44	0.29	2.61	2.30	0.78	0.45
UNDP	0.50					0.50	0.48

DFID funding for Cambodia covers a number of different areas of activity and is part of DFID's global response to humanitarian mine action. In Cambodia specifically we have provided funds on a bilateral basis to the UK NGOs the HALO Trust and Mines Advisory Group (MAG) to carry out demining programmes in various parts of Cambodia. We have also provided funds for the in-country development and testing of mechanical demining equipment.

DFID has provided additional funds through the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) to support the Cambodian Mine Action Authority (CMAA) and the Cambodian Mine Action Centre (CMAC) which are indigenous organisations set up with the assistance of the UNDP.

In March 2001 DFID carried out a review of its support to mine action in Cambodia. We concluded that there had been considerable successes since 1991 with thousands of mines having been cleared and large areas of land restored to economic use. We thought there were institutional weaknesses especially in the area of co-ordination where there was limited interaction between the various organisations working on mine action and the central mine action authorities. Our support to the Cambodian Mine authorities that we provide via the UN aims to address this issue. The UN will be providing support under the UNDP Country Co-operation Framework for 2001–05. Key objectives of the programme include development of the management capacity of the CMAC and CMAA. Specific activities include:

Strengthening partnerships among entities and stakeholders involved in the mine awareness sector;

Development of quality assurance and quality control processes;

Development and review of MRE guidelines and materials;

Promotion of national compliance with responsibilities detailed in the various national and international instruments pertaining to mine action;

Assistance in victim rehabilitation programmes.

European Union

The following contributions were reported since 1997:

1998 £3.0 million (UK share = 19.1 per cent.)

1999 £0.56 million (UK share = 17.75 per cent.)

More information on demining in Cambodia can be gained from the publication "Landmine Monitor". A copy will be sent to the House of Commons Library. There are also a number of useful websites on this subject, one of the most informative is the site hosted by the United Nations Mine Action Service (UNMAS) www.mineaction.org

Monrovia

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what measures are being taken (a) to repatriate refugees from Monrovia to their homes in the rest of the country and (b) to reduce their dependence on aid handouts. [133550]

Hilary Benn: Such measures cannot be taken until security is restored outside the region of Monrovia. Internally displaced persons (IDPs) are reluctant to return to their homes while skirmishes continue. Aid agencies are unable to support such moves until security can be guaranteed for their own activities outside Monrovia. The situation is expected to improve as UNMIL gains in strength.

IDPs have returned to camps in Montserrado, Bong and Margibi counties. The UN and aid agencies are supporting relocation of IDPs to these camps from which they previously fled. The World Food Programme has stopped general food distributions to IDPs in Monrovia. NGOs are also scaling down feeding programmes in the light of evidence of access by IDPs to their own supplies of food.

Refugees

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what response his Department has made to the UN High Commissioner for Refugees appeal for Sudanese refugees in Chad; and if he will make a statement. [133656]

Hilary Benn: The UN High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) has requested $16.6 million (approximately £11 million) for 65,000 Sudanese refugees in Chad, including $6.2 million for emergency operations. The refugees have fled the fighting in Darfur, in western Sudan.

We have been following this situation closely and have been in contact with the UNHCR assessment mission, which led to the appeal. We have also been in touch with non-governmental organisations active in this area. We have agreed to provide £1 million towards the appeal and remain concerned about the plight of Sudanese refugees in Chad.

Reproductive Health

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development pursuant to his answer of 14 October 2003, Official Report, column 75–76W, what end of programme assessment his Department has made of the Bolivia Health and Sexual Education programme, with particular reference to (a) the aims successfully achieved and (b) issues still outstanding; what replacement programme his Department has (i) planned and (ii) initiated in Bolivia, including aims and delivery methods, with specific reference to sexual education programmes; and if he will make a statement. [133191]

Hilary Benn: The Bolivia Health and Sexual Education Project ended in July 2003. An end of project review was undertaken by GTZ on behalf of DFID. It concluded that the project successfully demonstrated the interest and demand for improved health and sex education in Bolivia. The project supported over 1,000 young people (between the ages of 12 and 25) in five departments of Bolivia to take leadership roles in the promotion of health and reproductive rights issues, and promoted better health service delivery to these populations.

The project was less successful in strengthening the supply side of health and sex education services. The Ministry of Education was not prepared to integrate these activities into its curriculum and hence DFID was unable to promote the successful local experiences at national level and is no longer supporting sexual education programmes in Bolivia. DFID is currently investigating whether health and sex education should be incorporated into its new programme promoting more inclusive citizenship and the realisation of human rights.

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development pursuant to his answer of 4 October 2003, Official Report, columns 75–76W on reproductive health, what the (a) structure, (b) aims and (c) methods of the Andean Reproductive Health Initiative are; how much of the effort is aimed at (i) Peru and (ii) Bolivia; what support structure is provided to the programme by (A) the Government of Peru, (B) the Government of Bolivia, (C) local and ethnic leaders in Peru, (D) local and ethnic leaders in Bolivia, (E) local non-governmental organisations, (F) national non-governmental organisations; (G) regional non-governmental organisations and (H) international non-governmental organisations; and if he will make a statement. [133198]

Hilary Benn: The Andean Reproductive Health Initiative (RHI), which ended in July 2002, was a joint collaboration between DFID, the European Commission (EC), and Population Concern, who managed the project. Population Concern together with local, national and regional NGOs, public sector providers and Ministries of Health and Education in Bolivia and Peru, developed ways of improving demand for and access to reproductive health services for marginalised groups. These formed the basis for identifying innovative ways of delivering services to be piloted, and for establishing management systems to support lesson learning focusing on adolescents and marginalised groups. Other civil society groups, such as the Catholic Church were involved in and supported some project initiatives.

The project focused on the improvement of human development opportunities for women and men by reducing the risks they face from dangerous pregnancies, and the improvement of adolescents' access to reproductive and sexual health and information services. The lessons learnt from the initiative were disseminated through a communications strategy to the Governments of Bolivia and Peru, donors and NGOs with a view to improving reproductive health policy and programmes. The programme's overall budget of approximately £1,856 million was split equally between Bolivia and Peru, with DFID contributing £630,000 and the EC Euros 1.7 million.

Sierra Leone

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) what measures are being taken to re-educate and re-integrate former child soldiers in Sierra Leone; [133547]

(2) what provisions are being made for the demobilisation and reintegration of child soldiers involved in the recent conflict. [133549]

Hilary Benn: A total of 3,039 ex-combatant children are currently in education through a UNICEF community education investment programme. Other child protection agencies, such as CARITAS, have helped provide educational opportunities through the National Commission for Disarmament Demobilisation and Reintegration (NCDDR) supported Training and Employment Programme.

According to figures provided by UNICEF, 6,845 child soldiers were demobilised over a year ago. 4,894 have been reunited with their families. A further 2,151 non-combatant children have been reunited with their families, with the support of UNICEF.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent assessment he has made of the security situation in Sierra Leone and its impact on the humanitarian situation. [133548]

Hilary Benn: All areas of Sierra Leone are accessible. UNAMSIL is progressively withdrawing, and currently consists of 12,300 personnel. It is currently scheduled to withdraw completely by December next year. The Sierra Leone Government is undertaking a wide-ranging review of the security sector, which we are supporting. The review is intended to assist the Government to prepare for UNAMSIL's departure. The UK is providing extensive support to reform and strengthening of the security sector, as part of this preparation.

There is no security restriction on humanitarian activity. There is a general shift in emphasis, by the Government of Sierra Leone and by international agencies, from relief to development activities.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Iraq

Llew Smith: To ask the Solicitor-General if she will reconsider the decision not to publish the legal advice provided by the Attorney-General on the legal basis for military action in Iraq. [133313]

The Solicitor-General: No. As the hon. Member is aware from my answers to him on the 26 March and 21 May 2003, there is a long-standing convention, observed by successive governments, that advice which the Law Officers have given to the Government is not publicly disclosed. This is consistent with paragraphs 2 and 4*(d)* of Part II of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Llew Smith: To ask the Solicitor-General on how many occasions, and in what forms, the Attorney-General has been asked to publish the advice she provided to the Government in respect of the legality of military action in Iraq; if she will list the individuals and organisations which have made requests; and what criteria were used in determining a response. [133314]

The Solicitor-General: The Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers does not maintain any records of the occasions on which the Attorney-General has been asked to publish the advice he provided to the Government in respect of the legality of military action in Iraq. It is not therefore possible to provide a comprehensive answer to the hon. Member's question. The following information is available. Since the Attorney-General made his statement on 17 March 2003 setting out his view of the legal basis for the use of force against Iraq:

(a) four parliamentary questions have been tabled asking if I will publish the Attorney-General's advice. Three of these questions were posed by the hon. Member himself (on 26 March, 21 May and 22 October 2003). The fourth question was put by the hon. Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Kilfoyle) on 24 March 2003;

(b) the Attorney-General has received four letters from members of the general public asking him to publish his advice. The hon. Member for North-West Hampshire (Sir George Young) also wrote to the Attorney-General enclosing a letter from one of his constituents asking for disclosure of the advice; and

(c) the Lord Alexander of Weedon has written to the Attorney-General requesting disclosure of his advice.

The reply on all these occasions was to decline the request. The reason given was that there is a long-standing convention, adhered to by successive governments, that advice which the Law Officers have given to Government is not publicly disclosed. This is to enable the Government, like everyone else, to obtain full and frank legal advice in confidence.

Street Crime

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Solicitor-General what steps the CPS has taken to narrow the gap between the overall levels of crimes recorded by the police and the offences brought to justice (a) in general and (b) with particular reference to hate crimes. [128720]

The Solicitor-General: The Crown Prosecution Service (CPS) is narrowing the justice gap by improving performance so that cases are better prepared, increasing early guilty pleas and ensuring more contested cases reach trial. They are taking a number of steps to achieve this, including increasingly giving early advice to the police so that the case is reviewed early and the appropriate charge laid; improving case preparation and communication with the police to reduce the number of committals discharged; providing greater support to victims and witnesses by providing more information about the progress of the case so that they continue to support the prosecution and reduce the number of ineffective trials, and helping them through the trial process by, where appropriate, using video evidence, screens, and other special measures; working with local community groups so that local communities can see that the work of the CPS is responsive to their concerns.

The CPS is working with colleagues in other criminal justice agencies, through the Local Criminal Justice Boards, to:

(a) bring more offenders to justice; and

(b) increase public confidence in the CJS.

With particular reference to hate crimes, the CPS has produced three Public Policy Statements since November 2001 on Domestic Violence, Homophobic Crime, Racially and Religiously Aggravated Crime, and given specific training to lawyers on domestic violence and racially and religiously aggravated crimes. Work is currently under way to develop training with regard to homophobic crime. The training involves lawyers hearing from victims or practitioners who work directly with victims.

In February 2003, the CPS held a conference in Cardiff specifically on reducing the justice gap in hate crimes. This included representatives from voluntary sector organisations, other criminal justice agencies, the Bar and the Law Society, and a number of academics and focused on ways to improve the performance of prosecutors.

The success of the CPS in increasing public confidence and reducing the justice gap, particularly as regards vulnerable communities, is subject to scrutiny and comment by HMCPS Inspectorate in their regular reports.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Bursaries

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) further education and (b) higher education bursaries are available to students studying in Northern Ireland. [132788]

Jane Kennedy: The payment of further and higher education bursaries is determined by [illegible]nd. All Northern Ireland domiciled students whose family incomes are less than £20,000 are eligible to apply for bursaries of up to £2,000. These bursaries are payable to eligible NI students studying in Northern Ireland, elsewhere in the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland.

Figures relating to students studying in NI in receipt of a bursary are currently not available. However, in the 2002–03 academic year, bursaries were awarded to (a) 415 in further education and (b) 11,959 students studying in higher education in the UK and Republic of Ireland.

Civil Partnership

Lembit Öpik: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will make it his policy to ensure that Northern Ireland is included from the outset in any forthcoming bill on civil partnership; and if he will make a statement; [129295]

(2) what areas of the proposed civil partnership legislation have been assessed by his officials as requiring distinctive Northern Ireland sections; and if he will make a statement; [129296]

(3) what research (a) he has assessed and (b) will be commissioned on the consequences for same-sex couples who move to Northern Ireland of a civil partnership law only applying in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement; [129297]

(4) what he estimates would be the cost of processing and legislating a civil partnership law separately for Northern Ireland through an Order in Council; and if he will make a statement. [129298]

Mr. Pearson: There has been no decision yet as to whether the civil partnership registration scheme set out in the consultation paper issued by the Department of Trade and Industry should be extended to Northern Ireland. My officials are currently examining those proposals with a view to issuing a consultation paper in the autumn. Beyond that, no decision has yet been taken as to whether a parallel civil partnership registration scheme should be introduced in Northern Ireland. In examining the DTI proposals, my officials are considering the possible impact for Northern Ireland of the introduction of a civil partnership registration scheme across a wide range of areas, including those areas where Northern Ireland law and practice differ from England and Wales. This preliminary consideration also includes an examination of the likely impact on couples who register their partnership under the scheme in England and Wales and who subsequently move to Northern Ireland. There is little information on how many such couples there may be, but work is on-going between officials in Northern Ireland and their counterparts in the Department of Trade and Industry. No calculation of the estimated costs of processing and legislating a civil partnership law separately for Northern Ireland through an Order in Council has been carried out.

Electoral Rolls

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what measures he proposes to enable citizens of countries who will be admitted to European Union membership in April 2004 and who are resident in Northern Ireland to be admitted to the franchise in time for the European elections in June 2004; and if he will make a statement. [132695]

Jane Kennedy: The Local and European Parliamentary Elections (Registration of Citizens of Accession States) Regulations 2003 and the Representation of the People (Form of Canvass) (Northern Ireland) Regulations 2003 were introduced earlier this year in time for the annual electoral registration canvass. These regulations permit citizens of states due to accede to the European Union next year who are resident in Northern Ireland to register to vote in local government and European parliamentary elections to be held on or after 1 May 2004.

Health Service Funding

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what budget funding was given to the Northern Ireland National Health Service in each of the last three years expressed (a) by percentage change and (b) as a percentage of Northern Ireland GDP. [132789]

Angela Smith: The information is as follows:

(a) In Northern Ireland, health services are fully integrated with personal social services in a single financing, planning and delivery system—the HPSS (health and personal social services). It follows that the HPSS budget is considerably larger than a separate health budget would be. The figures in the table reflect this fact.

	Health and Personal Social Services
2000–01 budget allocation (£ million)	1,976.3
2001–02 budget allocation (£ million)	2,238.7
Percentage change from 2000–01	13.27
2002–03 budget allocation (£ million)	2,475.3
Percentage change from 2001–02	10.5
2003–04 budget allocation (£ million)	2,898.6
Percentage change from 2002–03	17.1

(b) The following table shows budget funding for the HPSS estimated as a percentage of Northern Ireland GDP. In addition to the fact that they derive from an HPSS (as opposed to a merely "health") budget, the percentage shares reflect Northern Ireland's exceptionally high need for expenditure on public services—health and social care included.

	HPSS budget allocation estimated as a percentage of GDP
2001–02	11.65
2002–03	12.3
2003–04	14

WORK AND PENSIONS

Child Support

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how much each absent parent is expected to contribute towards their children's care; who makes the decision on levels of payment; and what account is taken of the parents' work status. [128073]

Mr. Pond: In the new child support scheme non-resident parents with net incomes of over £200 will pay 15 per cent. of their net income for one child; 20 per cent. for two children and 25 per cent. for three or more children. Allowances will be made for any children in the non-residents parent's current household.

Those with net income over £100 up to and including £200 will pay a reduced rate on a sliding scale. Those non-resident parents with net earnings of £100, or on benefit, will pay a flat rate of £5.

Mr. Francois: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many full-time staff were employed by the Child Support Agency in Essex on 15 September. [132634]

Mr. Pond: In the month of September the Child Support Agency employed 80 full time staff and 25 part time staff in Essex.

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what research he has commissioned on the cancellation of driving licences for those who have not properly maintained child support payments in (a) EU countries, (b) the USA and (c) Canada; and if he will make a statement. [134063]

Mr. Pond: In developing our proposals for child support reform we considered the experiences of a range of countries including the USA, Australia, Canada and a number of EU countries.

The powers in sections 14A (information-offences) and 39A to 40B (commitment to prison and disqualification from driving) of the Child Support Act 1991 are intended to help the Child Support Agency to secure compliance. Their success is in the extent to which non-resident parents co-operate with the Agency.

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what reports he has received of former Child Support Agency employees setting up businesses specialising in CSA cases; what assessment he has made of the implications of these businesses for the administration of the CSA; and if he will make a statement. [125659]

Mr. Pond: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mr. Doug Smith. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Doug Smith to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 17 July 2003:

The Secretary of State for Work and Pensions in replying to your recent Parliamentary question about the Child Support Agency promised a substantive reply from the Chief Executive.

You ask what reports he has received of former Child Support Agency employees setting up businesses specialising in CSA cases; what assessment he has made of the implications of these businesses for the administration of the CSA; and if he will make a statement.

I am aware of a number of bodies who offer a variety of services about child support, for example through internet sites ranging from shared experience to claiming to be able to influence maintenance assessments. I am also aware that some of the bodies attempt to validate their service by claiming to be ex-employees of the Child Support Agency. Where the advice offered is constructive and accurate I welcome its availability. When staff leave the Agency they are reminded of their responsibilities to keep confidential personal information gained during their service.

Combined Benefits Payments

Paul Holmes: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people did not receive combined benefits payments owing to the breakdown of the link between Pension Service computer systems; when the link broke down; how long the link was broken; how much in benefit payments was not paid in this period owing to the problem; why the Department did not realise the breakdown had taken place until contacted by a benefit recipient; and if he will make a statement. [125932]

Malcolm Wicks: This is a matter for Alexis Cleveland, Chief Executive of The Pension Service. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Alexis Cleveland to Mr. Paul Holmes, dated 17 July 2003:

The Secretary of State for Work and Pensions has asked me to respond to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many people did not receive combined benefits payments owing to the breakdown of the link between Pension Service computer systems; when the link broke down; how long the link was broken; how much in benefit payments was not paid in this period owing to the problem; why the Department did not realise the breakdown had taken place until contacted by a benefit recipient; and if he will make a statement.

It would appear that the breakdown of the link between The Pension Service computer systems was restricted to a single benefit recipient and was not a national problem affecting numbers of customers. It is of course possible that other cases may have similar circumstances however, we are not aware of any other cases where this problem has occurred.

The customer was receiving a combined payment of Minimum Income Guarantee (MIG) and Severe Disablement Allowance (SDA) and then submitted a claim for Retirement Pension (RP). For the RP claim to be assessed and paid, the other two payments for MIG and SDA had to be de-combined as three payments cannot be combined into a single payment for these benefits.

The customer subsequently withdrew the RP claim and an attempt was made to recombine the SDA and MIG payments. However, due to incompatible data being held in the two benefit systems, we were not able to reconnect the interface. Incompatible data may occur due to a simple inconsistency such as an incorrect office code, resulting in the two pieces of information 'missing' each other when attempting to link.

The MIG section was notified on the system on 9 February 2003 when an error message 'interface failed' appeared on the customers account. We were aware that a system error had occurred prior to the customer writing to us and took action to issue payments in the most efficient manner.

Arrears have been paid in full to the customer in question. The customer is currently receiving all benefit entitlement, but these are being paid separately.

The Pension Service has a duty to ensure that all of our customers receive their payments correctly and on time. Therefore alternative arrangements were made to ensure that the customer received the correct payment amounts on time.

I hope that this is helpful.

Compulsory Interviews

Paul Holmes: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many compulsory interviews have taken place in each year since 1997, broken down by (a) benefit and (b) welfare to work scheme; and what the total cost of interviews was in each year since 1997, broken down by (i) benefit and (ii) welfare to work scheme; and if he will make a statement. [125935]

Mr. Browne: The administration of Jobcentre Plus is a matter for the Chief Executive of Jobcentre Plus, David Anderson. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from David Anderson to Mr. Paul Holmes, dated 28 July 2003:

As Jobcentre Plus is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question concerning the number of compulsory interviews that have taken place in each year since 1997, broken down by benefit and welfare to work scheme and the total cost of the interviews. This is something that falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Jobcentre Plus conducts a wide range of compulsory interviews in a variety of circumstances. For example compulsory interviews are conducted at the start of every Jobseeker's Allowance claim and in our new integrated offices at the start of every claim for a Jobcentre Plus benefit. Compulsory interviews are then conducted at various stages of a claim and also under a variety of circumstances in our welfare to work programmes.

We do monitor workflows and activity in Jobcentre Plus offices and maintain statistics for some individual programmes, such as those held on the New Deal database. However, it is not possible to provide the information you have requested on the total number of interviews or breakdowns by benefit or welfare to work programme. Similarly we cannot provide a figure for the cost of compulsory interviews.

My apologies for not being able to provide the information you requested.

Disability Issues

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if the non-discriminatory treatment of disability issues alongside other equal opportunity issues will form part of the United Kingdom's position in negotiations on the EU constitution. [129980]

Maria Eagle: The existing Treaty provides a good basis for legislation to combat various forms of discrimination including discrimination against disabled people. Legislation under the Article 13 of the Treaty establishing the European Community can only be adopted by the unanimous agreement of member states. This allows for the wide diversity between member states' social systems to be respected as demonstrated by the provisions of the Race and Employment Directives adopted by the Community in 2000. Our view is that the existing voting arrangements should be retained in the Intergovernmental Conference.

Health and Safety Executive

Mr. Lazarowicz: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many (a) deaths and (b) serious injuries at work occurring in the Edinburgh area have been reported to the Health and Safety Executive in each of the last five years, broken down by sector. [128542]

Mr. Browne: The number of fatal and serious injuries[1] reported to HSE and local authorities (LAs) in the LA area of the city of Edinburgh 1997–98 to 2001–02 are in the table.

Jobcentre Plus

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when he expects job points to be installed in (a) Burnt Oak Library, (b) Hendon Job Centre and (c) Mill Hill Job Centre; and if he will make a statement. [133062]

Mr. Browne: The administration of Jobcentre Plus is a matter for the Chief Executive of Jobcentre Plus, David Anderson. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from David Anderson to Andrew Dismore, dated 23 October 2003:

As Jobcentre Plus is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question concerning the installation of Jobpoints in Burnt Oak Library, Hendon and Mill Hill Jobcentres. This is something that falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

I can confirm that a Jobpoint is scheduled to be installed in Burnt Oak Library on 28 October 2003. The availability of the Jobpoint in the Library will be publicised in local Jobcentres through posters and leaflets and leaflets will also be issued to customers using the library. To further publicise the new Jobpoint service an official launch is planned later this year in December.

Jobcentre Plus staff currently visit the Library every two weeks to provide face to face advice and jobsearch assistance. This will continue after the Jobpoint has been installed.

Hendon already has eight Jobpoints, which were installed in May 2001. Mill Hill also already has eight Jobpoints, which were installed in November 2001.

I hope this is helpful.

Paul Holmes: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many representations he has received in the last 12 months opposing the closure of local Jobcentre Plus offices; which organisations submitted these representations; and if he will make a statement. [113260]

Mr. Browne: The administration of Jobcentre Plus is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Jobcentre Plus, David Anderson. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from David Anderson to Paul Holmes dated 28 July 2003:

As Jobcentre Plus is an Executive Agency, I have been asked to reply to your question concerning representations to the Secretary of State regarding the closure of local Jobcentre Plus offices. This falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

During the past 12 months, there have been forteen represenations in the form of parliamentary questions or letters to the Secretary of State from MPs expressing concern about the delivery plans of Jobcentre Plus and specifically about the closure of offices. In addition to responding to these representations in writing, both the Minister of State for Work, Nick Brown, and the Project Director for Jobcentre Plus, Jeremy Groombridge, met with a number of MPs to give assurances about the level of service that will be provided.

At the Jobcentre Plus District level, managers have and will continue to consult with the widest possible range of people about the service they are planning to provide. Local advice and welfare groups, local authorities and MPs are essential sources of guidance in this matter. Any represention resulting from this consultation process are collated by District Managers.

Jobcentre Plus is delivering a radical change in the way that benefits and employment services are provided to people of working age. By 2006, there will be around 1,000 newly integrated offices across the country which will provide customers with a 'one-stop' service for benefits, advice and jobs. Over 250 offices are offering this new service already and 8 out of 10 customers tell us they are satisfied with all elements of the new service.

These new Jobcentre Plus services are customer focussed. The new offices enable customers to make enquiries about both their benefits and employment opportunities in the same place. Our new telephone contact centres mean that customers can make enquiries about both benefits and jobs without even having to come into one of our offices. The introduction of new technology is also enabling people to find the information they need about jobs and training via the Internet and our new Jobpoints. Jobpoints are not just being placed in Jobcentre Plus offices, they are also being placed in other public places such as libraries and supermarkets. All of these developments are making it easier for our customers to take advantage of the services we provide.

I hope this is helpful.

Tony Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many job points there are in prisons in the UK. [133953]

Malcolm Wicks: The administration of Jobcentre Plus is a matter for the Chief Executive of Jobcentre Plus, David Anderson. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from David Anderson to Tony Cunningham, dated 23 October 2003:

As Jobcentre Plus is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question concerning how many Jobpoints there are in prisons in the UK. This is something that falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

We have piloted a new scheme placing Jobpoints in four prisons to establish if this will assist prisoners in finding jobs. These were installed between July and October 2002 and have proved to be successful. Jobpoints were distributed as follows:

HMP Featherstone: 1 Jobpoint

HMP Hollesley Bay: 1 Jobpoint

HMP Lewes: 2 Jobpoints

HMP Swansea: 2 Jobpoints

We are planning to install Jobpoints in a further ten prisons in late spring/early summer 2004.

I hope this is helpful.

Liability Insurance

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what discussions his Department has had with the Office of Fair Trading on the introduction of compulsory notice renewal periods for liability insurance; and if he will make a statement. [127832]

Mr. Browne: We continue to be in discussion with the Office of Fair Trading on all aspects of Employers' Liability Compulsory Insurance. In relation to renewals the Government were pleased to see the introduction by the Association of British Insurers and the British Insurance Brokers' Association of new guidance to insurers and brokers on renewals. The guidance included a recommendation for providing policy holders with at least 21 days notice of their renewal terms. In the first instance the Government will look to see the response of the industry to this guidance.

Lone Parents

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will estimate the value of accrued entitlements to the child maintenance bonus among lone parents in receipt of income support; and if he will make it his policy to preserve accrued entitlements to the child maintenance bonus once the new child support rules are applied to all families. [132487]

Mr. Pond: The information on the value of accrued entitlements to the child maintenance bonus among lone parents on income support is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

An extended period of one month, rather than the usual 14 days, to meet the work condition for the payment of child maintenance bonus has been put in place for cases transferring to the new child support scheme. To go further would require the maintenance of a substantial number of records for an indefinite period, thereby increasing administrative costs.

The child maintenance bonus was a feature of the old child support scheme, introduced in 1997 to give parents with care receiving income support or income-related Job Seeker's Allowance the benefit of up to £5 a week of the maintenance paid, when they returned to work. In the new scheme, the bonus will be replaced by the child maintenance premium, which will ensure that up to £10 a week of the maintenance that is paid will pass to the parent with care, while she is still on benefit. We estimate that the annual cost of child maintenance premium will be more than four times that which would have been spent in a year on a continued child maintenance bonus scheme.

Pension Credit

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many pensioners in Hendon (a) are receiving pension credit, (b) are entitled to pension credit but not yet claiming it, (c) are receiving pension savings credit, (d) are entitled to pension savings credit but not yet claiming it, (e) received free eye tests in the last year for which figures are available, (f) received free TV licences in the last year for which figures are available and (g) will be entitled to winter fuel payment (i) at the standard rate and (ii) at the higher rate for older pensioners in 2003–04; and if he will make a statement. [134038]

Malcolm Wicks: The information requested about Pension Credit is not yet available in the format requested.

As at May 2003 there were 3,000 Minimum Income Guarantee claimants in the Hendon constituency. Around half of all pensioner households will be eligible for Pension Credit and stand to gain on average £400 a year (around £7 a week). We intend from November to publish monthly reports on the progress of Pension Credit take-on, which will include information on the number of applications. (1–4)

The number of sight tests paid for by the national health service for those aged 60 and over in Barnet, Enfield and Haringay health authority for the year ending 31 March, 2003 was 54,780. (5)

The information requested about TV licences and Winter Fuel payments is not available in the format requested, such information as is available is as follows.

The number of people aged 75 and over, in receipt of a key benefit as at 31 May 2003 in Hendon was 6,600. These people would be eligible to receive a free TV licence. (6–8)

The number of people in Hendon who received a Winter Fuel payment for Winter 2002–03 was 17,715 and we expect the number to be around the same for 2003–04. Of that figure 4,055 were over age 80 and therefore would be eligible to receive an additional payment. (9–11)

Notes:

1. Source: IAD Information Centre.
2. The number for MIG refers to benefit units where the claimant and/or their partner are aged 60 or over.
3. The figure for the number of MIG claimants is based on a 5 per cent. sample and therefore subject to sampling variation.
4. This figure has been rounded to the nearest hundred and quoted in thousands.
5. The total number of sight tests paid for by the NHS for this constituency was 146,380.
6. Source: IAD Information Centre 5 per cent sample
7. TV licence figures based on 5 per cent. data taken from the Client Group Analysis of the population over State Pension age as at 31 May 2003, and are therefore subject to a degree of sampling variation. These figures are expressed in thousands and rounded to the nearest hundred.
8. As only one TV licence is required per household, the number of free TV licences issued may be lower than the number of people entitled to one. Some households may contain more than one person aged 75 and over and not all households with a person aged 75 or over will have a television.
9. Source: IAD Information Centre 100 per cent. sample

10. Winter Fuel Payment figures taken from the Matching Intelligence Data Analysis Service Winter Fuels Payment 2002/2003 exercise 100 per cent data. 100 per cent data figures are rounded to the nearest five.
11. Key benefits are Attendance Allowance, Disability Living Allowance, Severe Disablement Allowance, Incapacity Benefit, Minimum Income Guarantee and State Pension.

Sex Shops

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what his policy is on advertising jobs in job centres for posts in licensed sex shops. [116465]

Mr. Browne: The administration of Jobcentre Plus is a matter for the acting Chief Executive of Jobcentre Plus, David Anderson he will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from David Anderson to Tim Loughton, dated 28 July 2003:

As Jobcentre Plus is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question concerning Jobcentre Plus policy on advertising jobs in Jobcentres for posts in licensed sex shops. This is something that falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Acting Chief Executive of the Agency.

The Ann Summers organisation recently challenged Jobcentre Plus' policy in refusing vacancies that are connected to the sale of sex related products. The outcome of the resulting Judicial Review was announced on Wednesday 18 June.

The outcome of the Ann Summers Judicial Review was to quash Jobcentre Plus' decision to refuse Ann Summers' vacancies and the policy that underpinned that decision. In response Jobcentre Plus have considered a range of options, taking into account the judge's observations in the case, the operational implications and the interests of all concerned.

Jobcentre Plus' decision is to accept all vacancies from the sex and related industries from 21 July 2003, provided that they are legal and fulfil our other criteria for accepting and displaying vacancies.

I hope this is helpful.

Small Business Council

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when his Department will be responding to the recommendations put forward in the Small Business Council Annual Report 2003 in relation to insurance; and if he will make a statement. [127831]

Mr. Browne: The Department will co-ordinate its response with the Department of Trade and Industry, which expects to respond to the Small Business Council's recommendations in October 2003.

Pensions

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what steps he is taking to ensure that the Government's low-cost stakeholder pensions are taken up by the people towards whom the Government is aiming them. [133203]

Malcolm Wicks: Stakeholder pensions are for everyone, but particularly moderate earners without access to a company pension scheme. Employers that do not provide a company pension scheme must give their employees access to a stakeholder pension. Charges are capped to 1 per cent. of the value of the individual's fund each year, people can pay amounts from £20 upwards into them, and can stop and start contributions without penalty. Everyone now has access to a good value pension. Over three-quarters of first-year stakeholder pension sales (690,000) were to workers earning under £30,000 a year, with around two-thirds of first-year sales (530,000) going to workers earning under £20,000 a year. The Government is working to ensure that individuals actively and regularly plan for their retirement, that they are aware of the various options for saving for retirement, including stakeholder pensions, and where they can get information to help them make decisions.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans he has to change the state pension age. [133518]

Malcolm Wicks: Following consultation on the options for equality in State Pension age, the Pensions Act 1995 introduced measures to gradually equalise the State Pension age at 65 between 2010 and 2020.

Our Green Paper "Simplicity, security and choice: Working and saving for retirement" (Cm 5677), which was published in December 2002, reviewed the issue of State Pension age and announced that we do not propose an increase in the State Pension age. Such an increase would impact most heavily on those most dependant on the State Pension.

The Government's priority is to address the employment rates of those approaching 65 and to introduce new choices to encourage people to work past 65 where they want to.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Democratic Republic of Congo

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the transitional Government of the Democratic Republic of Congo on the subject of child witches. [133618]

Mr. Mullin: None.

East Africa

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the peace process between Eritrea and Ethiopia. [133762]

Mr. Mullin: The current situation in the peace process is that the Boundary Commission set up under the Algiers Agreement has made a decision on the position of the boundary between Ethiopia and Eritrea, which is legally binding. We and the UN Security Council, most recently in Resolution 1507 of 12 September 2003, have called on both parties to implement this fully.

East Timor

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with representatives from the UN Serious Crimes Unit regarding the progress of the East Timor humanitarian crimes trials in Jakarta; what steps the UN is taking to monitor proceedings; whether a UN review of the proceedings is being considered; and if he will make a statement. [132997]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have not had discussions with the UN Serious Crimes Unit (SCU) or any other UN officials about the Jakarta Ad Hoc Tribunal on Human Rights Abuses in East Timor. The UN office in Jakarta, rather than the SCU is responsible for monitoring the Ad Hoc Tribunal, but neither they nor the Secretariat in New York have made public any of their reports on the Tribunal. We believe that the UN is considering whether to do a formal review of the Ad Hoc Tribunal but no decision has been taken on this yet. Our officials at the UN remain in regular contact with UN officials about issues affecting East Timor. In August 2003 the EU issued a statement criticising the deficiencies of the Ad Hoc Tribunal.

Global Conflict Prevention Pool

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which Minister in his Department has responsibility for the Global Conflict Prevention Pool; and what responsibilities other Departments have for the Pool. [133143]

Mr. Rammell: A review of the Government's work on conflict prevention in 1999–2000 concluded that delivery would be improved by bringing together in a more co-ordinated way the existing activities of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO), the Department for International Development (DFID) and the Ministry of Defence (MoD) in this field. The Government therefore set up joint FCO/DFID/MoD Africa and Global Conflict Prevention Pools in 2000.

The Global Conflict Prevention Pool is overseen by a Cabinet Committee comprising my right hon. Friends the Foreign Secretary (the Chair), the Secretary of State for International Development, the Secretary of State for Defence and the Chief Secretary to HM Treasury. At Ministerial level, responsibility within the FCO rests with me.

The inter-departmental, tripartite management of the Pool is maintained at all official levels, including in the GCPP Steering Team and in the management teams for GCPP geographical and thematic strategies. While the FCO holds the Chair of the GCPP, responsibility for its management is shared equally between all three Departments.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in which countries the Global Conflict Prevention Pool has been active; and when meetings with (a) the UN, (b) the EU and (c) state representatives regarding conflict prevention were held. [133144]

Mr. Rammell: The Global Conflict Prevention Pool (GCPP) works through a wide range of programmes grouped under geographical, regional, thematic or international capacity building strategies. Its geographical strategies are:

Afghanistan;
The Balkans ;
Belize and Guatemala;
Central and Eastern Europe
Indonesia and East Timor;
India and Pakistan;
Iraq, The Middle East and North Africa;
Nepal;
Russia and the Former Soviet Union;
Sri Lanka.

The GCPP also has the following thematic and international capacity building strategies:

Security Sector Reform;
Small Arms Light Weapons;
OSCE and the Council of Europe;
The UN.

I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to him today (UIN 133142) for more details on these strategies.

Meetings to discuss conflict prevention with representatives of the UN, EU and of particular states take place regularly. Examples include UK participation in negotiations and discussions in the UN General Assembly and Security Council, and with the UN Secretariat, in the EU Political and Security Committee and during bilateral meetings with visiting Ministers and officials. Recent meetings include a visit to the UK in June for discussions of UN Reform by Jean-Mairie Guehenno, Head of the Department of Peacekeeping Operations in the UN Secretariat, negotiations on the UN General Assembly Resolution on the Secretary General's Report on Conflict Prevention in June and July, a call by the Swedish Ambassador for Conflict Prevention on the FCO in September, and bilateral discussions with the President of Afghanistan, Hamid Karzai during his visit to the UK in October 2003.

Guantanamo Bay (Feroz Abbasi)

Geraint Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment has been made of the mental health of Feroz Abbasi in Guantanamo Bay; and if it is intended that he will be repatriated to the UK if he is deemed unfit to face trial. [133396]

Mr. Mullin: Any health concerns there may be about the British nationals at Guantanamo Bay are being addressed and we are in contact with the families of those concerned. The issue of the mental health of a British national is information of a private and confidential nature.

Although Mr Abbasi has been designated as eligible to face prosecution before a Military Commission, he has not been charged. Furthermore, all legal proceedings against the British nationals detained at Guantanamo Bay are currently suspended. The question of fitness to face trial is therefore hypothetical at this stage. We are pressing the US authorities to move forward with the process of determining the future of all the British detainees at Guantanamo Bay. We have discussed, and are discussing, a range of options with the US, including the possibility of repatriation.

Indonesia

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on co-operation by Indonesia with the UN Serious Crimes Unit. [132998]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I am advised that Indonesia has not co-operated with the Serious Crimes Unit's investigations. There was a request to do so from the late Sergio Vieira de Mello when he was the Special Representative of the Secretary General to East Timor, and there was lobbying from the EU in support of this request.

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of Indonesia regarding the activities of Laskar Jihad members. [133538]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We have discussed counter-terrorism issues a number of times with the Government of Indonesia over the past year, although we have not specifically raised the activities of Laskar Jihad members.

Our bilateral counter-terrorism assistance involves capacity-building assistance, including training in counter-terrorism crisis management skills. We are encouraging moderate Islam in Indonesia to be more vocal. We are also offering specialist help and training in capacity building for provincial officials, focusing our help in provinces where improved governance will benefit the poor. Indonesia is a priority country for the Global Conflict Prevention Pool, and we are working to identify programmes to reduce sectarian violence and relieve humanitarian crises.

Middle East

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will press the United Nations to take steps to secure the presence of international observers in the Occupied Territories. [133513]

Mr. Rammell: The Quartet, of which the UN is a member, has provided for third party monitoring of its roadmap. On 26 September 2003, the Quartet reaffirmed its commitment to follow closely the implementation by the parties of their obligations. This is done using the resources Quartet Members already have in the region, including the US team led by John Wolf and UN representatives.

We have no plans to press the UN for more international observers in the Occupied Territories at this time.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the United Kingdom's (a) diplomatic and (b) trade relations with Israel will change as a result of the construction of the security wall. [133150]

Mr. Rammell: No.

The Government continue to use diplomatic channels to Israel to press for the route of the wall to be reconsidered. My right hon. Friends the Prime Minister and the Foreign Secretary made clear our concerns over its route and likely impact to the Israeli Prime Minister during his visit to London on 14 July 2003. My noble Friend the Baroness Symons of Vernham Dean also raised the matter with the Israeli Foreign Minster during her visit to Israel on 30 September 2003.

The wall should not be built within occupied territory. As the 17 October 2003 European Council statement made clear, we and our EU Partners are particularly concerned that the route marked out for the fence in the West Bank will cause further humanitarian and economic hardship to the Palestinians and could prejudge final status negotiations. We deplore this seizure of Palestinian land, the isolation of Palestinian villages and the creation of a further physical obstacle to the two-state solution.

Military Equipment

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the military equipment purchased under the Global Conflict Prevention Pool, stating in each case (a) the recipient, (b) the amount spent and (c) the end use; and if he will make a statement. [133026]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 22 October 2003]: The following table indicates the purchase of military equipment under the Global Conflict Prevention Pool (GCPP) since it was set up in 2000, and updates the information given in the response from the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, the hon. Member for Harlow in his reply to my hon. Friend the member for Richmond Park (Dr. Tonge) on 5 December 2002.

Pool funding is used to supply military equipment where this forms part of an integrated conflict prevention strategy, and is crucial to ensuring the stability of a conflict area and to the success of the strategy. The GCPP takes into account the risk of any equipment supplied being misused by the recipient or falling into other hands, and the likely political consequences. Ministers will always take the final decision on any supply of weapons and ammunition.

More general information on the details of the GCPP is available in the recent publication "The Global Conflict Prevention Pool—A joint UK Government approach to reducing conflict", which is available in the Library of the House. A copy of the booklet has been placed on the FCO website (www.fco.gov.uk) accessible under Global Issues—International Organisations—UN—Conflict Preventions.

Mobile Telephone Costs

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much his Department spent on calls from mobile telephones in (a) 2000, (b) 2001 and (c) 2002. [133531]

Mr. Rammell: This information is not held in the form requested and, particularly with regard to posts overseas, could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Responsibility for renting mobile phone services at over 200 diplomatic missions overseas is delegated to those missions.

Morocco

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the forthcoming visit of the King of Morocco, with specific reference to the Government's policy on the Western Sahara. [133614]

Mr. Rammell: The King of Morocco has been invited to visit the United Kingdom, but no date has been agreed. We regularly discuss the Western Sahara in our contacts with the Moroccan Government.

Mr. Kirtan Singh

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the appeal papers in respect of Mr. Kirtan Singh, date of birth 6 May 1973, were sent from New Delhi. [133480]

Mr. Mullin: The applicant has made two applications for Entry Clearance to the United Kingdom as the spouse of Lakhvir Kaur. The first application was made on 20 December 2001 and was refused on 26 June 2002. The appellant's solicitors informed us on 27 January 2003 that an appeal against this decision had been lodged on 5 July 2002. It later became apparent that the appeal had been lodged in error at the Deputy High Commission in Mumbai. In view of the circumstances the Visa Department in New Delhi suggested to the solicitors that a fresh application should be lodged.

The applicant reapplied on 23 July 2003 and was refused on 4 September 2003. Notice of Appeal against the Entry Clearance Officer's decision was received on 23 September. The explanatory statement will be prepared and despatched as soon as possible.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made by the United Kingdom in relation to the implementation of the disarmament objectives set out at the end of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty Review Conference in 2000; and if he will make a statement. [133027]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 22 October 2003]: The United Kingdom remains fully committed to all aspects of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT), including global and verifiable nuclear disarmament. We have an excellent record in fulfilling our NPT obligations on nuclear disarmament. Consistent with the policy set out in the 1998 Strategic Defence Review, the UK has gone further than other Nuclear Weapon States in implementing the measures agreed in the Final Document of the 2000 NPT Review Conference.

More specifically, the UK has:

withdrawn and dismantled the RAF's freefall nuclear bomb so that Trident is now our only nuclear weapons system;

reduced our operationally available stockpile to fewer than 200 warheads, which is a reduction of more than 70 per cent. in the potential explosive power of our nuclear forces since the end of the Cold War; dismantled the UK's last Chevaline warhead last year;

reduced the readiness of our nuclear forces: only a single Trident submarine is now on deterrent patrol, carrying 48 warheads. The submarine on patrol is normally on several days 'notice to fire' and its missiles are de-targeted; placed fissile material no longer required for defence purposes under international safeguards. All enrichment and reprocessing facilities in the UK are now liable to international inspection; and been more transparent about our nuclear and fissile material stockpiles and begun a national historical accounting study for fissile material produced.

The UK continues to play a full part in the NPT Review process, including most recently in the Second Session of the Preparatory Committee (PrepCom), which was held in Geneva in April and May this year. The UK issued a working paper at the PrepCom on its research into verification of nuclear disarmament and presented the conclusions of this interim study at a seminar during the PrepCom. We anticipate publishing a further paper for the 2004 session of the PrepCom and a consolidated paper at the Review Conference in 2005.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the states in the Middle East that have (a) signed and (b) ratified the (i) Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty, (ii) Chemical Weapons Convention and (iii) Biological and Toxin Weapons Convention. [133028]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 22 October 2003]: States parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (NPT) include:

Algeria, Bahrain, Egypt, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Morocco, Libya, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Syria, United Arab Emirates, Yemen.

States parties to the Chemical Weapons Convention (CWC) include:

Algeria, Bahrain, Iran, Jordan, Kuwait, Morocco, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, United Arab Emirates, Yemen. Israel has signed but not ratified the CWC.

States parties to the Biological and Toxins Weapons Convention (BWC) include:

Algeria, Bahrain, Iran, Iraq, Jordan, Kuwait, Lebanon, Libya, Morocco, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia, Yemen. Egypt. United Arab Emirates and Syria have signed but not ratified the BWC.

The United Kingdom regularly calls on all states of the region to accede to these regimes whenever the opportunity arises. We have also made clear our support for a Middle East zone free from weapons of mass destruction.

Pakistan

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of Pakistan on the proposal of exempting religious universities from the imposition of Shariah Law. [133615]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I discussed the Shariah Law with the Pakistani High Commissioner on 22 September 2003. I understand that the authorities in the North West Frontier Province will apply the Sharia Law to educational institutions.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Pakistani authorities on the current status of the blasphemy law. [133616]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I discussed the blasphemy laws with the Pakistani High Commissioner on 22 September 2003. She told me that her Government was taking action to prevent abuses of these laws. The British High Commission in Islamabad remains in close touch with representatives of Christian and other religious minorities in Pakistan.

Soviet Arctic Circle Region Medal

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from veterans who wish to accept the Russian Defence of the Soviet Arctic Circle Region Medal. [133543]

Mr. Rammell: Since June 2003, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office has received two telephone inquiries and one letter from veterans wishing to accept the Russian Defence of the Soviet Arctic Circle Region Medal.

Sudan

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the release from house arrest of Dr. al-Turabi by the Government of the Sudan. [133617]

Mr. Mullin: We welcome the release of Dr. al-Turabi and other political prisoners. We hope that the Government of Sudan will continue the process of reconciliation with all other parties.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his policy on the potential attendance of (a) Robert Mugabe and (b) Zimbabwe officials and Ministers on the EU travel ban list at the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting in December 2003. [132573]

Mr. Straw: As it is suspended from the Councils of the Commonwealth, no invitation has been issued to the Government of Zimbabwe. This is in line with past Commonwealth practice. The EU's travel ban obviously does not apply to Abuja, Nigeria, where the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting is being held as Nigeria is not a member of the EU.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions the British Government (a) has had and (b) plans to have with the government of (i) Australia, (ii) South Africa and (iii) Nigeria on President Robert Mugabe's attendance at the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting in December. [132574]

Mr. Straw: We have had regular discussions with the governments of Australia, South Africa and Nigeria on this issue. These discussions will continue in the run-up to CHOGM.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Buildmark Warranty Scheme

Huw Irranca-Davies: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make representations to the chief executive of the National Home-Building Council to extend the cover provided by the Buildmark Warranty Scheme to include permanent external fixtures in addition to structural defects. [133357]

Phil Hope: The terms of the Buildmark scheme are a matter for the council and board of the National House-Building Council (NHBC). I am aware that the NHBC keeps the terms of the scheme under review. The cover provided in years three to 10 of Buildmark agreements has been extended over recent years to include damage occurring in external render and external vertical tile hanging, tile and slate roof coverings, and multiple glazing, as well as structural matters and various non-structural internal features. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has no plans at present for any representations to the NHBC about adding to the list of non-structural external features included in the cover.

Huw Irranca-Davies: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what recent meetings he has had with the chief executive of the National Home-Building Council to discuss its Buildmark Warranty Scheme. [133358]

Keith Hill: My right hon. Friend the Lord Rooker met the chairman and the chief executive of the National House Building Council in April this year, to discuss matters of common interest, including the Buildmark scheme.

Council Housing Stock

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) how many local authorities have transferred the whole or part of their housing stock in each year since 1990; [133768]

(2) how many local councils have transferred (a) all and (b) some of their housing stock to (i) housing associations and (ii) bodies other than housing associations. [133772]

Keith Hill: The number of local authorities who have transferred whole or part of their housing stock in each year since 1990 are tabled as follows:

	Number of Authorities transferring stock
1990	8
1991	5
1992	2
1993	5
1994	12
1995	9
1996	10
1997	5
1998	15
1999	24
2000	18
2001	15
2002	16
2003	[1]10

[1] to date

A local authority may only transfer its tenanted stock to a Registered Social Landlord.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will hold discussions with representatives of local councils wishing to retain control of their housing stock. [133769]

Keith Hill: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister would welcome discussions with local authorities to discuss the options for delivering the decent homes target.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what central government financial inducements are available to local councils when transferring housing stock to (a) housing associations and (b) other outside bodies. [133771]

Keith Hill: There are no central government financial inducements available to a local authority when transferring its housing stock. A local authority may only transfer its tenanted housing stock to a Registered Social Landlord, a housing organisation registered with the Housing Corporation, of which a housing association is one such organisation.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will take steps to ensure that local authorities which retain control of their housing stock receive the same financial assistance as local authorities which transfer their housing stock. [134014]

Keith Hill: The Sustainable Communities Plan made it clear that local authorities seeking additional investment in their housing stock, in order to meet the decent home standard, are able to choose from three options: stock transfer, the Private Finance Initiative and setting up an Arms Length Management Organisation.

The resources available for social housing, although greatly increased under this Government, are limited. To make best use of those resources the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister will only provide additional funding to councils that separate their landlord and strategic functions. This provides a strong incentive to better performance; ensures a sharper focus on the two distinct housing functions; and guarantees that tenants have a greater role in the future management of their homes.

In a number of cases local authorities are able to meet the decent homes standard out of their mainstream funding.

Council Tax

Mr. Alan Campbell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister which local authorities take into account war pensions when assessing council tax. [131317]

Mr. Pond: I have been asked to reply.

A statutory disregard of £10 is applied to War Disablement Pensions and War Widows Pensions when calculating entitlement to income-related benefits. In the case of Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit, local authorities have the discretion to apply a further disregard up to the full amount of any War Pension in payment.

At April 2003, 392 local authorities disregarded War Pensions in full and two authorities, Middlesbrough and Bolton, applied a full disregard to War Pensions but not War Widows' Pensions. A further 12 authorities applied a disregard in excess of the statutory £10. They are, as follows: Barrow; Chester-le-Street; Gateshead; Newcastle; North Tyneside; Preston; Salford; South Tyneside; Sunderland; Surrey Heath; Tynedale; and Weymouth and Portland. The remaining two authorities, Easington and Wear Valley, applied the statutory disregard only.

This answer corrects the information given in the reply to the hon. Member for Havant (Mr. Willetts) on 14 April 2003, Official Report, column 513W.

Euro

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much has been spent in each year by his Department in preparing for UK entry to the euro; how much his Department plans to spend on preparations for UK entry to the euro for each year from the current financial year up to and including 2005–06; and what estimates he has made of the total costs to his Department of changeover to the European Single Currency. [131598]

Yvette Cooper: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government, Regional Governance and Fire on 6 October 2003, Official Report, column 1027W.

Fire Scheme

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what representations he has received from (a) individuals and (b) organisations in North Yorkshire on the Fire Scheme. [133586]

Mr. Raynsford: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister understands the hon. Member is referring to the North Yorkshire Fire & Rescue Authority's Draft Integrated Risk Management Plan. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has received no representations on the Scheme from either individuals or organisations in North Yorkshire.

Marine Aggregates

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the effects of global warming in drawing up the guidance issued for determining applications for the extraction of marine aggregates. [133249]

Yvette Cooper: The effects of global warming were not assessed during the preparation of Marine Minerals Guidance Note 1 (MMG1) published in July 2002. The progressive effects of climate change due to global warming on the marine environment are still relatively uncertain. However, at present, these appear to include rising sea levels, increased storminess, changes to sea floor habitats and modified behavioural patterns of marine organisms. These are all matters that can be taken into account, as appropriate and as knowledge increases, in the Environmental Statements that accompany each marine minerals dredging licence application. Each Environmental Statement is examined carefully and widely consulted upon before that application is determined. Licences for dredging of marine minerals are both time-limited and subject to conditions that include monitoring of the marine environment to ensure that action can be taken if unforeseen effects take place. As regards general policy, MMG1, as with all Government guidance, is subject to periodical review and to revision when necessary. Where the impacts of climate change both become more certain and are sufficiently significant to influence the stance of policy in these areas, the guidance can be revised to take them into account.

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much marine aggregate has been extracted from UK coasts in the last 10 years; and what his assessment is of the total amount that may be removed within safe environmental limits. [133252]

Yvette Cooper: Most marine dredging for aggregate takes place over five kilometres away from the immediate vicinity of the coast. There is little extraction closer to the coast. The total amount of sand and gravel extracted for use as aggregate from all licensed areas in UK waters over the past 10 years is about 253.3 million tonnes. It is not possible to estimate with any certainty how much can be removed within safe environmental limits since the total size of the resource is not yet known. In addition, impacts on the sea-floor, marine currents and waves, habitats and uses of the sea all need to be assessed in detail, on a project-by-project basis, to establish whether any individual proposal is environmental acceptable. Each licence application is subject to an environmental impact assessment which includes a coastal impact study. This is the subject of careful analysis and wide consultation and, if necessary, additional investigations before a decision is taken. All licences that are issued by the Crown Estate are subject to conditions specified by Government to make sure that any environmental impacts are minimised. Licences are time-limited so that the position can be reconsidered if further dredging is proposed.

Mobile Phone Base Stations

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the maximum distance is from a mobile phone base station that a school can be located in order to meet the definition 'near' thus requiring the relevant body of the school to be consulted under paragraph 62 of Planning Policy Guidance Note 8 (Telecommunications). [133886]

Yvette Cooper: The Government have not defined the maximum distance from a mobile phone base station that a school can be located in order to meet the definition "near" thus requiring the relevant body of the school to be consulted under paragraph 62 of Planning Policy Guidance Note 8 (Telecommunications).

The Code of Best Practice on Mobile Phone Network Development published in November 2002 states that in determining whether a school or college should be consulted the following factors should be taken into account by network operators and local planning authorities:

the proposed site is on school/college grounds;

the proposed development would be seen from the school/college or its grounds;

the site is on the main access point used by pupils/students to the school/college;

there is a history of concern about base stations within the local community;

the local planning authority has requested consultation with the school/college;

the school/college has requested that it be included in any consultation (DfES has advised schools and colleges that if they wish to be consulted about base stations in their locality they should notify the local planning authority setting out the circumstance in which they would wish to be consulted).

Neighbourhood Renewal

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will place in the Library the calculations, indicators and assessments for each Neighbourhood Renewal Fund authority which led to the identification of 26 such authorities for additional residual NRF support. [132751]

Yvette Cooper: A copy of the table showing the allocations to the 26 local authority areas eligible for residual Neighbourhood Renewal Fund (NRF) resources in 2004–05 and 2005–06; the list of indicators against which the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister measured the distance travelled by each area towards floor target achievement, and the set of base data used in these measurements is available in the Library of the House.

Ordnance Survey Framework Document

Andrew Bennett: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he expects to publish the Ordnance Survey Framework Document. [133861]

Yvette Cooper: My predecessor, my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East (Mr. McNulty) announced in July 2002 that a new Ordnance Survey Framework Document would be produced, following the conclusion of the Quinquennial Review.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is not in a position to say when the Framework Document will be finalised and published, but the Government is well aware of the need to conclude this matter without unnecessary further delay.

Planning Law

Mr. Burns: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on his plans to amend the planning laws to give local authorities and planning departments more powers to overcome abuses of planning law, with special reference to the removal of travellers and others from land without the consent of the landowner. [132927]

Yvette Cooper: When travellers have bought and developed land without planning permission, this would be an unauthorised development, which is a breach of current planning laws. A range of powers already exists to deal with unauthorised development, which is a planning matter. When travellers have trespassed onto land they do not own, that is an unauthorised encampment.

The police can issue a Section 61 Direction under the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994, directing trespassers to leave land. Failure to comply with such a direction is an offence. Local authorities may issue a Direction to Travellers on unauthorised encampments under Section 77 of the 1994 Act. Again, failure to comply is an offence. Landowners have power under the common law to remove trespassers from their land. The procedure to be used is contained in Part 55 of the Civil Procedure Rules.

There are also proposals contained in Clause 62 of the Anti-Social Behaviour Bill, to give the police power to direct illegally camped travellers to leave land. The new power could only be used if the local authority has available pitches on sites in their area.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if his Department will make a grant to Chelmsford borough council to assist it in offsetting the money they will have to spend to enforce planning laws through direct action at Cranham road, Little Waltham, Chelmsford; and if he will make a statement. [132929]

Keith Hill: No. Local planning authorities already have powers under section 178 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 to take direct enforcement action and recover their costs from the owner of the land.

RAF Newton

Mr. Clarke: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he expects to receive the report of the Inspector into the proposal to build an asylum seekers accommodation centre on the site of RAF Newton in Nottinghamshire; and when he expects to announce a decision. [134062]

Keith Hill: The Inspector's report was received on 22 July and is under active consideration. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister will proceed to a decision as soon as possible.

South Sefton Partnership

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what steps have been taken by the South Sefton Partnership to build a stronger community by helping local people (a) to be involved in planning and decision-making at local level and (b) supporting community initiatives. [128881]

Yvette Cooper: This is one of Sefton Partnership's four key objectives. The Partnership has recently prepared a small booklet "South Sefton Partnership—The Story So Far" which aims to illustrate steps taken to date on these four key objectives.

The steps taken in respect of this objective are as follows:

Supporting the creation of the 13 Neighbourhood Action Groups (NAG) in South Sefton to co-ordinate regeneration activity at local level.

Creating and funding 12-month Making it Real capacity-building project to help the NAGs complete neighbourhood audits and develop local action plans.

Creating the NAG Support Team and the NAG Development Fund to support the on-going work of the NAGs at neighbourhood level.

Funding a consultation exercise, run by Venus, to identify ways that young people can be actively involved in the regeneration process.

Funding the Neighbourhood Skills Works project to provide NAG members with the skilled required to play an active role in local regeneration activities.

Funding the Volunteer Support Project in Netherton and Litherland which aims to help groups provide a high-quality youth services through training and supporting volunteer workers.

Launching the South Sefton Key Fund, a project to provide groups with easy access to grants of up to £10,000 to support community projects in South Sefton.

Sunset Clauses

Bob Spink: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to include a sunset clause in all new legislation promoted by his Department unless a specific case can be made to exclude a sunset clause. [120863]

Yvette Cooper: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister actively promotes the better regulation agenda and the use of sunsetting where appropriate.

Sustainable Communities Plan

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) if he will list the sites in each of the growth areas defined in the Government's Sustainable Development Plan that have been designated as sites of European importance for birds under the Birds Directive; [132671]

(2) if he will list the sites of special scientific interest that are within each of the grant areas in South-East England designated under the Sustainable Communities Plan; [132674]

(3) if he will list the (a) areas of outstanding natural beauty, (b) ancient woodland and (c) national nature reserves that lie within the grant areas designated under his Sustainable Communities Plan. [132675]

Yvette Cooper: The Chilterns and Kent Downs Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty (AONB) fall within the growth areas.

A list of Sites of Special Interests (SSSI), National Nature Reserves (NNRs), ancient woodlands and Special Protection Areas under the Birds Directive (SPAs), within local authorities covered by the growth areas is available in the Library of the House. All NNRs and SPAs are also SSSIs, as are some ancient woodlands. Owners and occupiers of SSSIs must obtain consent from English Nature before carrying out any operations on their SSSIs that are likely to damage the special conservation interest. Government Departments and public bodies must similarly consult English Nature before carrying out or permitting any operation likely to damage the special conservation interest of SSSIs.

The Communities Plan sets out a framework for housing growth within the principles of sustainable development. That means high density, high quality design and easy access to public transport and other public services. It restates our commitment to develop brownfield first, and to protect and enhance the green belt, minimising adverse environmental impacts. In the Milton Keynes South Midlands area, for example, local and regional partners have put forward proposals for housing growth which fall overwhelmingly in and around the existing urban areas.

These and other growth proposals will be examined through the Regional Planning Guidance process. Areas such as AONBs and SSSIs receive a high degree of protection from the planning system because of the national importance of their landscapes and their nature conservation value. National planning policies on these areas are set out in Planning Policy Guidance Notes 7 and 9.

In order to ensure that growth proposals enhance and improve countryside and nature conservation, we are actively enhancing green spaces within the growth areas. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is currently drawing up a green space strategy for the Thames Gateway, and are developing a programme to improve the quality and accessibility of strategic green spaces in and around the other growth areas.

HEALTH

3G Telephone Masts

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice has been issued by the Department on the effect of 3G telephone masts on public health. [133037]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The National Radiological Protection Board (NRPB) has statutory responsibility for providing advice on health risks from exposure to electromagnetic fields including radio waves. It has received a number of inquiries about a recent Dutch study, the effects of third generation (3G) signals from the Netherlands and has posted a response statement on its website at www.nrpb.org.

Government advice on mobile phones and health is based on the Stewart Report, issued in May 2000 and available at www.iegmp.org.uk. In respect of base stations the report concluded:

"The balance of evidence indicates that there is no general risk to the health of people living near to base stations on the basis that exposures are expected to be small fractions of guidelines."

The operators of mobile telephone equipment, including 3G systems, should ensure that public exposure does not exceed the guidelines of the International Commission on Non-Ionizing Radiation Protection. Measurements to date undertaken by the NRPB and the Radiocommunications Agency (www.radio.gov.uk) have confirmed that public exposures are very much lower than the international guidelines.

Research published since the Stewart Report is currently being reviewed by the NRPB's Advisory Group on Non-ionising Radiation. The group's review is expected in the next few months.

Breast Cancer

Jim Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who the members are of the Cancer Research UK study team studying potential risk factors for breast cancer. [133147]

Miss Melanie Johnson: This is an independent research project, which has not been directly commissioned or funded by the Government. The Department does not, therefore, hold details of the members of the study team. Cancer Research UK may be able to provide the information requested.

Accident and Emergency Services

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff were employed in the accident and emergency departments in Hull and East Yorkshire NHS Trust on 1October (a) 2003 and (b) 2002, broken down by grade. [134050]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Figures for the number of staff employed in accident and emergency departments on 1 October 2003 have not yet been published. The figures for 2002 are in the table.

Hospital, Public Health Medicine and Community Health Services (HCHS): Medical Staff within Hull & East Yorkshire NHS Trust with a speciality in Accident & Emergency medicine As at 30 September 2002

Arthritis

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the progress made by the NHS in providing treatment for arthritis sufferers. [133826]

Dr. Ladyman: The Government is aware that arthritis is a major cause of disability in the United Kingdom and that it has a significant impact, not only on health and community services, but also on the people who experience its painful symptoms. We are sympathetic to the needs of patients with arthritis and have helped make new generation drugs for arthritis treatment such as etanercept and infliximab available to National Health Service patients.

Maximum waiting times have fallen over the past few years and will continue to do so. By the end of 2005, the maximum waiting time for a first outpatient appointment with a consultant will fall to three months and the maximum wait for inpatient treatment will fall to six months. This will help all NHS patients, including those with arthritis.

Over the years 2003–04 to 2007–08, expenditure on the NHS in England will increase on average by 7.4 per cent., a year over and above inflation—a total increase over the period of 43 per cent., in real terms. This will take the total spent on the NHS in England from 56 billion in 2002–03 to over 90 billion in 2007–08 and lead to better services for all patients.

Cancer Research

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on implementation of the promise made by his Department to match charitable spending on cancer research pound for pound in 2003. [133190]

Miss Melanie Johnson: In the NHS Cancer Plan, the government stated its commitment to increasing funds for cancer research so as to play a full part alongside its funding partners. We said that, by 2003, we would be investing an additional £20 million each year in the infrastructure for cancer research and an extra £4 million on prostate cancer research. This new funding would mean that, for the first time, Government (through the Department, the Higher Education Funding Council and the Research Councils) would match the current investment of the voluntary sector.

In June 2002, we confirmed to the House of Commons Science and Technology Committee that Government investment in cancer research had already reached the level of the charities. Nevertheless, we remain committed to investing the extra £24 million, as described in the Cancer Plan.

Paul Holmes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money will be spent in 2003–04 on research into (a) cures and (b) early diagnosis of (i) mesothelioma, (ii) breast cancer, (iii) other lung cancers, (iv) prostate cancer and (v) skin cancer; and if he will make a statement. [133496]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Over 75 per cent. of the Departments total expenditure on research, including that on cancer, is devolved to national health service providers and details of these figures are not collected centrally.

The International Cancer Research Portfolio database at www.cancerportfolio.org contains details of projects supported by cancer research funding organisations in the United Kingdom and the United States. Data submitted by the National Cancer Research Institute includes the research portfolios of the 15 largest Government and charitable funders of cancer research in the UK where the research was active on 1 January 2003. The database can be searched by type of cancer, area of research, and funding organisation. It does not contain details of research funded through allocations to NHS providers.

National Care Standards Commission

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision he has made for the annual cost to public funds of the National Care Standards Commission's inspection of independent boarding schools. [119655]

Dr. Ladyman [holding answer 16 June 2003]: The National Care Standards Commission (NCSC) is funded partly by grant in aid from the Department of Health and partly by the income it generates through its registration and inspection work. This Department's grant in aid funds the entire range of the NCSC's regulatory activities and is not broken down into components according to service.

Criminal Records Checks

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many employees in the NHS require Criminal Records Bureau checks; what the total cost of those checks is; and who pays for them. [133304]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 22 October 2003]: Since the start of the Criminal Records Bureau in March 2002, approximately 170,000 disclosure applications have been received by the CRB from the national health service and primary care. The total cost in fees of these disclosures is estimated at £2,744,000. The fee for disclosures is normally met in the NHS by employers.

Dentistry

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in England have been registered with an NHS dentist in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [131416]

Ms Rosie Winterton: At 31 July 2003, 23.1 million patients were registered with a general dental service (GDS) dentist in England. The information is shown in the table for 30 September for the years 1994 to 2002 and for 31 July 2003.

General Dental Service: Number of persons registered with a dentist, 1994 to 2003—England

	Million
At 30 September
1994	28.4
1995	27.3
1996	26.8
1997	26.8
1998[1]	23.5
1999[1]	23.5
2000[1]	23.7
2001[1]	23.6
2002[1]	23.5
At 31 July 2003	23.1

[1] Registration data for these years is not comparable with earlier years due to the change in the registration period.

The registration figures exclude patients who have not been to their GDS dentist within the past 15 months. The figures also exclude patients who receive dental treatment from other national health service dental services including dental access centres and patients who access treatment from dentists on an occasional basis.

The registration periods for adults and children were changed for new registrations from September 1996. This affected registration numbers after November 1997 and, as a result, registration numbers from December 1997 onwards, when the first 15 months registrations expired, cannot be compared with the earlier figures. Some of the reduction in recorded registration numbers is due to improvements in the methods of removing duplicate registration records which were first employed by the Dental Practice Board in 1993.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list for each primary care trust the number of children in the last year who have required dental treatment under a general anaesthetic; [132299]

(2) if he will list for each primary care trust the average cost of dental treatment for children requiring a general anaesthetic in the last year. [132300]

Ms Rosie Winterton: This information is not held centrally. Since January 2002, all national health service dental treatment under general anaesthesia has been carried out in a hospital setting. Information on dental treatment for children carried out in NHS hospitals does not identify where general anaesthesia has been used, nor the cost per case.

Departmental Costs

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the cost was to his Department for (a) ministerial cars and drivers, (b) taxis, (c) train travel, (d) the use of helicopters, (e) airline tickets and (f) chartered aeroplanes in each year since 1997. [123082]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Information relating to the cost of ministerial cars and drivers has been addressed in a letter to the hon. Member from the Chief Executive of the Government Car and Despatch Agency. Information relating to the cost of planes chartered for ministerial travel is the responsibility of the Cabinet Office.

Information on the various elements of travel costs available from the Department's accounting system is given as follows. Figures are for financial years ending 31 March. Separate information on taxi expenditure was not kept before 2001–02.

	Cost £
Taxis
2001–02	312,226
2002–03	336,659
Train travel
1997–98	2,500,136
1998–99	3,622,829
1999–2000	4,825,844
2000–01	3,187,127
2001–02	4,741,888
2002–03	4,265,410
Airline tickets
1997–98	438,633
1998–99	367,992
1999–2000	454,484
2000–01	614,316
2001–02	655,581
2002–03	639,508

There has been no expenditure on helicopters

All official travel is undertaken in accordance with the rules contained in the Department's published departmental staff handbook and all ministerial travel is undertaken in accordance with the rules set out in the Ministerial Code and Travel by Ministers, copies of which are available in the Library.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) special advisers, (b) press officers, (c) civil servants, (d) advisers to civil servants and (e) permanent staff were working for his Department in each year since 1996. [126472]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Between 1996 and 12 June 2003, there have been two special advisers in the Department of Health. Since 12 June 2003, there have been three special advisers at the Department of Health.

Information on the number of press officers is shown in the table.

	Numbers
1996–97	15
1997–98	16
1998–99	18
1999–2000	21
2000–01	22
2001–02	22
2002–03	23

The term "advisers to civil servants" is not recognised.

Data on staffing levels in the civil service is collected from Departments and Agencies twice-yearly, in April and October. Headline figures are published under National Statistics guidelines via a press notice. Those for October 2002 were published on 27 February 2003.

A copy of the press notice, accompanying media brief and supporting tables is available at www.civil-service.gov.uk/statistics. Copies of these documents are also available in the Library.

More detailed information on the civil service is published annually in "Civil Service Statistics", copies of which are available in the Library. The last edition, based on April 2001 data, is due to be published at the end of July 2003.

Elderly Care

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will commission research into the provision of elderly care by the independent care sector; and if he will make a statement. [132914]

Dr. Ladyman: There are no current plans to commission research into the provision of older people's care by the independent care sector. We believe that older people and their families should be able to choose from a range of options that will best meet their needs. The quality of care available to individuals is much more important to them than the type of organisation that provides the care.

Foundation Hospital Trusts

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the criteria he intends to apply when deciding the value of the asset base and the charge on assets for foundation trusts. [132144]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 14 October 2003]: All national health service bodies are at present required to earn an annual return of 3.5 per cent. of their average relevant net assets held during the year. This charge is paid by NHS trusts as public dividend capital dividend. Relevant net assets are all the assets and liabilities held by the NHS body, with the exceptions of donated assets, assets provided by Government grant and cash held in paymaster accounts. The legislation currently before Parliament requires that the Public Dividend Capital dividend payment required from foundation trusts would be calculated on the same basis as that for NHS trusts.

Foundation Trusts (Assets)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the criteria which he intends to apply when deciding the value of the asset base and the charge on assets for foundation trusts will be the same for private finance initiative hospitals and other hospitals. [132145]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 14 October 2003]: All national health service bodies are at present required to earn an annual return of 3.5 per cent. of their average relevant net assets held during the year. This charge is paid by NHS trusts as Public Dividend Capital (PDC) dividend. The assets of NHS foundation trusts will be valued on the same basis as those of NHS trusts at present, using the current cost accounting base.

The cost of capital charged on NHS foundation trusts' asset base in 2004–05 will also be calculated on the same basis as for NHS trusts at present. Clause 13(4) of the Health and Social Care (Community Health and Standards) Bill will require that the PDC dividend payment required from foundation trusts would be calculated on the same basis as that for NHS trusts. Details of the criteria are available in the "NHS Capital Accounting Manual", which is obtainable from the Department's website at www.doh.gov.uk.

GP Contract

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the implementation of the new general practitioner contract. [132351]

Mr. Hutton: The Government remain committed to the implementation of the new practice-based general medical services contract by April 2004, as set out in contract document "Investing in General Practice", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Home Improvements (Waiting Times)

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of waiting times for (a) stairlifts and (b) downstairs extensions and modifications when people have been assessed as unable to climb stairs or to use standard toilet or washing facilities; and if he will make a statement. [133484]

Phil Hope: I have been asked to reply.

Housing adaptations for disabled people such as stair lifts, level access showers and downstairs extensions can be grant aided under the disabled facilities grant programme. This is a mandatory grant available to eligible applicants in order to help them to continue to live independently in their own homes. It is funded by the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister and administered through local authorities.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's budget for this grant has been increased substantially to £100 million for this year. However demand for the grant remains high and waiting lists do occur. Local authorities are required to respond to any full application for a disabled facilities grant within six months.

The Government do not collect information on the length of any waiting lists. However jointly with the Department of Health we have issued draft guidance to local authorities setting out best practice in delivering this service. This includes target times for the complete delivery process including needs assessment, processing of the application and the completion of building works. These target times will depend on the complexity of, and priority attached to, individual cases but the guidance suggests that the maximum target time for the entire process should in any event be no more than 260 working days and only 80 working days in high priority cases. We are currently considering responses to this consultation and hope to issue final guidance to local housing and social service authorities before the end of this year.

Hospital Subsidies

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the criteria he will use in exercising his discretion over subsidies to hospitals will be the same for foundation and non-foundation trusts. [132146]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 14 October 2003]: To the extent that any public funds are made available for any central initiative from the Department (for example, implementation of national service framework initiatives) national health service foundation trusts should have access to an equitable proportion of those funds, whatever the actual source.

This is why we are taking powers, under Section 11 of the Health and Social Care (Community Health and Standards) Bill, to ensure that the Secretary of State is able to make loans, issue Public Dividend Capital or grants when providing financial assistance to NHS foundation trusts. These powers mirror the equivalent legislative provisions applying to NHS trusts.

Influenza Vaccinations

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures the Department is taking to encourage older people to get immunised against influenza. [133213]

Miss Melanie Johnson: We launched a campaign on 1 October incorporating a number of strategies aimed at encouraging older people to receive their influenza immunisation. The campaign incorporates:

National television advertising.

Advertising in national and regional newspapers and magazines, including ethnic media.

Advertising in buses, on pharmacy bags and online.

Work with commercial partners, such as Gala Bingo and voluntary organisations such as Heart UK and the National Asthma Campaign.

The Chief Medical Officer wrote to all general practitioners with details of this year's influenza programme in his letter of 6 August 2003.

Mrs. Dean: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what impact the new guidelines issued by his Department on eligibility for protective injections against influenza will have on those with (a) asthma and (b) other medical respiratory conditions. [133091]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The guidelines on eligibility for influenza vaccination has remained unchanged since its introduction in 2000–01. Those with asthma and other chronic respiratory disease should therefore continue to receive their free flu vaccination, as they have in previous years.

Living Wills

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what responsibility (a) primary care trusts and (b) hospital trusts have to check whether patients have signed living wills; what the procedure is for carrying out such checks; what guidance he gives on recognition of such documents; and if he will make a statement. [134047]

Ms Rosie Winterton: It is a general principle of law and medical practice that a person with the necessary capacity has the right to consent to or refuse treatment. A healthcare professional will therefore discuss with a patient possible treatment options. This would, where it is appropriate and as a matter of good practice, include how a patient would like to be treated if he or she were to become incapacitated.

There are no formal procedures for checking whether a patient has made a "living will". But the process of obtaining consent should lead to a discussion of the subject where a patient's condition makes it appropriate.

Guidance on advance refusals is included in the Department of Health's ReferenceGuide to Consent for Examination or Treatment published in March 2001.

The draft Mental Incapacity Bill contains proposals for putting advance decisions to refuse treatment on a statutory footing.

Meat Inspections

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which (a) countries of the present European Union and (b) applicant countries allow meat inspection by the meat industry. [133119]

Miss Melanie Johnson: European Union legislation, that applies to all member states and will apply to applicant countries on their accession, requires meat inspection to be carried out by the official competent authorities. The legislation does not allow the meat industry to carry out meat inspection. However, the legislation does permit, in some circumstances, trained plant staff to assist with post-mortem inspection of poultry and rabbits, but only under the direct supervision of the official veterinarian. This system of inspection is currently in place in a number of United Kingdom poultry plants.

Information about the extent to which the meat industry in other member states makes use of this provision and the current situation in applicant countries is not available.

Medical Equipment

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer of 2 October 2003, reference 130874, on training of nurses, what monitoring arrangements his Department has in place to ensure that NHS trusts follow the guidelines in "Working Together—Learning Together", on training for using existing and new medical equipment; and if he will make a statement. [132509]

Mr. Hutton: Strategic health authorities are responsible for performance managing national health service trusts on the basis of local accountability agreements. They will ensure that NHS Trusts implement the lifelong learning framework targets, as set out in "Working Together—Learning Together", by monitoring progress through their mainstream performance management processes.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer of 2 October 2003, ref 130877, regarding re-use of single use medical equipment, if he will set out the results of the previous research; and what action was taken in response to its findings. [132217]

Mr. Hutton: The Patients Association, in collaboration with the Infection Control Nurses Association, the Institute of Sterile Services Management and the National Association of Theatre Nurses, reported from a survey in 2000 ("Hospital Acquired Infection and the Reuse of Medical Devices: The Patient's Association") that ten per cent. of responding hospitals were re-using single use devices. The Medical Devices Agency issued a revised Bulletin in August 2000 ("Single-use Medical Devices: Implications and Consequences of Reuse") and further guidance was issued by the Department in circular HSC 2000/32 "The Decontamination of Medical Devices".

Midwifery

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people (a) began studying as a midwife and (b) completed their studies as a midwife, broken down by region, in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; and what proportion of those successfully completing their studies went on (i) to register and (ii) to practise as a midwife in the NHS. [133168]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 20 October 2003]: Information on the number of people entering training to become a midwife by strategic health authority in 2002–03 and by regional office area between 1996–97 and 2001–02 has been placed in the Library. Information by region is not available centrally before 1996–97. Information on the number of midwives completing their studies is not collected centrally.

Information from the Nursing and Midwifery Council on midwives on the register and intending to practise is available from the website www.nmc-uk.orq.uk. Information on midwives going on to practise in the national health service after completing training is not collected centrally.

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what targets he has set relating to (a) the recruitment of midwives into the NHS and (b) the overall numbers of midwives employed within the NHS; [133169]

(2) how many midwives worked in the national health service, expressed as (a) a headcount and (b) whole time equivalent, in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available. [133170]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 20 October 2003]: Information on the number of midwives employed in the national health service is shown in the table. The Government expects to see an extra 2,000 midwives employed in the NHS by 2006, over a 2,000 baseline. As at September 2002, there were 23,249 midwives, an increase of 680 since 2000.

NHS Hospital and Community Health Services (HCHS): Registered midwives in England as at 30 September each year

	Whole-time equivalent	Numbers (headcount)
1992	20,345	24,092
1993	19,629	23,443
1994	19,337	23,103
1995	18,034	22,022
1996	18,262	22,595
1997	18,053	22,385
1998	18,168	22,841
1999	17,876	22,799
2000	17,662	22,572
2001	18,048	23,075
2002	18,119	23,249

Notes:
1. Figures are rounded to the nearest whole number.
2. A new system of occupation coding for NHS non-medical staff was introduced in 1995. The new codes classify staff according to what they do rather than the terms and conditions under which they are employed ie national payscales. Figures based on new occupation codes are not directly comparable with those based on the old payscale classification.
3. Therefore figures since 1995 are not comparable with earlier years.

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the total cost to public funds of supporting student midwives was in the last year for which figures are available; and how many student midwives were supported. [133326]

Mr. Hutton: National health service-funded student midwives are eligible for financial support under the terms of the NHS bursary scheme. The total value of bursary payments made to midwifery students for the academic year 2002–03 was £14.8 million, with 3,164 students being in receipt of a bursary. All NHS-funded students also have their liability for a tuition fee contribution (worth up to £1,100 for the academic year 2002–03) met on their behalf, without means testing.

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when ministers or officials last examined financial support arrangements for student midwives; what principle decisions were made; and what plans there are to re-examine support arrangements. [133327]

Mr. Hutton: The Department undertook a comprehensive review of all national health service-funded student support arrangements during 2000–01 and a number of options for change were considered. It was decided to retain the existing overall format of the NHS package, but to provide a range of other improvements targeted at specific areas of need. NHS bursary rates across all the professions are considered each year and have been uplifted annually since 1998, including an increase of 10.4 per cent, (well ahead of inflation) in 2001. My ministerial colleagues and I continue to keep NHS-funded student support arrangements under review in order to ensure they continue to meet our objectives for the service.

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make an assessment of staffing levels in NHS maternity units, with particular reference to the number of midwives. [133633]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 21 October 2003]: The Government are committed to nationally increasing the number of midwives. By 2006, we expect there to be 2,000 more midwives being employed in the national health service than in 2000. Since September 2000, the number of midwives employed in the NHS has increased by 680 to 23,249. Information on the number of midwives by NHS maternity unit is not collected centrally.

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent assessment he has made of the number of places available for those wishing to study to become a midwife. [133634]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 21 October]: The Government are increasing the number of training places for midwives as part of the NHS Plan commitment for an extra 5,500 nurses and midwives entering training by 2004, over a 1999 baseline. In 2002–03, 1,445 students started training for a first qualification to become a midwife, an increase of 42 per cent., since 1999–2000. A further 677 started post-registration courses to become a midwife. Latest figures from workforce development confederations suggest a further overall increase of over 100 in the current financial year. Further increases in the future to improve midwifery services and to achieve the NHS Plan target.

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the level of financial support available for those wishing to study to become a midwife. [133635]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 21 October 2003]: The Department of Health undertook a comprehensive review of all national health service-funded student support arrangements during 2000–01, and a number of options for change were considered. It was decided to retain the existing overall format of the NHS package, but provide a range of other improvements targetted at specific areas of need. NHS Bursary rates across all the professions are considered each year and have been uplifted annually since 1998, including an increase of 10.4 per cent., (well ahead of inflation) in 2001.

NHS Direct

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many calls received by each NHS Direct centre in the latest month for which figures are available concerned access to an NHS dentist; and what percentage of total calls in each case this figure represents. [131448]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The information is not centrally collected in the form requested. The number of clinical calls relating to dentistry by call centre is shown in the table.

In addition, NHS Direct will have dealt with a number of health information calls to do with dentistry but these calls are not separately currently identified.

NHS Overseas Treatment

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer of 19 May, Official Report, column 615W, on NHS treatment abroad, whether his Department has considered its position on the European Court of Justice judgment published on 13 May in case C385/99 Muller-Faure/Van Riet; and if he will make a statement. [129673]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 17 September 2003]: On 1 October 2003, the High Court gave judgment in the case of Watts v. Bedford Primary Care Trust and the Secretary of State for Health. In that case, judgment was reserved explicitly in order that account could be taken by the judge of the European Court of Justice ruling in case C385/99 Muller-Faure/van Riet, which was central to the issues involved in Watts. The Department has been given permission to appeal in Watts and is currently considering whether to proceed.

Public Health Legislation

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to reform public health legislation; and if he will make a statement. [133393]

Miss Melanie Johnson: We announced in "Getting Ahead of the Curve", the strategy for health protection published by the Chief Medical Officer in January 2002, that we intend to carry out a review of the infectious disease law. As stated in the answer of 6 October 2003,

Official Report, column 1333W, no specific timetable has been set for the review, but we intend that it should take account of the new emergency powers which it is planned to provide through the Civil Contingencies Bill.

Stroke

Mr. Baron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of stroke patients he estimates will be able to be treated in specialist stroke units for the majority of their hospital stay from April 2004. [133011]

Dr. Ladyman: Stroke is one of the condition specific standards (Standard 5) incorporated into the national service framework for older people. The target is that, by April 2004, 100 per cent. of all general hospitals which care for people with stroke will have a specialised stroke service, as described in the stroke service model and that all people who are thought to have had a stroke will have access to diagnostic services and access to specialist stroke services as appropriate.

Waiting Times

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in Hull and the East Riding waited 13 weeks or more for an out-patient appointment in (a) 2002 and (b) 2003. [132393]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested is shown in the table.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 411

SESSION 2002–2003

14th October—23rd October 2003

Printed indexes to Hansard

The volume index is one of three printed indexes to Commons Hansard produced from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Indexing Service (POLIS). It contains references to material in the bound volumes of Hansard. The other indexes produced are:

- The fortnightly index to Hansard. This covers the same date range as the volume index but references are to the column numbering in the daily parts and weekly edition of Hansard.
- The sessional index to Hansard. This contains references to material in the bound volumes for a whole session.

Indexes on the Parliamentary website

Fortnightly, volume and sessional indexes covering material from the beginning of the 1999/2000 session will also appear on the Parliamentary website at http://www.parliament.uk with links to the full text of Hansard.

SCOPE

The indexes include entries covering:

- The content of all material recorded in Hansard, including debates, procedural motions and questions.
- The names of all Members contributing to the Parliamentary business recorded in Hansard.
- The names of some types of Parliamentary business whenever they occur in Hansard. These are 'Ministerial statements', 'Business statements', 'Opposition days' and 'Estimates days'.

ARRANGEMENT

- All headings are in one word-by-word alphabetical sequence, with Members' contribution entries distinguished from other entries by italics.
- Where a Member contributes to Parliamentary business and is the subject of Parliamentary business there are separate contribution and subject entries, the subject entry coming first.
- Entries beginning 'Mac' and 'Mc' are sorted in one sequence as 'Mac'.
- 'St', when abbreviated for Saint, is filed as 'Saint'.
- Numbers are filed as if spelt out, e.g. '10 Downing Street' as if 'Ten Downing Street'.

HEADINGS

Choice of headings

- Specificity—Entries summarise the overall content of a debate or question as specifically as the various POLIS thesauruses allow. For example, Education, Higher education, Universities or the name of a particular university is used depending on the breadth of the item.
- Name headings—Specific entries are included for the names of people, places, institutions, organisations, committees, programmes, initiatives, publications and legislation when these constitute the overall subject of an item.
- Organisations and subjects—Organisation entries are preferred for material about the general performance, administration and staffing of an organisation (for example, United Kingdom Passports Agency, Standards). Subject entries are preferred for what organisations do as part of their duties (for example, Passports, Fees and charges).

Geographical coverage

- Subject headings—Subject headings are assumed to refer to the whole of England, Great Britain or the United Kingdom unless otherwise stated.
- Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales—Material relating to the whole of Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales is indexed under these headings.
- Places within the UK—Material about specific towns, areas and institutions is entered under the name of the specific town, area or institution.
- Foreign countries—Most material relating to foreign countries is collected under the name of that country. Some additional material may be found under the names of—groups of countries, areas within countries, geographical features, place names associated with particular issues, politicians and heads of state, international bodies, and institutions and companies operating in those countries.
- EC/EU material—General material about the European Communities and European institutions as bodies is entered under 'European Communities' and 'EC institutions'. Organisational material about specific communities and institutions is entered under the name of the body, for example 'European Coal and Steel Community' or 'European Parliament'. Material about what the Communities and institutions are doing or propose to do is entered under various subject headings beginning 'EC' such as 'EC environmental policy'.

Parliamentary material and business

- Material about Parliament—This is indexed under 'Parliament', the names of the two Houses, the 'Palace of Westminster' and parts of the Parliamentary estate (such as 'Portcullis House').
- Committees—Material about committees is indexed under 'Committees', types of committee (such as 'Select committees') and the names of individual committees (such as 'Home Affairs Select Committee').
- Parliamentary proceedings/procedures—Material discussing these is indexed under the specific type of proceeding (such as 'Parliamentary questions' or 'Oral questions'), procedure (such as 'Calling of Members') or issue (such as 'Unparliamentary expressions').
- Legislation—Entries for Parliamentary proceedings on bills and statutory instruments are entered under their titles. Where the lead word of the bill or statutory instrument does not provide a full or clear indication of the subject there are additional subject entries when the bill or instrument is debated. For example, debates on the 'Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill' have entries under 'Pensions' and 'Social security benefits' as well as under the title of the Bill.
- Members' names—These are given in the form by which the Member prefers to be known.
- Speaker and Chair—Contributions by the Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker and deputies'. Contributions from the chair during Committees of the Whole House are brought together under 'Chairman of Committee of the Whole House'. Significant rulings and statements (as opposed to routine comments) are indicated by the sub-heading 'Rulings and statements' in both cases.

Guidance on headings

- Cross references—'See' references indicate all the material has been entered under another heading. 'See also' references indicate that additional information may be found under another heading.
- Concept thesaurus—A copy of the subject thesaurus to POLIS, listing the concept entries used in the index, is available on the Parliamentary website. A hard copy is available from the Head of the POLIS Unit, House of Commons Library, 1 Derby Gate, London, SW1A 2DG (020 7219 6456).

REFERENCES

- References in the indexes are to columns rather than pages.
- References to debates, but not questions, are accompanied by the date of the item.
- There are separate sequences in Hansard for the material taken on the floor of the House, Westminster Hall sittings and written questions:
  - References consisting of a number by itself indicate material taken on the floor of the House.
  - References ending in 'wh' indicate Westminster Hall sittings.
  - References ending in 'ws' indicate written statements.
  - References ending in 'w' indicate written questions.
- References under all headings except the names of Members contributing to Parliamentary business and the titles of legislation are listed in one numerical sequence irrespective of whether the material is taken on the floor of the House, is discussed at a Westminster Hall sitting, is a written statement or is a written question.
- References under the names of Members contributing to Parliamentary business and the titles of legislation are listed in numerical sequence under the following headings:
  - Chamber Debates (which includes interventions and points of order as well as significant contributions to debates);
  - Debates Westminster Hall Debates (covering all debates held as part of the Westminster Hall sittings); and
  - Written Statements (consisting of ministerial statements issued in writing); and
  - Questions (which includes all written, oral and private notice questions).

ABBREVIATIONS

The following abbreviations are used in connection with the progress of bills:

- 1R=First reading
- 2R=Second reading
- Com=Committee stage
- Rep=Report stage
- 3R=Third reading
- res=resolution
- amendt(s)=amendment(s)
- *=matter taken formally without debate or division
- (HL)=Bill starting in House of Lords
- (SP)=Bill in Scottish Parliament.

Parliamentary background

- The Parliamentary website at http://www.parliament.uk contains a range of information about Parliament and the full text of some Parliamentary papers and proceedings including Hansard.
- Information on current Parliamentary business is provided in the House of Commons Information Office Weekly Information Bulletin, available on the website and from The Stationery Office (020 7873 8499).
- Further information on Parliamentary proceedings and procedures is available from the House of Commons Information Office (020 7219 4272).
